OUR CLOAK ROOM.

The crowning point of everything that is New, Brilliant and Attractive will be Our Cloak Room. We will open in a few days a full line of ladies' children's New Markets, Circulars, Jackets, Paletots, Sealskins, &c. and an assortment of Plain and Beaded Jerseys. Many of these goods are direct importations from Europe. No lady should fail to examine and price these goods. All are invited to call and we will make it profitable to you to buy OUR GOODS in preference to worthless and shelve worn goods as are now offered and sold in so many stores. This has been the great bane of the Dry Goods trade, and the only way to remedy this evil is by only patronising stores where such goods are not kept and offered for sale, and we can proudly say

SUCH a STORE is OURS.

CALIFORNIA LETTER.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL. Sept. 8, 1884.

To the Editors of the Recorder:

Early on the morning of August 21st, a party of 21, including the writer, assembled at Mantou, Col., for the purpose of ascending Pike's Peak. After some time spent in securing horses, lunch, overcoats and other things necessary for the journey of 12 miles that lay before (and above) us, we began the ascent precisely at 7½ o'clock, accompanied by a trustworthy and experienced guide.

On the particular morning, threatening clouds overhung the mountain, at the same time auguring ill for those who would attempt the ascent, and wholly obscuring our vision of the barren old Peak; yet, our party nothing daunted by the unfavorable appearance of the Heavens, resolved to proceed "onward and upward" to the summit where it was promised a mansion (?) had been prepared for the reception of visitors.

The most casual observer might have read upon every countenance that memorable motto which first found utterance from the hardy pioneers of '49: "Bound for Pike's Peak or bust."

Our party was composed of a young married couple on their bridal tour, a vender of morphine and quinine from Hartford, Conn.; a young man from Kansas, whose grand-father had died and left him a considerable fortune, upon the income from which he had lived in affluence until recently, when his fortune took a "through car" to Wall Str., New York, leaving its former possessor "without change" at the starting point in life. The young man claimed this as his "last piece of extravagance" before beginning life in earnest.

Then there was a giddy, giggling young woman from—we know not where, yet will testify under oath that she was in the party. Next in egotism and emptyheadness was a young man who had recently graduated from college in Michigan, which latter fact he wished everyone to know, thereby subjecting himself to the necessity of frequently repeating the information, without which not the shadow of a suspicion would have crossed our minds that he ever saw inside a college. There was also a middle aged man, as bold and venturesome as Don Quixote, and notwithstanding he had never before ascended the Peak, nothing short of leading the party up the narrow and crooked way would enable him to die happy. Our guide, realizing the fact, surrendered his position to the ambitious man, and sent him on his way rejoicing. Similar complimentary remarks might be made of others, but the above suffices to show a few of the idiosyncracies of pleasure seekers, and how human nature reveals itself on such occasions.

As already intimated, the trail leading to the summit is very narrow, and tortuous, so that we were compelled to ride single file and not faster than a walk, thus affording ample opportunity and time for a view of the scenery along the route. The first four miles of the journey led us obliquely up the side of one of the many smaller mountains adjacent to the Peak. Both above and below us, for many hundred feet on either side, the mountains are decorated with a beautiful dense growth of evergreens, and flowers rarely seen except in mountainous districts. Above the timber line and interspersed throughout the forest region, on the one side, are massive overhanging rocks—grim, silent witnesses of the mighty convulsions that once shook the earth to its very center; on the other hand, from far down in the gorge, comes the almost deafening sound made by the dashing, foaming waters of the mountain stream, now concealing itself beneath some huge stone that bridges the chasm, a moment later, leaping out from its safe retreat and bounding away with renewed force and energy, like some wild animal that, resting from the chase, had been suddenly surprised by his pursuers. Over precipices and through narrow gorges it takes it way, forming almost innumerable picturesque waterfalls, presenting to the eye new and varied scenes at each step.

As you proceed, the trail and stream approach each other until finally you cross and recross the stream several times, thus getting a better view of the diminutive Niagaras than any the positions would afford.

Four miles, the truly senic portion of the journey now lay behind us. Here, at the Four Mile House, we stopped for a short rest, then again pursued the "narrow way," bidding adieu to the mountain torrent, and passing for several miles across the most sublime portion of the route, with fewer smaller and less beautiful trees than we were seen previous to this time. The trees continue to diminish in size, number and beauty as the area covered by sand and rocks increases in extent, until the former entirely disappears at that altitude above which timber can not grow. In the upper timber region the dead trunks of fallen trees from five to fifteen inches in diameter, are lapped promiscuously across each other in many places to the depth of several feet; the timber standing in that region being for the most part of recent growth.

When four miles from the summit, we again halted to give a moments rest to our weary bodies. Such exclamations as, I never was so tired before in my life; I wonder how much further it is? I shall die before we get there, &c., were made by different members of the party, more especially by the female portion. For our part, we felt like quoting that significant expression made by Mark Twain while ascending the Peak before the trail was completed: "O, for some kind friend to kick me up another hill!"

This expression, although not over elegant, would have been appropriate to the occasion; however, our own personal regard restrained us, lest some one should volunteer his services. Without this much felt want being supplied, we rode leisurely on, soon reaching the region of perpetual snow, where the bleak winds of winter blow from December till June, and from June till December again, making a full round year without spring, summer or autumn. Yet, peeping from the crevices of the rocks or modestly lifting their tiny heads in some protected spot, were seen in this otherwise desolate barren region, thousands of buttercups, mountain daisies and snowplants of the most delicate tints, spreading their sweet perfume in all directions throughout this world of their own, above the clouds. Journeying on through this region, over rocks, along the margins of snow banks, with the wintry blast blowing full in our faces, we reached our destination at 12:30 p. m., after a tiresome, weary ride of 5 hours. The shouts that went up from our party and reverberated from peak to peak in undying echoes, when the summit was reached, were never before equaled, save by the joyous shouts of Columbus and his party, when sight of the New World greeted their anxious eyes.

Once on the summit we rode immediately to the small stone stable and dismounting, left our horses in care of the guide. Walking to the Signal Service station and reception rooms, another small one story stone building composed of three rooms, here we warmed our benumbed hands and feet, ate our lunch, and then with field glass in hand, walked out in front of the building to view the surrounding country. Looking out upon the great round world from this elevation of 17,337 feet, many new and marvelous scenes met our wondering eyes. Below us, hovering over the valleys and plains, we beheld the scattered clouds which before starting on our journey were far above us. Overhead, the blue canopy of heaven, viewed through the rarefied atmosphere, appeared grander than ever before. Looking off to the northeast 80 miles, we could clearly discern the city of Denver spread over an immense area around the headwaters of the Platte; to the southeast 60 milds on the banks of the Arkansas, the old Mexican town of Pueblo stood out in full view, at the base of the Peak on the east, nestling in the valley and surrounded on all sides by mountains, is the beautiful little village and summer resort of Mantou; farther out upon the plains is the quiet town of Colorado Springs. Lifting our eyes still higher, we obtained a view of Eastern Colorado and much of Western Kansas and Nebraska to the distance of 200 miles from where we stood; turning and looking toward the west and southwest we observed ranges of mountains 150 miles distant, which were apparently but an hour's journey from us. Standing here suspended, as it appears, between earth and Heaven, you are lost in wonder and amazement; you are impressed with the awfulness, the sublimety, the majesty of Him Whose very presence is felt; whose image is reflected from all the scenes about you and the work of Whose Divine hand may be directed alike in the rugged stupendous mountains and the green, gentle undulating valleys and plains that stretch away beyond the line of human vision, alike in the picturesque mountain torrent and the placed stream of a more subdued region. The summit of Pike's Peak is truly an admirable place for the study of nature and her Creator.

After spending about one and one-half hours here, we began the descent, which required less time but was more tiresome than the ascent. Clara Belle once said after having ridden a horse that trotted very roughly, "the milk I drank for breakfast was churned to butter." The churning process to which we were subjected in making the descent must have effected a similar change in our poor stomachs. However, we reached our starting point in safety, and willingly paid our $6 each for toll and the use of the horses, vowing at the same time, that $60 would not induce us to make the same journey again the next day, so overcome were we with fatigue. Yet, we would say to everyone who has the opportunity, do not fail to visit Pike's Peak. 'Tis a trip you will never regret, for your mind will be filled with scenes elevating and ennobling, that will fade from memory only when the "last of earth fades from view. J. C. CLORE.

The Cincinnati Price Current estimates the total corn crop this year at 1,810,000,000 bushels, the largest crop ever raised, and 17 per cent. better than last year's crop. Kentucky will fall short of last year 15 per cent.

We saw John William Gaines last Tuesday. He was but a few days from Kansas where he, Geo. C. Voshell and Irwin Balsly bought a section of land in Harper county, adjoining John Wesley Rice's farm. They consider Kansas the Promised Land as far as the mundane sphere is concerned.

It was a fine shower we had yesterday, but it will take several such to make fall pastures.

EDUCATIONAL.

[Communications for this column must be addressed to Prof. T. H. Stephenson, Burlington, Kentucky.]

In the present issue of the RECORDER the editors have opened a column devoted to educational interests. The teachers and all others interested in education, are invited to contribute whatever they may think will assist in rendering this column useful or instructive. It is not to the teachers alone, but to the people generally that this column is opened. They certainly have greater interests involved and should feel a deeper solicitude than the teachers themselves in everything designed to promote the welfare of schools. The teachers must do the work of instructing, but the parents are responsible for the moral and intellectual training of their children. They feel a just pride in and are truly honored by the noble lives of their children, while their recklessness and profligacy are generally, to them, a just reproach. The parents who train, educate and send out into the world a family of high moral and intellectual culture, to wield an influence for good, bequeathe to it a blessing, compared with which, the highest gifts of genius are of inferior value. Parents who would do the greatest possible good for their generation should carefully train and educate their children. Those who send from their homes a moral lepers to smirch the characters and poison the morals of those with whom they associate, are guilty of an offense against society, so grave in its nature that it may justly be called a crime. The providing of food, raiment and shelter, and sending to school are not the whole of parental duty, and do not entirely absolve from responsibility in the evil career of children. There is a story of a young man, who, fleeing from the officers of justice, came hastily into a garden where his father was pruning his trees, and pointing to one tied to a stake, asked why he had done it, and received tho answer that it was done to make it grow straight. He then reproved his father for having bestowed care and attention upon the tree that he had never given his own child, drew a pistol, slew his father and then terminated his own guilty and wrecked life. If the virtues of parents were always reproduced in their children, the carelessness in training of exemplary parents might be excused; but since such a father as the wise and just Adrain has had such a son as Nero, and Trajan such as Caligula, it is well to keep the fact in view.

A NEW METHOD OF TEACHING READING.—The new method of teaching children to read without first having taught them their letters looks, in education, about like walking backward would look in pedestrianism. There is in every study a natural order of parts—a logical sequence of subjects, which must be observed, or the difficulty in progressing will be increased. While it is true that we read from the form of words rather than from a scrutiny of each letter forming the word, yet there are very many words so similar in form that mistakes are sure to be made unless, in these cases, attention is paid to the individual letters. In addition to this, spelling must be learned and the simple nature of it seems to suggest its adaptation to the early career of the pupil. The practice of teaching children their letters and immediately afterward of teaching them to read, is probably little less objectionable than the above method. Pupils become familiar with a book after having gone through it once in their plodding way. In a second perusal they read from memory rather than from sight, and hence are but little benefited by it. They are not yet prepared to pass to the book next in order of the series. Now, either the series must be changed, letting pupils read in the same number of a different series, or continue in the book with which they are sufficiently familiar to repeat it from memory, or they must be permitted to pass to the next higher of the series, which is too difficult for them to comprehend. This latter alternative, the worst of the three, is the one generally adopted. No one can read well what he does not understand; yet, nothing is more frequently heard in our schools than the blundering of pupils through reading lessons that they do not understand, and which, to them, is but a mummery of words. If pupils were first taught to spell well, so that they knew a word not only from the form, but also from the spelling, progress in reading would be rendered much easier and more rapid. Half the practice would not then be necessary to teach pupils to pronounce a word correctly fromsight, that is necessary when they have no previous knowledge of spelling.

One of the prisoners who was confined with James Monroe, who was released from jail a few days since, says Monroe wanted to commit suicide, and had requested several persons who had come to the door to bring him some laudanum, and failing to get the laudanum, he pulverized an old ink bottle and swallowed the glass with some water. He did that a few days before his sentence expired, but it seemed to have no effect.

Next Saturday at 2 o'clock p. m., a meeting will be held in the town hall at Union for the purpose of organizing a Detective Association, the object of which association will be to raise funds with which to capture and bring to justice horse thieves and other out-laws. A large attendance is solicited, as it is the desire to organize a permanent association, that will protect the honest citizens from the depredations of the thieves that are prowling about the country.

Geo. Hughes was the only person in town last Friday that noticed the earthquake, and when he came out of his office and asked if anybody felt it, he was laughed at. At Mrs. Dempsey's near town and at Henry Clore's down on Middle Creek, persons in the house were considerably alarmed. Clore lives in a substantial log house which was made shake and crack as though about to be tumbled down. In several localities in the county the shock was felt.

The colored population had a picnic at Viola Park last Saturday. At night the dancing was continued at a house in town. Everything proceeded quietly until about 9 o'clock when fighting whisky got control of some of the men, and an eruption came, and for some time the ball room and premises were a pandemonium. Knives were flourished, and profanity floated through the air undisturbed for a considerable time, but quite was finally restored and the dance continued till 2 o'clock. No material for a corone's inquest was furnished.

We call the attention of the readers to the advertisement of Messrs. Heyn & Bro. of Rising Sun, Indiana. From personal observation and experience we are convinced that this firm carries the most complete stock of goods in Southeastern Indiana, besides selling away below city prices. Unlike many other firms they do not advertise onething and mean another, but they can be relied upon as acting upon their word. The country would be much better off if all our business houses would act upon this principle. In this connection we will say that such a store is and should be patronized by the public. We will mention but one solid fact in regard to their ready-made clothing. There are too many would-be clothiers in this country, but those are "few and far between" that can furnish a garment fit to be worn by a gentleman wishing to dress modern and respectably. A word to the wise is sufficient.

Married.

At the residence of the bride's parents near Visalia, Kenton county, on the 18th inst., Mr. John Steers and Miss Laura Mitchell, formerly of this county. Rev. Nelson officiated. The attendants were Mr. Scott Underhill, uncle, and Miss Belle Mitchell, cousin, of the bride.

The bride shown resplendent in her costume of silk ornamented with natural and wax flowers, while the groom presented a handsome appearance in his suit of conventional black. The house was crowded with friends and relatives to witness the ceremony, after which a sumptuous wedding supper was partaken of by the guests. The very high esteem in which the parties were held by their numerous friends was fully attested by the large number of handsome, costly and useful bridal presents which they received.

Rabbit Hash.

Say, you Rising Sunners, hadn't you better move your town over on this side of the river. There is room and to spare on the Kentucky shore. Come over.

Considerable excitement was occasioned on our streets last Sunday, by a man from Aurora capturing, at this place his wife who was eloping with another fellow. He and a friend pursued them in a skiff to this place, where he overhauled them, and after chastizing the wife-stealer, he got in the skiff with them and, with a pistol in hand he headed the craft for Aurora, making "the other fellow" propel the skiff under threat of being shot if he did not hasten back to that city.

A few years ago the Government expended a very large sum of money attempting to improve the Ohio river at this place by building a large dike just above the head of the bar to force the water to the Indiana side for the purpose of deepening the channel which, during low water, becomes so shallow as to obstruct navigation. Time has proven that the work did, accomplish nothing, and the Government now has a large force of men engaged removing the end of the dike next the Kentucky shore intending to turn the current to this side of the river, which, if successful, will render Rising Sun an inland town during low water. Of course the citizens of that town do not want to see the river taken from them in that manner.

Florence.

Mr. Editors; my wife clipped my last week's article from the paper, and says she intends to insert it in her crazy-quilt. I put in my remonstrance to that kind of proceedings, told her the article was all right; that it attracted more attention in that shape; that advertisements were frequently printed upside down, diagonally, perpendicular and sometimes in the form of a puzzle, &c., just to draw the notice; but this kind of explanation don't seem to work right. She insisted that I must have been drunk or crazy at that particular time of writing; says when the hears that piece read it sounds like playing "The Arkansas Traveler" with the variations. I tried to lay it on the proprietors of the paper; told her that in view of the vote to be taken on "Local Option" in November, the editors had taken on a supply and were a "little off." She replied that "Local Option" was in view in Florence district and perhaps some one else had taken "time by the forelock." So, Mr. Editors, you will have to come to my relief or there will be a rupture in the family. [Local option or no local option, it looks like somebody's hands through which the article passed was badly off, but as no body but a printer is capable of dishing up news in that interesting style, we claim the credit, and derive cousolation in finding it all "thar," although in crazy-quilt style—Eds.]

A couple of native Egyptians (christians and exiles) with letters of recommendations, reached here Saturday night without any means. They visited Father Burke who kindly interceded in their behalf, and sent them to a hotel to be entertained; but they were turned away with the pretense that the house was full of boarders. The boys make up money, too, but with all our boasted hotel accommodations, our travelers had to sleep in a stable.

O. H. Conrad, mail contractor, is out with an elegant new bus, built by Bradford Bros., of Florence, which is a creditable affair to our traveling community.

Mr. J. Z. Tanner fell from a scaffold at the new building of W. C. Tanner, this place, on Saturday afternoon and was severely bruised.

Mr. W. Y. Crigler and wife, our former merchant, but now of Carlisle, Ky., paid us a flying visit a few days ago.

GAS OMETER.

Bellevue.

Mrs. Cy Kelly and children are visiting in Ghent.

John Deck shipped 100 nests of baskets to the city last week.

Mr. Len Clore has erected a large barn on the Grant farm below town.

Rev. Houston, of Cincinnati, preached in the Reform church here last Sunday.

The apple crop which was so promising is falling badly and will leave a short one for winter use.

But little fall seeding has been done yet, and what has been sown was after a summer crop, the ground being too dry and hard to break sod.

About one-half of our town is drawing its supply of water from the river, while those back in the country are taking their supply from the creek. Some of our citizens are too dry to talk about a driven well.

James Conner has shipped about 500 fine stock hogs from here to Bates county, Missouri, where they are to be fed for market. Last Friday he received and weighed 60 fat cattle here, the heaviest one of which weighed 1,900 pounds.

Last week we saw Samuel Moyer deliver a load of corn in Burlington for which he said he received 80 cents per bushel. When corn and wheat sell for the same price per bushel, who will say it does not pay to feed wheat to hogs? Several fields of wheat in this section were fed to hogs.

Thousands of black birds pass over the town every morning and evening going to and from their roost in the willows on the river bank opposite here. Our young nimrods are thus afforded a fine field for wing shooting, which they are not slow to improve, and many of the birds are brought down.

A few days since a corps of government engineers made a survey of the river from the head of the island to the reef opposite Bellevue. It is supposed that the government has in view the turning of both channels into one, which would make navigation here less hazardous and more speedy than now.

This part of the county is passing through one of the severest droughts ever experienced here. On the afternoon of June 13th, nearly 1½ inches of rain fell in this immediate vicinity, overflowing the Middle creek bottoms, since which time not to exceed 1¾ inches has fallen here, and the fine growing season up to the last of June, gave way to a disastrous drought that materially injured the late summer and fall crops. Wheat, rye, oats and grass made a fine crop, but corn, potatoes, sorghum, tobacco and fruit will range from a full crop in an occasional field down to small stunted stalks in others. Fields of corn that promised 80 bushels to the acre two months ago will not produce half of that. We have seen some fields in the bottom that will not make more than 6 or 8 bushels to the acre. Much of the tobacco had to be cut partly green to save it from burning up—but few crops have been cut fully ripened. We have seen several fields of good tobacco in our neighborhood, but where we see one good one we see five poor ones. Most of the crop is now housed.

THE MINISTRY OF FLOWERS.

Sore sick was I,
My heart was heavy with anxious dread,
Despondent were my spirits, and my head
Was aching wearily—so wearily—
I longed to die.

I longed to die,
And be raised from this relentless pain,
Which so disturbed my rest and racked my brain,
Me thought to live were loss, to die were gain,
No hope had I.

The weary hours
Pass'd by unheeded; I had bravely tried
To win back hope, but 'twas to me denied,
Until one day I found placed by my side
A bunch of flowers.

And then hope came,
Usher'd by recollections of the time
When I such flowers had gathered, in a clime
Far distant. Once again the village chime
Made glad my frame.

I'd roamed away,
But backward flew my mem'ry bright and clear
To the spot where I was nurtured; friends most dear
Seem'd pointing to, in words of loving cheer,
A brighter day.

In fancy bright
I seem'd a child again, and hand in hand
With other joyous elves, a merry band,
I wandered through the meadows broad and grand,
With spirits light.

By shady tree
We lingered, and by side of babbling brook,
Gathering sweet flowers from many a hidden nook,
Laughing until the trees with laughter shook,
In boyish glee.

And when at length
The vision passed, my weary heart no more
Was bow'd with dark despair, as it had been before.
My soul had drank from those sweet flowers a store
Of hope and strength

Oh, beauteous flowers!
Sweet harbingers of joy sent from above,
What can like you our nobler natures move,
Or so invest with hope and peace and love,
Life's dreariest hours?

A TASTE OF HONEY.

The long, low, red-painted cottage was raised above the level of the street on an embankment separated into two terraces. Steep stone steps led up the terraces. They were covered with green slimy moss, and little ferns and weeds sprung out of every crack. A walk of flat slate-stone steps led from them to the front door, which was painted green, sagged on its hinges, and had a brass knocker on it.

The whole yard and the double banks were covered with a tall waving crop of red timothy and herds-grass and red and white clover. It was in the height of haying-time.

A grassy wheel track led round the side of the house to a barn dashed with streaks of red paint.

Off to the left stretched some waving pasture-land, a garden patch marked by bean poles and glancing corn blades, and a long row of bee-hives showing in the midst of it.

A rusty open buggy and a lop-eared white horse stood in the drive opposite the side door of the house.

An elderly woman with a green cotton umbrella over her head sat in the buggy placidly waiting. She had on a flattish black straw bonnet with purple strings, and wore a dull green silk shawl sprinkled with little bright palm leaves over her broad shoulders.

She had a large, smiling face, crinkly gray hair, and quite a thick white beard cropped close on her double chin.

The side door stood open, and a young woman kept coming out, bringing pails and round wooden boxes, which she stowed away in the buggy, in back and under the seat. She was a little round shouldered, her face with its thick, dull-colored complexion was like her mother's, just as pleasant and smiling, only a suggestion of shrewd sense about it which the older woman did not have.

When the pails and boxes were all in the buggy, she locked the door, got in herself, and drove carefully out of the yard.

The road along which they proceeded lay between waving grain fields. The air was full of the rattle of mowing-machines this morning; nearly every field had its broad furrows where they had passed.

The old white horse jogged slowly along; the two women sat behind him in silence, the older one gazing about her with placid interest, the younger one apparently absorbed in her own thoughts. She was calculating how much her butter and eggs and berries would bring in Bolton, the large market town toward which they were traveling.

Every week Inez Morse and her mother drove there to sell the product of their little farm. Her father had died three years before; ever since, the daughter had carried on the farm, hiring very little help. There was a six-hundred dollar mortgage on it, which she was trying to pay up. It was slow work, though they saved every penny they could, and denied themselves even the fruit of their own land.

Inez had a mild joke about the honey her bees made. She and her mother scarcely tasted it; it all went to the Bolton markets.

"I tell you what 'tis, mother," Inez used to say, "the day the mortgage is paid off we'll have warm biscuit and honey for supper."

Whenever her mother looked wistfully at the delicacies which they could not keep for their own enjoyment, Inez would tell her to never mind by and by they would eat their own honey. The remark grew into a sort of household proverb for them.

The mother felt their privations much more keenly than the daughter. She was one of those women for whom these simple animal pleasures form a great part of life. She had not much resource in her mind. The payment of the mortgage did not afford her the keen delight in anticipation that it did Inez; she was hardly capable of it, though she would be pleased enough when the time came. Now she thought more about eating the honey. However, she had never grumbled at any of her daughter's management. In her opinion, Inez always did about right.

When they reached Bolton, Inez drove about the village from house to house, selling her wares at the doors, while her mother sat in the buggy and held the horse. She had a good many regular customers, her goods were always excellent, and gave satisfaction, though she had the name of being a trifle exacting in her bargains, and asking as much as she possibly could.

To-day one of her customers in making change did not give her enough by a cent. Inez, when she discovered it, drove back a quarter of a mile to have the error rectified.

The woman looked amused and a trifle contemptuous when she asked her for the missing penny. Inez saw it. "You think it is queer that I came back for one cent," said she, with slow dignity, "but cents are my dollars."

"Yes, I suppose so," assented the woman, hastily, changing her expression.

Inez, driving through Bolton streets, looked at the girls of her own age who she met in their pretty street suits in grave feminine admiration. She had never had anything but the very barest necessaries in the way of clothes herself. Lately a vain desire had crept into her heart for a bright ribbon bow to wear at the throat, as some of those girls did. She never dreamed of gratifying the desire, but it remained. She thought of it so much that, before she knew, she mentioned it to her mother on their way home.

"Mother," said she, "a red ribbon bow with long ends like those girls wore would be pretty for me, wouldn't it?"

Her mother stared at her in amazement. It did not sound like Inez. "Real pretty, child," said she. "I'd hev one ef I was you; you're young, an' you want sech things. I hed 'em when was a girl."

"Oh, no, mother," cried Inez, hastily. "Of course I never thought of such a thing really. I only spoke of it. We've got to wait till the mortgage is paid to eat our honey, you know."

That evening, after the mother and daughter had eaten their supper, and were sitting in the kitchen in the twilight, there came a knock at the door. Inez answered it. Willy Linfield stood there.

"How do you do, Willy?" said she.

"Pretty well, thanky, Inez."

Then there was a pause. Inez stood looking gravely at the young man. She wondered what he wanted and why he did not tell his errand.

"Nice evening," said he, finally.

"Beautiful."

Then there was another pause. The young fellow stood on one foot, then on the other, and got red in the face.

Inez could not imagine why he did not tell her what he wanted. At last she grew desperate.

"Did your mother want to buy some eggs, Willy?" she asked.

"No-o," he faltered, looking rather taken aback. "I don't—she does—leastways she didn't say anything about it."

"Was it butter, then?"

"No—I guess not. I rather think she's got plenty."

Inez stared at him in growing amazement—what did he want?

He was a fair-complexioned young man, and he looked as if the blood was fairly bursting through his face.

"Good-night, Inez," said he, finally.

"Good night, Willy," she responded. Then he walked off.

Inez went into the kitchen, entirely mystified. She told her mother about it. "What do you suppose he wanted?" asked she.

Mrs. Morse was an obtuse women, but Inez's father had come courting her in by-gone days. She caught the clew to the mystery quicker than her daughter.

"Why, I guess he come to see you, Inez, most likely."

"Come to see me! Why, what for?"

"Why, 'cause he wanted to. Why does any feller go to see a girl?"

It was Inez's turn to color then. "I never thought of such a thing as that," said she. "I don't believe it, mother."

"He did, sure's preachin'."

"I never thought of asking him to come in. I guess you are mistaken, mother. Nobody ever came to see me so."

Inez kept thinking about it uneasily. It was a new uneasiness for her.

The next day she met Willy Linfield in the village store. She stepped up to him at once.

"Willy," said she, "I didn't ask you to come in last night, and I thought, p'rhape, afterward, I'd ought to. I never thought of your wanting to come in. I supposed you'd come on an errand."

The young fellow had looked stiff and offended when she first approached him, but it was impossible to doubt her honest apology.

"Well, I kinder thought of making a little call on you, Inez," he owned, coloring.

"I'm very sorry, then; but no young man ever came to see me before, and I never thought of such a thing."

She looked into his face pleasantly. He gained courage. "Say, Inez," said he, "the bell-ringers are going to perform in the hall to-morrow night. Wouldn't you like to go with me?"

"Yes, I'd like to. Thank you Willy."

Inez was not easily perturbed, but she went home now in a flutter. Such a thing as this had never happened to her before. Young men had never shown much partiality for her. Now she was exceedingly pleased. She had never realized that she cared, because she had not had the experiences of other girls; but now her girlish instincts awoke. She really had a good deal of her mother's simplicity about her, though it was redeemed by native shrewdness.

Now she began to revolve in her mind again the project of the red ribbon. She did want it so much, but she felt as if it was such a dreadful extravagance. At last she decided to get it. She actually looked pale and scared when she stood at the counter in the little millinery shop buying it.

She went home with it feeling a guilty delight, and showed it to her mother, and told her of Willy Linfield's invitation. She had not before. This was on the afternoon of the concert day.

"My!" said her mother, elated, "you've got a beau, Inez, as sure as preachin', an' the red ribbon's beautiful."

Inez could not rid herself of the guilty feeling, however. She gave her mother a piece of honey-comb for her supper. "It ain't fair for me to be buying ribbon out of the mortgage money, and mother have nothing," said she to herself. "So she must have the honey, and that makes two things out."

But when Inez, with the crisp red bow at her throat, followed her escort awkwardly through the lighted hall, and sat by his side listening to the crystal notes of the bell-ringers, the worry about the ribbon and the weight of the mortgage seemed to slip for a moment from her young, bowed shoulders. She hardly thought of them, only to look at some other girl with ribbons, and to be glad that she had one, too. She was making a grasp for a few minutes at the girlhood she had never had.

The concert was Wednesday. Saturday, she and her mother drove to Bolton to sell their butter and eggs again. When they got home, Inez opened the parlor, which was never used, and swept and dusted it. It was a grand apartment to her and her mother. It had never been opened since her father's funeral. When she first unclosed the door to-day she seemed to see the long coffin in the middle of the floor, where it had rested then.

She shuddered a little. "Folks that have had troubles do see coffins afterward, even when they're happy, I suppose," muttered she to herself.

Then she went to work. There was a large mahogany bureau in one corner of the room; some flag-bottomed chairs stood stiffly around; there was an old-fashioned card-table, with Mrs. Hemans' poems and the best lamp on a bead lamp mat on it, between two front windows. A narrow gilt-framed looking-glass hung over it.

Mrs. Morse heard Inez at work, and came in. "What air you doin' on, Inez?" she asked, in wonder.

"I just thought I'd slick up here a little. Willy Linfield said—he might—drop in awhile Sunday night." Inez did not look at her mother. Somehow she felt more ashamed before her than she would have before a smarter woman.

"My sakes, Inez, you don't say so! You hev got a beau as sure as preachin'. Your father kept right on reg lar, after we once set up of a Sunday night. You'll have to put a new wick in that lamp, Inez."

"I'll see to it, mother," replied Inez, shortly. She was delighted herself, but she felt angry with her mother for showing so much elation; it seemed to cheapen her happiness.

Sunday, Inez went with her mother to church in the morning and afternoon. She went to Sabbath-school after the morning service, too. She was in a class of girls of her own age. She had never felt, someway, as if she was in the least one of their kind. She never had the things they had, or did anything which they were accustomed to do. To-day she looked at them with a feeling of kinship. She was a girl, too. Three or four of them had lovers. Inez eyed them, and thought how she had one too, and he was coming to-night as well as theirs.

She had work to do Sundays as well as week-days. There were cows to milk and hens to feed. But she changed her dress after supper, and put on the new red ribbon bow. She picked a little nosegay of cinnamon roses out in the front yard (there were a few of these little dwarf roses half buried in the tall grass there) and arranged them in an old wine-glass on the parlor mantel. When she heard Willy's feet on the slate walk and his knock on the front door, her heart beat as it never had be ore.

"There's your beau, Inez!" cried her mother, "he's come!"

Inez was terribly afraid Willy would hear what her mother said: the windows were all open. She went to the door trembling, and asked him into the garnished parlor.

Mrs. Morse staid out in the kitchen. The twilight deepened. She could hear the soft hum of voices in the parlor.

"Inez is in there courtin'," said she. "Her father an' me used to court, but it's all over. There's something queer about everything."

Willy Linfield came many a Sunday night after that. It got to be said all around that Willy Linfield was "going" with Inez Morse. Folks wondered why he fancied her. He was a pretty, rather dandified young fellow, and Inez was so plain in her ways. She looked ten years older than he, though she was about the same age.

One Monday afternoon she told her mother that Willy the night before had asked her to marry him. The two women sat at the kitchen window resting. They had been washing, and were just through. The kitchen floor was freshly scoured; everything looked damp and clean.

"You don't say so, Inez!" cried her mother, admiringly. "What did you tell him? Of course you'll have him; he's a real nice feller: an' I don't believe you'll ever get anybody else."

"I told him I'd have him if he'd wait three years for me to pay off the mortgage," replied Inez, quietly.

"Did he say he would?"

"Yes."

"It's a long time for a feller to wait," said her mother, shaking her head dubiously. "I'm afear'd you'll lose him, Inez."

"Then I'll lose him," said Inez. "I'm going to pay off that mortgage before I marry any man. Mother, look here," she went on, with a passion which was totally foreign to her, and showed how deeply she felt about the matter. "You know a little how I feel about that mortgage. It ain't like any common mortgage. You know how father felt about it."

"Yes, I know, Inez," said her mother, with a sob.

"Many's the time," Inez went on, "that father he talked about it to me over in the field there. He'd been trying all his life to get this place clear; he'd worked like a dog, we all worked and went without. But to save his life he couldn't pay it up within six hundred dollars. When the Doctor told him he couldn't live many months longer, he fretted and fretted over it to me. I guess he always talked more about his troubles to me, mother, than he did to you."

"I guess he did, Inez."

"Finally I told him one day—it was when he was able to be about, just before he gave up: I was out in the garden picking peas, and he was there with his cane. 'Inez,' says he, 'I've been workin' ever since I was a young man to do it.' 'Father,' says I, 'don't you worry. I'll pay up that mortgage.' 'You can't, Inez,' says he. 'Yes, I will,' says I; 'I promise you, father.' It seemed to cheer him up. He didn't fret so much about it to me afterward, but he kept asking me if I thought I really could. I always said 'Yes.'

"Now, mother, if I marry Willy now, nobody knows what's going to be to hinder my keeping my promise to father. Willy ain't got anything laid up, and he ain't very strong. Besides, he's got his sister and mother to do for. Hattie's just beginning to help herself a little, but she can't do much for her mother yet. Mrs. Linfield ain't able to work, and Willy's got to look out for her. Then I've got you. And there might be more still to do for in the course of two or three years: nobody knows. If I marry Willy now, I shall never pay off that mortgage that I promised poor father I would, and I ain't going to do it. It'll take just three years to pay it every cent; and then I'll marry him, if he's willing to wait. If the mortgage was just for me, I wouldn't care, though I don't think it would be very wise, anyway. But it's for father."

Mrs. Morse was crying. "I know you're just right about the mortgage, Inez," she sobbed, "but you'll lose your beau as sure as preach'n'."

Nevertheless, it seemed for a long time as if she would not. Willy kept faithful. He was a good sort of young fellow, and very fond of Inez, though he hardly entered into her feelings about the mortgage. There was at times a perfect agony of pity in her heart over her father. It made no difference to her that all his earthly troubles were over for him now. When she thought over how he had toiled and worried and denied himself for the sake of owning their little farm clear, and then had to die without seeing it accomplished, it seemed as if she could not bear it. The pitiful spectacle of her poor dull father working all his life for such a small aim in such small ways in vain haunted her.

During the next three years she strained every nerve. She denied herself even more than she had formerly. Sometimes she used to think her clothes were hardly fit for her to appear in beside Willy, he always looked so nice. But she thought he knew why she dressed so poorly, and would not mind. "It brings the time when we can eat our honey nearer," she said.

Willy was faithful for a long time; but the last six months of the third year he began to drop off a little. Once in awhile he would miss a Sunday night. Inez fretted over it a little; but she did not really think of doubting him, he had been constant to her so long. Besides there was only one more payment to be made on the mortgage, and she was so jubilant over that that she was hopeful about everything else.

Still, it was not with an altogether light heart that she went to the lawyer's office one afternoon and made the last payment: she was not as happy as she had anticipated. Willy had not been near her for three weeks now. She had not seen him even in church.

Still, she went straight to his house from the lawyer's office: that had been the old laughing bargain between them. She was to go and tell him the good news, then he was to go home with her, and help eat the festive supper of biscuit and honey.

She walked right in at the side door and entered the sitting-room. She was familiar with the place. In the sitting-room sat Willy's mother and sister. They both started when they saw her.

"Oh, mother, here she is!" cried Hattie, without speaking to Inez.

Inez's heart heart sank, but she tried to speak naturally.

"Where's Willy?" asked she. "He's home from the shop, ain't he? I've made the last payment on the mortgage, and I've come to tell him."

The mother and daughter made no reply, but gazed at each other in silent distress.

"Oh, Inez!" cried Hattie at length, as if she had nothing else to say. "Come into the parlor a minute with me, Inez," she added, after a little.

Inez followed her trembling.

Hattie shut the door, and threw her arms around Inez. "Oh, Inez," she cried again, and began weeping; "I don't know how to tell you. Willy has treated you awfully mean. We've all talked to him, but it didn't do any good. Oh, Inez, I can't tell you! He's—gone over to West Dorset this afternoon—to get married! Oh, Inez!"

"Who is he going to marry?"

"Her name's Tower—Mamie Tower. Oh, Inez, we're so awful sorry! He hasn't known her long. We never dreamed of such a thing."

"Never mind," said Inez, quietly. "Don't take on so, Hattie. Perhaps it's all for the best."

"Why, don't you care, Inez?"

There was a pitiful calm on Inez's dull face. "There's no use fretting over what can't be helped," said she. "I don't think Willy has acted bad. I made him wait a long time."

"That was the trouble, Inez."

"I couldn't help it. I should do it over again."

Inez took it so calmly that the other girl brightened. She had felt frightened and distressed over this, but she had not a very deep nature.

"Inez," said she, hesitatingly, when she made a motion to go, "they've got a room fixed upstairs, you know; would you like to see it? It looks real pretty."

Inez shuddered. This final stab served to pierce the deepest, though she knew the girl meant all right.

"No, thank you, Hattie, I won't stop."

Inez was thankful when she got out in the air. She felt a little faint. She had to walk a mile before she reached home. Once she stopped and rested, sitting on a stone beside the road. She looked wearily around at the familiar landscape.

"The mortgage is paid," said she, "but I'll never eat my honey."

Her mother was watching for her at the kitchen window for her when she entered the yard.

"Is it paid, Inez?" asked she, eagerly, when the door opened.

"Every cent, mother," replied the daughter, kissing her—something she seldom did; she was not given to caresses.

"Where's your beau?" was the next question. "I thought you was going to bring him home."

"He ain't coming, mother. He's gone over to West Dorset to get married."

"Inez Morse, you don't mean to say so! You don't mean you've really lost your beau? Wa'al, I told you you would."

Mrs. Morse sat down and began to cry.

Inez had taken her things off, and now she was getting out the moulding-board and some flour.

"What air you doin' on, Inez?"

"I'm making the warm biscuit for supper, mother, to eat with the honey."

"You ain't goin' to make warm biscuit when you've lost your beau?"

"I don't see why that need to cheat us out of our supper we've talked about all these years."

"I do declar', I don't believe you mind it a bit," said the poor simple mother, her sorrow for her daughter lighting up a little.

"I don't care so much but what I've got enough comfort left to live on, mother."

"Wa'al, I'm glad you kin look at it so, Inez; but you air a queer girl."

The biscuit were as light as puffs. Inez's face was as cheerful as usual when she and her mother sat down at the little table, with the biscuit and golden honey-comb in a clear glass dish between them. The mother looked placidly happy. She was delighted that Inez could "take it so."

But when she saw her help herself to the biscuit and honey, she said again: "You air a queer girl, Inez. I know the mortgage is paid, an' I only wish your poor father knew, an' here we sit eatin' the warm biscuit and honey. But I should think losing your beau would take all the sweetness out of the honey."

The pleasant patience in Inez's face was more pathetic than tears. "I guess there's a good many folks find it the same way with their honey is this world," said she. "To-morrow, if it's pleasant, we'll drive to Bolton, and get you a new dress, mother."—Mary E. Wilkins' in Harper's Bazar.

Breakfast Drinks.

Coffee stands first in the list of beverages for the breakfast table, though for nervous people or those who are afflicted with palpitation of the heart it is not to be recommended. To make it to perfection one requires a coffee pot with a double base. A French filter pot is the best. Never boil it if you wish to preserve the aroma. Buy two-thirds Java and one-third Mocha; the first is required for strength, the latter for flavor. I prefer to have coffee roasted at the grocer's, as inexperienced hands are liable to leave a few berries in that have been scorched, giving it a bitter taste. But we grind our own coffee, and that only the moment before pouring on the boiling water. Allow two heaping tablespoonfuls of ground coffee to a pint of water. Cover tightly after pouring on the boiling water; let it boil half a minute and set back to settle. In this way coffee will be clear without the aid of eggs or shells. If it is not possible to procure cream always boil the milk and use loaf sugar.

Tea needs, first of all, the help of a "cozy" to make it in perfection. A "cozy" is a wadded cover made to fit the teapot. It is generally shaped in two half circles, stitched around, wadded, lined and corded. It can be made very ornamental by braiding or crewel work. Tea requires water freshly boiled, and should not be made to stand on the hob and stew before using, and it should never be boiled. Allow a teaspoonful heaped for each person. After pouring on the water let it for one moment stand near the fire, then place directly under the "cozy" before calling the family to the table. In this way the tea preserves all its delicate aroma.

If any reader has not tried tea "a la Russe," it is quite a revelation. It is to place a piece of peeled, well-sugared lemon at the bottom of each cup before pouring over it the tea, hot and strong. Iced tea can be served in the same way.

Chocolate must be scraped and soaked in milk for an hour before using, to free it from lumps. Allow two sticks to a pint of milk, which must be boiled and sweetened. Make the soaked chocolate into a fine paste, stir in the milk; let it boil half a minute. Serve hot, as when only lukewarm it becomes flat.

The best breakfast beverage of all is cocoa, which, being more oily and nutritious, is strongly recommended for those who have weak lungs. It is made in the same way as chocolate, only a little vanilla is often added as a flavoring, which takes off the over-rich taste. A nice addition to either chocolate or cocoa is a heaping tablespoonful of whipped cream placed on the top of each cup. This, too, must be lightly flavored with vanilla.

Cafe au lait is a common beverage among French people. It is made with a quart of clear, strained coffee, a quart of boiling milk, sugar to the taste whipped up with the whites of three or four eggs. Rinse the coffeepot with hot water and pour in the coffee and milk alternately. Cover closely for three or four minutes. Put a spoonful of the whipped and sweetened white of egg in each cup.—Annie L. Jack, in Philadelphia Call.

Apples For Milch Cows.

Why is it that one farmer believes apples to be very beneficial to milch cows, while another will not only be quite positive that they are of no benefit, but a positive injury? Is it because they have not had any experience? certainly not, for we know of farmers who thus differ who have had many years' experience, and while one has abandoned feeding apples to his cows, the other is careful to save all of his second quality of apples to feed to his cattle.

The fact is there is a right and a wrong way, as well as a right and wrong time to feed apples to milch cows and there is another important fact, which is, there is a great difference in orchards; one orchard may produce only Roxbury russet apples, while another may produce early Sweet Boughs, early Williams, Porters, Gravenstein and other summer and fall apples. While it might not injure a cow to give her two pecks of ripe early Sweet Boughs the first time feeding apples, it would not do to give her two pecks of green russet apples when first commencing feeding. When cows are first fed on apples only small quantities should be fed, gradually increasing until they are given from a peck to two pecks per day, according to size and condition of the cow.

In feeding apples it should ever be kept in mind that the nutriment in a green apple is very small indeed, when compared with that of ripe apples, and it should also be kept in mind that when a cow begins to eat apples, she may be greatly injured by eating a quantity, that when she becomes accustomed to eating them, would be a great benefit. Sour apples that are so green that they will rot before they will mellow, are as a rule, not fit to feed out to milch cows; but apples that are sweet, or sour apples that are ripe enough to mellow, are very beneficial to not only milch cows, but to pigs and even horses.

Most of apples that ripen in the autumn may be fed out and made to pay as much per bushel as small potatoes, when fed uncooked, but the winter apples are not fit to feed out until cold weather, when they begin to ripen; then they are valuable, and should not be permitted to be lost. The first of the winter fruit that drops is not worth saving, but when the apples are nearly grown, if gathered up and stored in a cool place, they will ripen so as to make both a healthy and nutritious food for cattle.—Massachusetts Ploughman.

Fresh Meat for Fowls.

While nobody of very great experience in caring for poultry will pretend that furnishing them with more or less meat in some form is not essential to their good condition to aid in the production of eggs, the question with many is, "When and what kind of meat shall we procure to supply the needs of our fowls." We reply that the thing is more attainable than at first view appears possible. In the first place, far more scraps of meat might be made available in every household than all are aware of. Any bits of dry or forgotten relics of roasts or broils, or soups, may be carefully cut into bits and served in small quantities every day to your flock. The avidity with which these are devoured invite to new efforts to supply their wants; and by consulting your butcher, you will find the livers, lungs and hearts of the creatures killed in the shambles will often be sold at extremely low rates, and after being boiled, furnish a rich and exhilirating repast to your fowls. A sheep's head, though formidable in appearance and clumsy to handle, is the next best thing, and when it is chopped in fine pieces with a dull axe and packed into a large dinner pot and boiled till the meat and brains drop from the bones, you will be astonished, not only at the great amount of rich food thus obtained, but at the greediness which your flock manifest to dispose of it. An occasional meal of this meat, that is, a meal which allows every hen at least three or four lumps of meat the size of a hazel-nut—tell in favor of thrift. We are often asked whether spoiled or tainted meat may be fed to fowls with impunity. We say yes, "provided it is well-cooked. It seems to be followed with no ill results generally. The hen is not a cleanly feeder, anyhow. She revels in a steaming dung-hill. Even if fed exclusively on the cleanest, nicest provender, the contents of her gizzard are always offensive to the smell when dissected immediately after death. Yet perfectly fresh, sweet meat is to be preferred.—Poultry Yard.

Old-Time Punishment at King's College

"A Book of Misdemeanors, alias Black Book," which is now preserved in the library of the college, purports to have been commenced in January, 1771, and ends April 24, 1775. From this it is evident that the pranks of our progenitors were wonderfully like our own. The following extracts will suffice:

"February, 1771.—S— reprimanded publicly for having come through a hole in the College Fence at twelve o'clock at night."

"July 9, 1772.—V—, D— and N—, who had gone over the College Fence the previous Tuesday, between the hours of three and four p. m., to bathe, were reprimanded, confined to College until Saturday, and each directed to translate into Latin four pages of Dr. Chandler's Charity Sermon."

"December 23, 1774.—W—, for not performing his exercise the last Vacation, as ordered by ye preceding visitation, to finish that, and also to translate half of the eighth Æneid of Virgil into English by ye first day of next term."—John MacMullen, in Harper's Magazine.

A Gentle Hint.

They had been sitting about twelve feet apart all the evening, discussing accidents and what treatment was best in cases of drowning, burns, fits, cuts, etc. He is one of St. Paul's most popular young physicians, and rejoiced at this opportunity to air his knowledge to the charmer who had made such an inroad into his affections. Looking at him archly she said:

"George, if I should start to fall to the floor in a faint, what would you do?"

"I should spring forward and catch you," he replied.

She sighed, and said:

"Don't you think you would have to spring awful fast or that I would have to fall very slow if you got here from away over there in time to save me?"

He took the hint and moved up, and all the rest of the evening they sat so close together that his clove-tainted and her caramel-flecked breath mingled in aromatic confusion.—St. Paul Herald.

What Forty Females Did.

It was a cold day at the beach. Forty female forms reclined listlessly along the broad piazzas of the Hardstuck House, but not a man was seen. Suddenly the girl with the telescope at the end of the piazza uttered a shriek.

"Oh, girls—quick—here comes one."

There was a sudden and general uprising, and the f. f. f.'s lined themselves behind the telescope and craned their necks in an eager gaze. Yes, sure enough, the stage was coming, and in it a men's hat was unmistakably apparent. The stage drew nearer—the crowd collected; it stopped—a rush was made.

* * * *

Tenderly they collected the remains—the dude collar, the derby once so gay, the poor broken eyeglass and cane—and bore them within the darkened room, but there was weeping and wailing at the Hardstuck House that night.—Boston Globe.

—Whitney Creek, one of the tributaries of Kern River, California, has a species of trout that is found in no other body of water. The only notable point about them is the beautiful color which flakes their sides, as purely golden as if they had been submitted to a coating of gold oil. This peculiarity of color and their distinct species is preserved by a natural barrier existing between them and the other varieties which are found in this creek. A series of high and rocky falls prevent other fish from ascending and mingling with them, and so, from generation to generation, they have thus by a natural barrier, been able to preserve their distinct character.—San Francisco Chronicle.

—Only a few years since fifteen days and $116 were required to go from Boston to Baltimore. It now takes fourteen hours and $10.—Boston Journal.

NO EFFORT has ever been made to advertise Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound outside our own America; yet frequent calls from other parts of the world show that good news will spread. Packages of this medicine have even been sent from Lynn, Mass., to China.

LIFE is short—only four letters in it. Three-quarters of it is a "lie" and a half of it is an "if." Put this on "file" if you would as "lief."—Chicago Tribune.

MR. CHEATEM—Mr. Jinks, why don't you sell this Hippopotamus Axle Grease instead of the Fraser?

MR. JINKS—Because our customers ask for the Fraser.

MR. CHEATEM—I'd have you know that one box of the Fraser costs as nearly as much as two boxes of the Hippopotamus—while we sell them at the same price.

MR. JINKS—Put one box of the Fraser will last as long as three boxes of the other.

MR. CHEATEM—That's just it—by selling this Grease you not only make twice as much profit, but they have to buy three boxes of it when they would only have to buy one of the Fraser Grease.

Remarkable Recovery

Of a Lady of Millville, N. J., Who was Pronounced Beyond Hope of Recovery—How it was Accomplished.

Mrs. S. C. Dougherty says: "I had been a sufferer from Dyspepsia from the time I was sixteen years old. I had consulted various physicians and been under their treatment during most of the time, but finding no relief, had given up in despair of ever having my health restored. A friend recommended Dr. DAVID KENNEDY'S FAVORITE REMEDY, which I tried, and have been cured. It's the best medicine I ever knew of, and worthy of the greatest confidence."

The above is but one of the hundred facts which prove that Dr. DAVID KENNEDY'S FAVORITE REMEDY is without an equal as a cure for diseases peculiar to females. But, if the reader desires more evidence, read the following proof from Mrs. Carrie Key, the wife of Sergeant Key, Co. C, 3d N. J. Reg., who says under date of March 1, 1884:

"Two years ago my husband came home in the spring from Virginia, where he had been in charge of a schooner. He was taken down with Malarial fever. We were both sick with it. After consulting our family physician and finding no permanent relief we tried your FAVORITE REMEDY, and I can say that it completely cured us of malaria, and is the best medicine of its kind I ever heard of.

Dr. KENNEDY'S FAVORITE REMEDY is a positive cure for all diseases of the Blood, and habitual Constipation. As proof of it E. J. Sears, of Vineland, says, under date of March 2d: "I have used Dr. KENNEDY'S FAVORITE REMEDY and I am willing to acknowledge it the best medicine in the world for the bowels I ever used, and FAVORITE REMEDY is a most excellent preparation for the Blood." These are facts which can but convince the most skeptical that Dr. DAVID KENNEDY'S FAVORITE REMEDY is an honest preparation which no family should be without. It is the result of the scientific knowledge of medicine attained only by the years of experience of an educated physician. It is a positive cure for Malaria, Kidney and Liver Diseases, and all diseases peculiar to females. Price $1 per bottle.

Words of Warning and Comfort.

"If you are suffering from poor health or languishing on a bed of sickness, take cheer if you are simply ailing or if you feel 'weak and dispirited,' without clearly knowing why, Hop Bitters will surely cure you.

If you are a minister, and have overtaxed yourself with your pastoral duties, or a mother, worn out with care and work, or a man of business or labor, weakened by the strain of your everyday duties or a man of letters toiling over your midnight work, Hop Bitters will most surely strengthen you.

If you are suffering from over-eating or drinking, any indiscretion or dissipation, or are young and growing too fast, as is often the case,

"Or if you are in the workshop, on the farm, at the desk, anywhere, and feel that your system needs cleansing, toning, or stimulating, without intoxicating, if you are old, blood thin and impure, pulse feeble, nerves unsteady, faculties waning, Hop Bitters is what you need to give you new life, health and vigor."

If you are costive, or dyspeptic or suffering from any other of the numerous diseases of the stomach or bowels, it is your own fault if you remain ill. If you are wasting away with any form of Kidney disease, stop tempting death this moment, and turn for a—cure to Hop Bitters.

If you are sick with that terrible sickness, Nervousness, you will find a "Balm in Gilead" in Hop Bitters.

—If you are a frequenter, or a resident of, —a miasmatic district, barricade your system against the scourge of all countries —Malaria, Epidemic, Bilious and Intermittent Fevers by the use of Hop Bitters.

If you have rough, pimply, or sallow skin, bad breath, Hop Bitters will give you fair skin, rich blood, the sweetest breath and health. $500 will be paid for a case they will not cure or help.

A Lady's Wish.

"Oh, how I do wish my skin was as clear and soft as yours," said a lady to her friend. "You can easily make it so," answered the friend. "How?" inquired the first lady. "By using Hop Bitters that makes pure, rich blood and blooming health. It did it for me, as you observe."

It has the appearance of first class rubber, whiter and much more solid, but possesses all the ductility and elasticity of the former, with the advantage of superior durability.

STORM-STRUCK.

A Tornado Plays Sad Havoc With a Pennsylvania Village.

Houses Scattered to the Four Winds, but No One Seriously Injured.

BRADFORD, PENN., September 28.—A terrific cyclone passed over the neighborhood of the village of Alton, fifteen miles south of Bradford, at five o'clock this afternoon. A wagon bridge across a small stream was lifted from its foundation and landed several rods away. Phillips Brothers' feed store was the first building to encounter the furry of the hurricane. It was literally scattered to the four winds of heaven, not a timber being left to mark the spot where it stood. It contained a stock of flour and feed valued at several hundred dollars, not a trace of which can be found. The new Methodist Church in process of construction was carried up in the air, and portions of the roof afterward found half a mile away. Michael Hendrihen's wooden residence, near the depot of the Erie Railroad, was completely wrecked. It was blown from its foundation and landed on its side, two rods away' Mr. Handrihan and family, consisting of himself, wife and four children, were found in the ruins, greatly frightened, but fortunately not seriously injured, suffering only a few bad bruises. Adjoining stood the one-story frame residence of Mr. Daniel Sullivan, which was unroofed and the inmates more or less injured. Mrs. Sullivan was struck down by flying timber, and her little daughter was also cut in the head by a piece of board. Patrick Murphy's house was also carried away bodily, except the floor. On it, covered with debris, were found Mr. and Mrs. Murphy and their four children. They had just sat down to supper when the wind struck them. The house was torn into a thousand pieces and the furniture carried off into space. The inmates escaped by a miracle. Mrs. Murphy was stripped nearly naked, her clothing being torn into tatters by the violence of the cyclone. A vacant house belonging to the railroad company was demolished, if anything, more completely than Murphy's. Not a vestige of it remains. The duration of the cyclone was about three minutes. It is scarcely probable that serious damage was caused in neighboring towns, as the village of Alton is on top of the mountain and more exposed to the fury of the element.

The Swine Plague.

WASHINGTON, September 27.—At the urgent request of citizens of this city, as well as many farmers of Maryland who have sustained heavy losses by the swine plague, General E. A. Carmen, Acting Commissioner of Agriculture, some days ago directed Dr. Rose, of the Bureau of Animal Industry, to visit three counties bordering on the Potomac and make a report of the result of his investigations to the department. The report of Dr. Rose has just been submitted. He says: "The results of my investigation lead me to believe that thousands of hogs have died within the past two or three months of swine plague in the territory embraced within the counties of Montgomery, Frederick and Washington, in Maryland, and in Jefferson and Loudon, in Virginia."

The Texas Lovers' Tragedy.

DALLAS, September 28.—Further investigation to identify the victims to love denied by unrelenting parents, shows that they hail from Ft. Worth, and that their visit to this city was to die together, as they could not be united in life. Miss Nannys' (not Manior) body was claimed by her brother this evening and taken to Ft. Worth. Feustrict was buried here. Later developments reveal the fact that Feustrict was a young officer in the German army, visiting America on a year's leave of absence. Faustriot and Miss Nannys had been stopping at an obscure hotel for several weeks. His parents in Germany refused to sanction their marriage. His leave of absence was about expiring, and they concluded to die rather than be seperated.

Khartoum.

LONDON, September 28.—The Times publishes telegrams via Kessala and Massowah, giving extracts from the diary of its Khartoum correspondent, Mr. Power, describing the siege of the latter place. From April 28th to July 31st there was daily fighting, which frequently was terrific. General Gordon's total loss during that time was 700 killed. The General despaired of receiving adequate relief. The negroes were the only troops who could be relied upon. On April 27th the enemy captured one of Gordon's armed steamers.

Money-Order Offices.

WASHINGTON, September 27.—Acting Postmaster General Hatton has issued an order that on and after October 1, all Post-offices of the first-class and their stations or branch offices shall be kept open to the public for the issue and payment of money-orders and for receipt of matter intended for registration and delivery of registered matter until 6 o'clock P. M. every day except Sundays and legal holidays.

Deaf Mutes Killed.

JACKSONVILLE, ILL., September 28.—The eight o'clock passenger train going west on the Wabash Road ran over two deaf and dumb boys on the track about a mile west of the depot here this morning. One of the boys was killed outright, and the other will die. The boys were about thirteen and fifteen years of age, one living in Summit and the other in Aurora, Ill. They were going to school here in the State Institution. The boys' names are John Weeks and Wm. Dalton. The engineer blew the whistle, supposing they would get off the track.

Great Sea of Icebergs.

ST. JOHN'S, N. F., September 27.—The steamer Bristol, from Montreal for Bristol, arrived here with her propeller broken, smashed by a collision with ice. She saw three hundred and seventy-five icebergs between Cape Freels and Cape Race. An average of fifteen icebergs pass St. John's daily, going south in the track of ocean steamers. A craft arriving at St. John's reports passing large quantities of wreckage on the coast of Labrador Thursday. Fierce hurricanes were experienced on the same date. The schooner Lizette was lost, but her crew saved. Heavy disasters from the north are anticipated.

The Spanish King.

LONDON, September 28.—The King of Spain is now generally believed to be stricken with an incurable disease. Among the combinations plotted by busy brains are the reinstatement of chaste Isabella, or the betrothal of Alfonso's daughter with the son of Don Carlos, and a regency till their marriage.

Fatal Railroad Collision.

DUNLAP, ILL., September 27.—A collision of freight trains on the Rock Island Railroad, near this place, wrecked a train and killed an engineer name Michael Radigan.

OVER THE OCEAN.

A Gathering of Students Dispersed and a Number Wounded—General Wolseley at Last Gets Started for Khartoum.

PARIS, September 27.—Le Paris states that the Government expects advices within a week that Admiral Courbet has occupied the fortified heights commanding Kelung, Island of Formosa. This will be considered as a guarantee of greater value than the money indemnity demanded, and will enable France to wait the fulfillment by China of the Tien Tsin treaty.

LONDON, September 27.—Many Chinese are massing at Lang Son, Caoabug and Laokai.

LONDON, September 27.—It is understood that General Lord Wolseley has positive orders from the War Office for General Gordon directing him to hasten the evacuation of Khartoum.

CAIRO, September 27.—General Lord Wolseley and staff have started on their expedition to Khartoum.

KIEF, September 27.—Students assembled in groups, notwithstanding prohibition. The military dispersed the gatherings. Numbers were wounded, and there were three hundred and forty arrests.

GOING TO A FIRE.

Collision of a Fire Chief's Buggy With a Babcock Engine—The Chief Seriously Injured.

CINCINNATI, September 28.—Going to a fire at 3:27 this morning Chief Bunker's buggy collided with the Babcock engine at Sixth and Vine streets. The Chief was going east on Sixth street, and the Babcocks south on Vine. Spectators on the corner saw that danger was threatened, and shouted to the full extent of their lungs to the last approaching objects. The Babcocks struck the Chief's carriage on the left fore wheel, breaking the axle, and hurling the Chief with terrible force to the street, where he struck upon the rough stones and was knocked senseless. In the collision the Chief had been thrown against some sharp projection, and the fleshy part of the arm was cut open and the blood was flowing in a stream. The force of the same collision had broken his arm and given him a severe internal shock. The Chief persisted that his injuries were of a most serious nature, and demanded to be taken to his family. He was, however, deemed in too serious a condition to move, nothwithstanding his apparent condition. At about fifteen minutes to 4 o'clock, he was overcome with a faint, and this led the physician to pronounce his injuries of a more serious nature than at first seemed. He said it was impossible to tell at that time how serious they were or might prove to be. When the collision became imminent Officers Gleason and Sewers were standing within call of the Chief, and cried to him, "For God's sake, stop!"

JOINED IN DEATH.

A Pair of Texas Lovers, Kept Apart in Life, Leave it Side by Side.

DALLAS, TEXAS, September 27.—A shocking double tragedy developed this afternoon by a discovery in the woods, just beyond the corporation limits, on the west fork of Trinity River. The victims, when first discovered, lay side by side, the man's arms extended and partly lying on that of his love, as if, in the agonies of death, he sought to embrace her in a convulsive grasp. She was apparently aged about eighteen, wore a diamond brooch, and was dressed with exquisite taste, which bore no outward evidence of poverty. He appeared a few years her senior. Between them lay a revolver with two chambers empty, telling the story of murder and suicide. Near by was found a note written in a clear, bold hand, saying: "As we can not be united in life, we will be in death. George Feustrick and Annie Manior." Appearances and examination of the bodies lead to the conclusion that the note was written before reaching the fatal scene, and that after the final leave-taking he fired the pistol in her mouth, thus killing her, placed the weapon to his right temple, and, again pulling the trigger, fell close beside her. Death was instantaneous with both. Beyond the names on the bit of paper nothing further is known which might give a clue to their identity. The bodies, still warm, were taken charge of by an undertaker, and will be held until a claimant appears.

Emigration to Liberia.

WASHINGTON, September 27.—William Coppinger, Consul General for Liberia and Secretary of the Colonization Society, is here. He says the applications received by the society from persons desiring to go to Liberia, are numbered by thousands; that the desire of colored men to remove to a country where they can be on an equality, in every sense, with the other inhabitants, is increasing. A colony of forty will be sent from here this fall. The total number of negroes, residents of America, who have emigrated to Liberia, is sixteen thousand. The larger proportion of the inhabitants of that Republic are healthy, contented and prosperous. Their beneficial influence upon the natives is very manifest.

A Warning to Fish-Eaters.

CHATTANOOGA, TENN., September 28.—A remarkable case, that is puzzling physicians, has developed here. Last Thursday Amanda Jackson purchased a mess of fish, of which she ate quite freely. Shortly afterward she was taken violently ill. Large lumps developed on her body, which were at first fiery red, then blue, and changing to black. She has recovered from her sickness, but her body is covered with red, blue and black spots. It is supposed the fish were poisoned by some unknown food, which had impregnated her system from eating them.

Large National Bank Note Receipts.

WASHINGTON, September 27.—The average daily receipts of National bank notes sent for redemption to the Treasury is about $400,000. To-day this amount was swollen to $707,000, which is about the largest amount ever received in one day. The National Bank of Commerce, New York, contributed $300,000 of this sum, principally in $5, $10 and $20.

Colored Men in the Signal Corps.

WASHINGTON, September 27.—Secretary of War Lincoln has decided in favor of the admission of colored men in the Signal Corps.

Rough Treatment.

DECATUR, IND., September 27.—A mob took Dode Lemon and Geo. Richards from their homes, near this city, to a woods to compel them to disclose what they knew about the murder of Amos Bockesto and Fred Richards. They were hung up and cut down three times, and upon still protesting their ignorance were let go.

A $80,000 Deficit.

NEW YORK, September 27.—The deficit in the trust fund in the New York Security Safe Deposit Company's vault, to which Charles E. Stevens, now missing, had access, is $80,000.

A COLLISION

Between Passenger and Freight Trains

On the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad—Several Lives Lost.

WHEELING, W. VA., September 29.—The Baltimore and Ohio cannon-ball passenger train from New York to Chicago crashed into a heavy east-bound freight train at 12:15 to-day, one mile this side of Farmington and fifty miles east of this city. The passenger train had five coaches, an official car and two postals, in charge of Conductor Henry Long. The freight, a heavy train of forty cars, in charge of Thomas Turley, had orders to pass at Mannington. Turley mistook the station number and attempted to make Farmington. The passenger train was heard but before warning could be given, it shot around a short curve and plunged into the freight, while running forty-five miles an hour to make up lost time. Such was the momentum of the passenger train that it crashed through the engine and seven freight cars, making a havoc utterly indescribable. The passengers by a miraculous chance escaped with a severe bruising and shaking up and the loss of some baggage. The trainsmen of the freight were literally cut and scalded to death, while those of the passenger, with one exception, escaped by jumping. Following are the killed and wounded: Thomas Turley, conductor of the freight, Piedmont, instantly killed, scalded out of all semblance of humanity. Thomas O'Donnell, fireman, Martinsburg, instantly killed, crushed and scalded. George Leonard, engineer of the passenger, back broken and head cut; died afterward. D. W. Boyd, passenger fireman, Littleton, badly scalded and both arms broken. John Smith, passenger engineer, head and breast cut and burned. S. C. Sapp, Mount Vernon, C[illegible] mail agent, head badly hurt and injured internally. T. J. Adams, Zanesville, arms broken and internal injuries. Joseph Damire, Grafton, riding on the passenger engine, arm mashed. Several brakesman on the freight were bruised, but not seriously. Both engines, a baggage car and nine freights were destroyed and a large amount of freight wrecked, making the loss over $50,000. The collision occasioned much excitement here, as there was no telegraph station near, and many Wheeling people were on board. The relief train came in six hours late and was met at the depot by a large crowd.

Foreign Notes.

LONDON, September 29.—The English Cabinet is said to have replied to the protest of the Powers that the action on the Egyptian Sinking Fund was justifiable under existing circumstances. Admiral Courbet is expected to resume operations October 1. It is reported that the Empress of China has decided in favor of peace. Courbet does not think France's demands will be complied with until the French army enters Pekin. George Swan Nottage was elected Lord Mayor of London. General Ruis is stimulating a revolt against the Panama (Cervera) Government. The Hovas, in Madagascar, are suffering for food and deserting to the French. Seven persons, one a woman, were arrested at Cracow for connection with an Anarchist plot. A boat ascending the Nile with troops and stores was sunk. The stores were lost. Thirty thousand workmen are idle at Lyons, and threaten disturbances. There were 355 cases of colera in Italy yesterday, and 212 deaths. Naples had 171 and 100 respectively, and Genoa 95 and 55.

Tinfoil Becomes a Weapon.

LONG ISLAND CITY, September 29.—Another attempt on the part of Charles H. Rugg, the Mayhee murderer, to escape from the Queens County jail, was frustrated. One night recently, when Jailer Drake was going his rounds, Rugg called him into his cell to look at his bed, and when he got inside the negro made a quick movement to get between Drake and the cell door, and acted so suspiciously that the jailer lost no time in getting outside and locking Rugg in. Yesterday thorough search was made of Rugg's cell, and a murderous-looking weapon, made of tinfoil from packages of chewing tobacco, firmly fastened to a thick piece of wood, and weighing over three pounds, was discovered in the ventilator. It is supposed Rugg made the weapon to use, when a favorable opportunity offered, to knock down the jailer, secure his keys and regain his liberty.

The Indian Schools.

WASHINGTON, September 29.—Estimates submitted by Inspector Haworth to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs make the following allowances for the maintenance of Indian schools for the next fiscal year: Forest Grove School, Oregon, $46,500; Genoa, Neb., $31,750; Lawrence, Kas., $62,250; Hampton, Va., $25,250; Carlisle, Pa., $101,000; Chilocco, Indian Territory, $36,125; Alaska, $25,000; schools in States and Territories, $111,900; transportation $20,000; general educational purposes, buildings, etc., $790,950; construction and repairs, $75,000.

Terrible Boiler Explosion.

BLAINSVILLE, PA., September 29.—The boiler in the engine room of the Millwood coal shaft exploded last evening, killing John Henne, fireman. Several others were seriously injured, and one or two will probably die. The boiler house was completely demolished, entailing a loss of $5,000.

Disastrous Cloud-Burst.

MEXICO CITY, September 29.—A cloud-burst at Pachuca, on the afternoon of the 27th, caused a terrible inundation. The amalgamating works were destroyed and considerable silver under treatment lost. It is estimated that thirty persons were killed. A great deal of property was destroyed and many cattle drowned.

Fire Marshal Bunker Dead.

CINCINNATI, September 29.—Joseph Bunker, Chief of the Fire Department, died at half past nine this morning from injuries received in a collision with the Babcock engine at Sixth and Vine streets Sunday morning, while going to a fire.

Mrs. Schelling at Home Again.

YONKERS, September 29.—Mrs. Morosini, Mrs. Schelling and her sister Julia have arrived at the family residence, having driven up from New York.

—The largest dredging machine in the world has been finished and will be used on the Sacramento and San Joaquin swamp lands in California. She has been named Thor, and modeled after the best dredges now in use on the Isthmus Canal, cutting out a channel and building a levee at the same same time. The Thor is 101 feet long, and 61 feet wide, and has 34 iron buckets with a capacity of 1½ cubic yards each, which can be filled and emptied fourteen times per minute.

—A Minneapolis artist who has been doing Alaska during his summer vacation says that all the members of his party, and there were seventy-five of them, agreed that the Greek Church at Sitka is the finest church in America. It is built on the plan of a Greek cross, and the interior is a mass of gold and silver, of the magnificence of which the writer says he can give no idea. Who would have thought of going to Alaska for an architectural masterpiece?

—A police officer in Hartford had his nose bitten off by a man he attempted to arrest.—Hartford Post.

—Americans and Russians are considered the most elegant dancers.

THE COMMONWEALTH.

Louisville Leaf Tobacco Market.

The market has been nearly featureless. The burley offerings have consisted chiefly of common and low medium styles, which have met a very well sustained demand and prices have ruled steady. Grades above medium have been rather slow sale, showing no improvement. Dark and heavy styles have been strong for the most part, though one or two sales of Green River fillers were considered to have been somewhat irregular. Shipping styles have been scarce. A feature of the week's business has been the sale at the Farmers' Warehouse of a rather large line of very common Lower Ohio lugs at prices which have not been equalled perhaps in ten years. We quote full-weight packages new-crop sound tobacco as follows:

	Dark and Heavy.	Burley.
Trash	$6 00@ 6 75	$6 00@ 7 50
Common lugs	7 00@ 7 25	7 50@ 8 00

Miscellaneous Items.

AT Louisville, Geo. Geedle, who murdered Robert Johnson near the Fair Grounds last April, has been sentenced to the penitentiary for twenty-one years.

THE Fourth Kentucky Volunteers, Col. R. M. Kelly's old regiment, had a successful re-union at London a few days ago.

A FREIGHT train backed into the packing establishment of Patterson, Henry & Co., Louisville, considerably damaging the building and fatally injuring George Ross, an employe.

THE other night at Miner's Station, K. C., a two-inch gang plank was laid across the track. The passenger train, running thirty-five miles an hour, passed over the plank reducing it to splinters, but not a wheel left the track.

AT the Diocesan Convention in session at Louisville a few days ago, Hon. J. W. Stevenson offered an amendment to the Constitution, constituting the Bishop, ten clergymen and other representatives from ten parishes as a quorum, which goes over until the next annual meeting of the Council.

AT High Grove, Thos. Jackson, colored, while plowing became entangled in the lines and the horses ran away, dragging Jackson nearly a mile. He was kicked to death by the horse and horribly maugled by the plow point.

THREE prisoners escaped from the Carlisle jail the other night by sawing two bars from the window. The names and offenses are: James Watkins, cutting and wounding; Odd Strother, colored, same offense, and Wallace Lawrence, serving a sentence for carrying concealed weapons.

JOSEPH MEYERS, quite an old man, of Sulphur Well, left home several weeks ago to visit his sons in Missouri and Illinois. Nothing has been heard from him since leaving Cincinnati, on the 16th inst. His family have been using every effort to ascertain his whereabouts, but so far without success.

THE cattle show, in connection with the Exposition at Louisville, has been abandoned on account of the existence of pleuro-pneumonia in the State.

THE Hickman Furniture Factory burned for the second time this year. Loss, $18,000; Insurance, $13,000.

MR. BEN RICKETTS, of Bath County, has invented a hand corn planter that plants but three grains in a hill and puts them down in a triangular position.

THERE is talk of organizing a Detective Association at Union, Boone County. The object is to bring to justice horse-thieves and other violators of the law.

WASH. FLETCHER, the voudoo doctor who killed his paramour's mother, last summer, is to be hanged at Paducah, October 4.

IN Christian County, Joseph Pendley ran away with Miss Kate Louise Taylor, whose papa sent the hired man to bring her back. Coming up with the couple a fight ensued, the hired man finally fired two shots at Pendley. The latter, fighting for a life and a wife, knocked Mr. Hired Man down with a club, gave him a good beating, mounted his horse, rode away and was soon married.

HON. R. C. BEAUCHAMP, of Hancock County, Representative in the Legislatures of 1867-9, is dead, aged 84 years.

THE Maysville Fair Grounds were sold the other day to Mr. Thomas Wells and associates for $18,500.

THE eight-year-old daughter of a Mr. Brannon, of Bowling Green, the other afternoon, attempted to extract the explosive material from a dynamite cartridge in order to use the shell for a pencil head. She laid the cartridge on an anvil in the blacksmith shop, and tapped it with a hammer. One piece of the cartridge entered her bowels, and others blew three of her fingers off, and still others blew over the anvil and box, and set a boy who was helping her, out of the shop door on his head, but not injuring him seriously. The little girl's wounds are serious.

A VERY large black bear has been seen by some people living about two miles west of Livingston in the country. It seems to venture out out of its place of concealment between one and two o'clock in the morning only. Those that have seen him say that it is an uncommonly large one. It ventures near the houses of the natives, whipping their dogs and walking around very deliberately. About a month previous to the time this one was discovered a very small one, not being more than a year old at most, was killed near the place where this one has been seen. It is strongly believed by experienced hunters to be this year's cub, and that the one last seen has a mate near by. Several parties are hunting for the den, but as yet have not been able to find it. The discovery has created quite a little excitement among hunters and sportsman. Some have even purchased guns adapted to the use of bear-hunters. If he escapes it will be a miracle.

REV. GEORGE HARDING died at his residence in Chester Mason County, aged 85 years.

THE other evening Harlan Darrell, a man about thirty years of age, entered the store-room of W. S. Caldwell, at Mt. Sterling, told a salesman that he was unhappy, and that his life was a burden, went to the rear of the building, called the salesman, told him of his intent, and before he could offer any resistance to his act, the fatal ball went tearing through his bowels, entering just below the left ribs, and ranging downward. He will die.

JESSE OFFUT, of Frankfort, sues Henry Taylor, of Louisville, for $10,000 for damage sustained in being shot one month ago.

ALLEN COBURN, the asylum attendant at Anchorage, who was hit on the head by a patient the other day, is dead.

IN the Criminal Court at Prestonburg the jury in the case of Gus Finley, charged with the murder of James Hunt, brought in a verdict of murder in the first degree, and sentenced Finley to hang. He killed Hunt about eighteen months ago. Finley is the first man ever sentenced to hang in Floyd County.

SAMUEL ANDERSON, who killed Wash Osborn in 1864, at Dry Ridge offers to come out of hiding and stand trial.

P. S. HAM, of Camp Nelson, was bitten by a snake and is in a precarious condition.

SCIENCE AND INDUSTRY.

—Alabama this year has been distinguished for the inauguration of heavy mining and smelting enterprises.

—Paper is made in France from the hop vine, and it is claimed that the fiber secured is the best substitute for rags yet obtained, as it possesses great length, strength, flexibility and delicacy.

—Scientific men now have a theory that animal life originated in the Arctic regions. If it attracts attention and provokes discussion the result will doubtless be more scientific expeditions to the land of Ice.—Chicago Herald.

—To remedy the evil of drying up, which spoils cigars that are kept beyond a certain time, a moistening case has been patented. The invention covers a tobacco case with a removable perforated bottom, beneath which is a removable moistening tray, which keeps the cigars moist and cool.—N. Y. Star.

—An exceedingly delicate and very important instrument among the French exhibits at the Philadelphia Electrical Exhibition is Professor Regnard's apparatus for the study of the respiration of animals. By means of this the scientist can measure the quantity of air breathed by the animal in a given time, and can make a complete analysis of it afterward.—Philadelphia Press.

—The latest treatment of brain irritation consists of seclusion in a darkened room for from ten to fifteen hours a day, while progressively increasing the hours of sleep; and the excessive use of bromides and other stuporinducing sedatives is discouraged. It is claimed that the soothing effect of a deep twilight is alone a therapeutic agent of great value in cases of extreme cerebral irritability.—Boston Budget.

—Experiments on an extensive scale have been made by the Dutch Government to ascertain the relative strength of iron and steel girders. The soft steel girders proved to be twenty-two per cent. and the hard steel girders sixty-six per cent. stronger than the iron girders. It was pretty well established that the strength of steel girders is about the same for the two flanges if they are made alike in section.

—The great trouble in making cannon is that if a flaw occurs the entire cannon is lost, with all the time and labor spent on it. To obviate this, a native of Idlewild, Allegheny County, Pa., has patented this method: He first bores a steel tube the size of the gun desired. If this tube is defective then only that much time and labor is lost. If it is not defective a steel breech is put on and then about the tube and breech is run molten cast-iron or steel, to complete the gun. The patentee has received an offer from the Dynamite Cannon Company, in which the Government is interested. He has also been offered $7,000 for the right to sell in Canada.—Pittsburgh Post.

—A single human hair indicates whether the air supplied in the ventilation at the Capitol at Washington is too moist or too dry. A perfectly dry air is put at zero. Saturated air, that is, air carrying all the moisture it will hold, is put at 100. The human hair absorbs moisture, and, like a rope, becomes shorter when wet. The difference in length between a hair six inches inches long when wet and the same hair when dry is made to represent the hundred degrees of moisture on the dial; and the hand and pointer moves backward, or forward as the moisture in the air varies. If it becomes too dry, more steam is thrown in; if too moist, less steam is allowed to escape. And thus the atmosphere is regulated at a wholesome point.—Washington Post.

—How did he know what was lost? Tiff Johnson went out fishing again one day last week. He had a nice lunch fixed up, but on arriving at the creek he discovered that he lost it, so he retracted his steps. Meeting a large, satisfied looking negro, who was picking his teeth Tiff asked: "Did you pick up au thing in the road?" "No, sah, I didn't pick up nuffin—couldn't a dog hab found it and eat it up?"—Texas Siftings.

—A lady meeting a small boy on the street exclaimed: "Why Arthur, I didn't know you! The last time I saw you, you were dressed in velvet." The small boy looked up "with reproof in his eye," and said "I know people by their faces, and not by their clothes. If I should see mamma coming along with my papa's clothes on, I'd know it was my mamma." The young lady made up her mind that she'd know Arthur again when she met him, and went away feeling very like a culprit.—Golden Days.

—The tallest bird known to ethnologists was found by Professor Herbert in the lower eocene deposits near Paris, France. It was over twelve feet in height, and could have bitten a man's head off as easily as a woodpecker can nip a cherry. We can not be too thankful that this bird has gone out of fashion and existence. Ladies would have wanted to wear it on their hats, and men who sat behind such bonnet ornaments in the theaters would be unable to see whether a ballet or a prayer meeting was in progress on the stage.—Norristown Herald.

—"Yes, sir," said an enthusiastic citizen of a new Western town. "We've got a right smart town, stranger. It's only six months old yet, and it's got two hotels, forty-eight beer saloons, twenty-seven gambling places, four drug stores, to say nothin' of grocery and clothin' stores, and the best half-mile track west of the Missouri." "Any churches," asked the stranger. "Any what?" "Churches!" "Well, no," he replied, absently. "We hain't got any of them. Thar was some talk about buildin' one, but we finally allowed it would look too dudish."—N. Y. Independent.

A Morning Walk.

"Yes," said Fogg, the other evening, as the boarders were gathered in the back sitting-room for their after-supper smoke; "yes, there can be no doubt about it; there's nothing like a walk down town in the morning."

Fogg paused a moment in order that he might tantalize the curiosity of his listeners.

"What's that, Fogg?" asked one. "who was telling you?" was the unkind remark of another; while the remainder of the boys contined their outward manifestations of interest to an incredulous stare.

"Oh, you needn't look that way," Fogg resumed. "It is gospel truth I'm telling you. I did it. But," he added, with a far away expression in his eyes, "I sha'n't do it again in a hurry.

"You want to know how it happened? I'll tell you. Pacergait—you know Pacergait—well, he had been raving about the delights of a morning walk, telling me I lost a great deal by riding down town in a horse car. (And he told the truth there, confound him! I did lose a great deal, sure enough! Well, as I was saying, Pacergait had been telling of the cool city streets in the early morning, of the restful calm that preceded the din and clatter of the noisy day, and of the pure air newly distilled in the alembic of Nature, and saying how much one lost by riding; and so I thought I'd try it this morning."

"And of course you enjoyed it?" suggested Bass; "and the horse car will know you no more forever?"

"Oh, yes: I enjoyed it hugely," said Fogg. "There's nothing like it, as Pacergait told me—and thank Heaven there ain't. That's all I've got to say.

"But I had a delightful walk—diversified, to be sure, but still delightful. I had gone perhaps two blocks, when a housemaiden dashed a pail of water onto the sidewalk—and onto me. I didn't mind this so much as I probably would had I not already obliterated the fresh shine on my boots in the mud on the crossing, which had been plentifully baptized by the watering-cart. Strange, isn't it, that these watering-carts deposit their liquid loads exclusively on the crossings. Wonder if the drivers have any understanding with the bootblack fraternity!

"As I was saying, I didn't mind the housemaid's oblation. In fact, I was rather grateful than otherwise for her little attention: for notwithstanding my feet were steeped in the aqueous element, the water washed off part of the mud from my shoes and pantaloons. Had it not been for the pan of dust which another of the sisterhood, a few doors farther on, sprinkled over me, and especially upon my moistened pedestals, I should have only the kindliest feelings for the water nymph.

"However, the dust didn't trouble me long; for just as I reached the next corner, a youth who was cleaning the shop windows, evidently mistaking me for a conflagration, pointed the nozzle of his hose point-blank at my breast-pin and let me have the stream, full head. It was very kind of him. The dust was gone, and in its place I was incased in a beautiful and diversified assortment of mud, whose picturesqueness was further heightened by the efforts of half a dozen mat-shakers who favored me with their attentions during my passage of the next two or three blocks.

"The next object of interest that presented itself was the pavement, which I examined at short range while reclining on my hands and knees. I had taken this position through the aid of a young man who contrived to insert between my legs the end of the long-handled brush with which he was shampooing the windows. I don't know how long I might have indulged in my geological investigations, had not an offal wagon stopped just abreast of me. Now I discovered what Pacergait meant by "pure air newly distilled in the alembic of nature." And I didn't like it—that is to say, I wasn't excessively enamoured of it. Perhaps it was too rich for my blood. I think it was. At all events, I arose with alacrity, regardless of my torn unmentionables and of the barked shins inside of them.

"I had now got nearly down to the store, and with the exception of the dust storm which came from every other door, generated by broom and human accompaniment, I met with no further adventure—that is to say, none to speak of. It is true I found myself to the leeward of three or four city wagons from time to time, and the recipient of the comminuted earth which they bestow so freely and so impartially upon the just and the unjust, and only escaped being run over by an express wagon, aided and abetted by a herdic and an omnibus, by falling headlong over a horse sweeping-machine, but such trifles as these are scarcely worth mentioning.

"Yes, as Pacergait told me, there's nothing like a walk down town in the morning; but there's nothing grasping about me. I don't want the earth. Horse-cars are good enough for me in the future."—Boston Transcript.

Why Rest is Essential.

Nature, while she specially built the human form habitually erect, has specially decreed that men and women should occasionally rest themselves by assuming sedentary position. Almost every medical authority on the deformities of the human body has drawn attention to the fact that standing too long operates in a vicious direction, which, by elongating certain muscles, weakens them that from the necessity of changing position in order to rest the muscles it occurs that when people are standing they alternately balance themselves first on one leg and then on the other, but most frequently on the left; and that a girl with a weak spine, after standing upright for some time, generally does not keep her feet in the same line, but places one above the other. Curvature of the spine, albeit temporary, is the result. The habit of standing on one leg—a habit almost unavoidable in standing too long—induces the shoulders to lose their horizontal level. The one opposite to the projecting hip becomes higher than the other, and the spine becomes deformed laterally at this part. To deny seats to female shop assistants is downright cruelty.—London Telegraph.

—The Paris newspapers are taking umbrage at the law promulgated by Baron de Manteuffel, Governor of Alsace-Lorraine, intended to prevent an increase of French families in that country, and obliging the adult sons either to become naturalized Germans or quit the country. The unmarried men of French nationality under the law are allowed to remain until married, when, if they refuse to become Germans, they will be notified that their sons are liable to conscription or expulsion.

Bears, wildcats, coons and deer in profusion are still seen in parts of Georgia.

THE DAIRY.

—The value of the butter made in the State of New York annually is estimated at over $57,000,000.

—During the past six years Illinois, Iowa, Kansas, Nebraska, Minnesota, Missouri and Ohio have established over 900 creameries.

—The exports of dairy products from Canada amount to nearly twenty per cent. of the exports of all agricultural products, including live stock, from the Dominion.

—The American Cultivator tells how a kicking cow can be well utilized: A farmer who bought a cow which neither he nor his man could milk, found that he could make her profitable to suckle calves, which were very high priced that season.

—A prominent breeder of Holsteins claims that the introduction of ensilage in his feeding has entirely prevented losses from milk fever among his cows, though previous to its use in feeding he usually lost one or more valuable animals every year.

—Pastures are frequently reduced to less than half of their natural production by being eaten off too closely. If the ground be too bare it dries out until the blades and roots of the plants are scorched. If enough grass be left to protect the soil, and keep it damp, the pasture will be much more productive.

—Dairy farming has assumed wonderful proportions in Great Britain, where it is now growing more rapidly than in any other country in the world. The amount of capital employed in dairying by farmers in the United Kingdom is estimated at no less than from $875,000,000 to $1,000,000,000, and that by landlords at from $6,500,000,000 to $7,000,000,000. These are vast sums, and yet it is only too well known that British dairy farming is capable of much further development.—Cleveland Herald.

Washing Butter.

I see there are several questions asked in regard to making butter. Mrs. G. wishes me to prove that washed butter will not keep. In the first place, I never washed any that kept good, and I never saw any that others washed that kept good and did not get frowy. I have seen it get frowy in three days, and again in a week. Some will keep longer, but sooner or later it will spoil, and I will endeavor to explain: Butter does not need washing. Water is antagonistic to butter. In washing the butter the water gets all through it, and if that water is not all worked out it will cause it to work and ferment, and even if the water is worked out its effects are there, and it will get frowy; there is no help for it. There is no earthly reason for washing butter; it needs no washing, and there is no woman of sense who once learns to make butter without washing will ever wash butter again. It is contrary to the laws of Nature to put water on butter; but when I went to housekeeping for myself I learned to make it without washing. I learned of old experienced butter-makers in Northern Ohio, where every farm has all the cows it will keep, and where I made butter and cheese from twenty to thirty cows for twenty years before coming to Michigan. I have made one hundred pounds of butter a week; never washed a pound of butter in forty years that I took to market, and never had any get frowy. My butter always keeps good. Butter that has no water in it will not get frowy. Since living in Michigan, I have sometimes, in the very hottest weather, been obliged to put cold water on my butter to cool it; but I never sell such butter, I use it for cooking and baking at home, because it will not keep. I do not want to be understood as saying that all butter that is not washed is good butter; far from it. But anybody who can and does make clean, sweet butter when they wash it, can make it better, and with less trouble and less work without washing it.

Washed butter must be worked with the paddle all through in each water, and you don't have to work it at all to get the buttermilk out, as I told you once before. Churn your butter in the buttermilk until it is all gathered together in solid chunks; then have your butter bowl scalded and cooled; take the butter from the churn into it; then with the ladle in one hand, tip the bowl on one side with the other, press out the buttermilk: that is, press the butter together and the buttermilk will run out; salt it and set away twenty-four hours: be careful not to work the buttermilk in instead of out. Just poach it up until the buttermilk begins to start good: then commence pressing the butter together and the buttermilk out until you have it solid; then make it into balls, roll or pack it.

Always do your butter making in the morning while the air is cool; never in the heat of the day. I have known some to work a little pulverized saltpetre in the butter they packed for their winter's use, but borax never; that would be like putting in saleratus. It makes no difference to the butter what kind of a churn it is churned in, so long as it is clean and sweet. Never put milk in any but new, bright pans. Butter is better, and will keep better if made from sweet cream; but when we have only a few cows we must let the milk stand until we get all the cream out of it, or we waste the milk, and the butter will keep well enough made from sour cream, if made as I have directed.

If you tip your pans bottom side up in the sun to dry they need not be wiped; but if dried around the stove wipe them first. If your pans have had sour milk in them wash them through three different waters; then set them together in your empty dish-pan and turn boiling water all through them; take out one at a time and tip it into another pan to drain; wipe and set around the stove to dry, so they will not sweat when put together. If you want some good wiping cloths take an old sheet that is too thin to use on the beds any more and rip apart in the middle; cut each half in two, hem, and you have four of the best wiping cloths you ever used, just right to wipe those pans with.

Beatrix says all this gilt-edged butter is washed. I did not know how it was made. She says a great many merchants spoil butter after they get it by not knowing how to take care of it. That is true in a measure. I have neighbors who make butter that will just keep long enough to get it to the store, and then it spoils on the merchant's hands, and the merchant does not know where the fault lies, but that butter is washed. These gilt-edged butter-makers probably sell their butter where it is used up the same day it is made, and don't have to keep it a week. It would be better and keep longer if not washed.—Mrs. H. S., in Michigan Farmer.

CALIFORNIA LETTER.

San Francisco, Cal. Sept. 15, 1884.

To the Editors of the Recorder:

The day following our visit to Pike's Peak, we started for Salt Lake City via of the Denver & Rio Grand R. R. This route is happily called the "Scenic line of America," far surpassing in the variety and grandeur of its scenery, the Pennsylvania Central or Picturesque B.&O. of the East. From Colorado Springs to Pueblo, the road traverses a plateau along the base of the Rockies with the main range in full view. During the two hours' ride through this region, we amused ourselves by observing the maneuvers of the hundreds of prairie dogs that burrow near by and perch themselves as erect as tenpins near the entrances to their underground homes when a train passes. Pueblo was reached at noon and from the train we were unable to see anything save restaurants and saloons. The city comprises a population of about 25,000 people a large number of whom are Mexicans. Several large smelting furnaces are located here in which is centered the chief industry. Our opinion of the city, formed partly from what others told us and partly from observation, was anything but favorable. Its great age contrasted with its slow progress and present population is sufficient to reveal the stupidity and slothfulness of many of its inhabitants; and what adds still more to its detriment, its undesirable location. At Pueblo the road makes an angle of 90° turning due west up the Arkansas. Nothing of interest attracted our attention until Canon City was reached. Here is located the State Penitentiary, a commodious stone building surrounded by a high stone wall, upon which are stationed guards day and night. Just beyond Canon City you enter the grand canon of the Arkansas; the the walls of which at first are but a few hundred feet in height and separated by some distance from each other. As you proceed, the walls close in upon you, becoming at the same time more nearly perpendicular, making the way narrower and the surroundings grander at each successive stride of the iron horse. Finally the walls approach within 30 feet of each other, leaving just room enough for river and railroad. This portion of the canon for a distance of 4 miles is called the Royal Gorge. The perpendicular walls on either side, rising to the height of 3,000 feet, the river rushing rapidly past and almost dashing its spray upon the train, a narrow strip of blue overhead, are the only objects that meet your view; yet, there is a grandeur and sublimity about the scene which you see and feel, but can not describe. At one point the gorge is so narrow that it became necessary to bridge the stream lengthwise, mortising the braces and supports of the bridge into the solid stone walls, a striking instance of man's ability to overcome the obstacles placed in his way by nature, when some great and worthy end is sought.

Emerging from the Grand Canon, we soon found ourselves being hurled along through the fertile valley of the Arkansas, until arriving at Poncho Springs, a resort of scarcely more than local reputation, where the up grade over the Rockies begins. Here an extra engine is attached and after much puffing and backsliding in pulling around the numerous horseshoe curves and up the steep grade, attaining a maximum of more than 300 ft. to the mile, we finally reached Marshall's Pass at an elevation of 10,858 feet. This is one of the highest points yet reached by a railroad, however that greater heights can and will be reached in this way is only a question of time. The great number of snow sheds through which we passed in climbing the eastern slope of the Rockies, are indicative of the terrible snow storms that visit this region and cover the track to the depth of many feet unless protected in those places where drifts are formed.

Night overtook us here just as we began the down grade and the repeated clank-it-e-clank, clank-it-e-clank of the wheels, told us that we were being carried with frightful speed from the regions of snow far down and out into the flowering valley. Dismissing all fears of danger I snugly tucked myself away on a shelf and was soon lulled to sleep while mentally repeating the following couplet from Taylor:

"Let the engines take breath, they have nothing to do,
For the law that swings worlds will whirl the train through."

The valley is reached and a short journey brought us to the Black Canon of the Gunnison, which we were informed is a repetition of Grand Canon, with a few variations. We pass during the night Currecanti Needle lifting its tapering spire to the height of many hundred feet; also the irregular snow crown Uncompahgre Peaks fifty miles in the south, affording perhaps the finest mountain land scape in Colorado.

As the first gray streak of morning light shot up from the eastern horizon, we found ourselves at Grand Junction still in Colorado. Soon after leaving here we entered a sandy, desolate region, not inaptly called the desert, which extends for more than 200 miles into Utah Territory. However, this dreary waste is not without interest.

A few miles to the north and almost the entire 200 miles running parallel with the railroad, are the varigated Book Cliffs from 50 to 100 feet high, composed of earth or soft stone in horizontal strata, resembling the leaves of a large volumn. The strata are highly colored in many places by the organic matter from which they were originally formed. The upper surfaces of these cliffs are horizontal, showing that at one time the entire surrounding country was at the same elevation but was afterward eroded by the action of water which then covered western portion of the continent.

Marks caused by the dashing waves of that early sea, are still visible high up on the cliffs.

About midway the desert, looking to the south scarcely 50 miles away, may be seen the broken walls which mark the Grand Canon's of the Colorado. As we traversed this region, wholly unfit for cultivation or the habitation of man, we thought if this be Utah, why in the name of common sense and political economy don't Uncle Sam engage Carter Graddy to surround the territory with a barbed wire fence in order to prevent the entrance of Gentiles or the escape of Saints, thus allowing the latter to die the death of the unrighteous in this god-forsaken land?

Presently the Wasatch range rises before us, and soon we begin the laborious up grade. Price River Canon begins at Castle Gate, when time worn ledges, towering aloft 500 feet, extend toward each other from the cliffs behind almost barring the passage. The apex of the pass over the Wasatch range is called Soldier Summit, the elevation reached here being 7,481 feet. On the western slope the mountains are alternately precipitous and retreating, covered with pines and cedars, presenting a scene everywhere picturesque. We have had occasion to observe before that the Rocky range is formed of dome-like peaks with tilted strata, inclining at angles varying from 1° to 90°, being contorted and twisted into every conceivable shape. In direct contrast to this the distinguishing characteristics of the Wasatch mountains, are horizontally of strata from base to summit and the pointed terminations of the peaks.

Leaving these scenes behind, we hurry through Spanish Fork Canon, and turning sharply to the north enter the Mormon town of Springville, situated in the fertile valley of Utah Lake, How enchanting was this scene compared with the one upon which our eyes rested for the 200 miles preceding, where no human beings were to be seen save a few Chinese, an occasional Mormon beside his hut, with here and there a noble red man standing erect as the pine that grew beside him on the cliff.

The valley is dotted with small towns; its broad acres comprise numerous beautiful abodes, and well stocked farms, abundantly watered and covered with luxuriant vegetation. As you proceed up the valley, on your right are the snow crowned peaks of the Wasatch; while the black masses of the Oquirrh Range rises from the head of the Lake on the farther side forming the western confines of the park. Passing on across the river Jordan into Salt Lake Basin the mountains recede, and open to view a wider expanse of fertile lands.

You now begin to see why the Mormons chose this as their permanent home after being driven by persecutions across the parched and lifeless plains; for it is truly the garden spot of this inter-mountain country.

Upon nearing Salt Lake City, we had pointed out to us Emigration Pass from which the Saints first viewed the "Promised Land." But now we are in their city, and as we ride through the wide streets to our hotel, a feeling of disappointment comes over us; for at first sight Salt Lake City has the general appearance of most other cities, and with all your ingenuity you are unable to distinguish Mormon from Gentile. However, after close observation you are able to note many things both new and strange to a visitor. Every street in the city is just eight rods wide; every square contains just ten acres; upon every street are two rows of beautiful shade trees; along each side walk is a continuous stream of fresh, running water from the mountain stream which supplies the city.

It cannot be said that the city contains many palatial residences, yet a number of them are quite large and substantial without unnecessary ornamentation. Hundreds of the smaller residences are built of adobe bricks which are baked in the sun, and present an appearance extremely odd and rather ancient. The blocks in the older portion of the city are each surrounded by a wall about 10 feet high, 2½ feet thick at the base and one foot at the top, constructed of cobble stone and boulders strongly cemented together. These were built in early days as a protection against attacks by the Indians.

As you walk through the city and make a thorough survey of it, you are everywhere struck with its neatness and symmetry, with the quiet and sublimity that pervades the very air you breath, and being filled with scenes upon which you would meditate you return to your hotel satisfied with what you have seen, yet besieged by a curiosity to inquire into some of the causes that make the Mormon stronghold what it is. At our next writing we will endeavor to give you some insight into the political and religious workings of the Mormons, together with descriptions of their public buildings.

ALFRED S. GAINES, Bullittsville, Ky.

Now is the time—and probably the last opportunity—for this county to subscribe liberally towards building the Fair grounds. Covington has subscribed liberally toward the enterprise, and but little will her citizens be benefited by it, while many and numerous benefits will accrue to the country around and near to it. The best opportunity the counties of Boone and Kenton ever had for reviving the Fair, is now presented, and unless accepted and pushed to a successful termination, the probability is that never again can the enterprise be put through at so little cost. If money with which to mature the plans of those interestnig themselves in behalf of the Fair, is furnished, in a very short time it will be the best institution of that kind in the State. Do you want the Fair? is the question now put squarely to the people of this county, and it is hard to believe that the enterprise of this section of the country will fail to respond in the affirmative. The people fully appreciate the benefits and pleasures that are the offspring of a well conducted Agricultural Association, and when they have one in their midst that is to be a permanently located organization, much more will it be admired and valued. Give it a lift.

KANSAS LETTER.

Harper, Ks., Sept, 21, 1884.

You may think grasshopper season over by my silence, but the fact is I have been so busy laying in our winter supply of food we han't time to chirp, scarcely.

We have had beautiful weather the past two months for making hay, and the farmers have been improving the opportunity, consequently there is a large amount of hay stacked, and the dry weather we are now having is curing up the Buffalo grass very nicely in the fields, and that is what we depend on for grazing the cattle in the winter. Cattle will not touch it until after several frosts, when they seem to relish it very much. We can make hay here from June to October. Crops of all kinds are excellent and stock in fine condition.

We had a very pleasant surprise a short time since by a visit from some of our old Boone county friends, and were glad to see them, and were very much pleased to see them planting their greenbacks in Kansas soil, and think they will reap a rich reward therefrom. We like to have such men as Mr. Balsly plant themselves near us. After looking over Harper and adjacent counties, and taking a trip down into the Indian Territory, which they seemed to enjoy very much, they came back and bought land adjoining and around me as follows: Mr. Voshell, one-half a section on the west; J. W. Gaines, one quarter of a section on the south; Irwin Balsly, one-quarter on the southeast. Mr. Clore did not buy, but he thinks he will before next spring.

We have one of the most booming counties it has ever been my lot to see. One hundred Kentuckians came into Harper on one train last week, and people are now coming in in crowds from all points west and south, and land is advancing in price very rapidly, while everything is on the stir.

This county can boast of two good Fairs, one at Harper and the other at Anthony, the county seat. I attended both, and witnessed a good exhibition of fine stock, consisting of several different breeds of cattle, horses, hogs and sheep as well as some very closely contested races.

I see by your last paper that Boone is suffering for a drink; bring her out; there is plenty of water here and to spare. We have never-failing springs in abundance, and creeks that were never known to go dry.

Our agricultural display is looming up. Yesterday Mr. Albert Gray brought in as a sample of his crop, a stalk of tobacco that measures over five feet, is a beatiful color, fine texture and has a silky feeling. In the corn department we have a stalk bearing three good sized well matured ears. This freak of nature—for such it is this year—came from a field of Dr. W. H. Terrill, in which corn has been cultivated for several yeas in succession. It's not claimed that the field is like the sample mentioned.

The unusual good crops to be found in Kansas this year are calculated to make those who visit that State infatuated with it. While we wish all those who locate there a full realization of their anticipations, we feel confident that they will find years when they will not entertain such an opinion of Kansas. It is not every year that Kansas matures such exhaustless crops as can be found there this year.

I wish to inform the public that my process of painting is one of the best known to the profession. The work I do wears well, no chalking or pealing or other annoyances so common to the work of inexperienced painters. All work done in the latest styles, and prices reasonable. For recommendation I refer to those for whom I have done work, such as house painting, graining, and paper hanging, in fact all kinds of house and carriage painting. If you have work you want done drop me a postal and I will come and see you about it. JOE REED, Burlington, Ky.

Our Scattersville's juror has recently contracted a very severe case of western fever, which his friends fear is having an effect calculated to disqualify him for adjusting the difficulties that occasionally arise between man and man. He had occasion to be out the first rainy day we had this fall, and provided himself with a rubber coat and umbrella. In his peregrinations he was overtaken by a heavy rain fall, but was totally oblivious of the fact that he was provided with both an umbrella and rubber coat until the shower was over and he was pretty thoroughly drenched. We wont be in our office any more until after he moves out west.

We call the attention of the readers to the advertisement of Messrs. Heyn & Bro. of Rising Sun, Indiana. From personal observation and experience we are convinced that this firm carries the most complete stock of goods in Southeastern Indiana, besides selling away below city prices. Unlike many other firms they do not advertise onething and mean another, but they can be relied upon as acting upon their word. The country would be much better off if all our business houses would act upon this principle. In this connection we will say that such a store is and should be patronized by the public. We will mention but one solid fact in regard to their ready-made clothing. There are too many would-be clothiers in this country, but those are "few and far between" that can furnish a garment fit to be worn by a gentleman wishing to dress modern and respectably. A word to the wise is sufficient. †

Last Thursday, Mr. H. P. Crisler, who lives over on Ashby Fork, hired and put to work a boy named Wm. Vaughn who had been working for some of his neighbors. All went well and Mr. Crisler was thinking he had secured a sprightly and industrious boy. Monday morning he arose at the usual hour and called the boy, and went to the barn to feed his stock, leaving a lamp burning so that the boy could find his way through his room. The young man was promptly on hand and commenced assisting to feed the hogs, but while Mr. C. was gone with a basket of corn he suddenly disappeared, and although called could not be found. Mr. Crisler did not suspicion anything wrong until he went to get his watch which had been taken from where it hung when he retired Sunday night. The absence of the boy was at once accounted for, but all efforts to intercept him proved a failure. Vaughn was about 17 years old, of spare build, light hair cut short, wore brown overalls, a black hat, and claimed to be from Madison county. The watch he stole cost $20 about a year since, and Mr. Crisler says he will give $10 as a reward for the return of the thief and watch.

The trial and tribulations that beset Boneparte's march across the Alps fade into insignificance when compared with those experienced by that party of Burlingtonites which visited La Grace Grove last Saturday. The four couple left Burlington amid all the pomp and splender that could possibly be procured, but on their return trip the boys could be found at the rear of the stage at every slight ascent in the road, assisting the exhausted equines, and at one time summoning all their muscle and ingenuity to extricate one of the horses which fell by the wayside and became immersed in a brush pile. The fair ones climbed the hills in Indian file, while their fine and exquisitely wrought toggery was reduced to the appearance of a very healthy clay bank. At 7 p. m., the excursion was expected to return to Burlington, but their perilous and ... home trip was prolonged to 3½ a. m., Sunday morning and when they did put in their appearance they were taken for an installment of the Greely survivors who had missed their route on a return and wandered off to this secluded region. Being indentified they recited their night's experience from which the above is condensed, and those wishing an exhaustive account of the trip are respectively referred to Captain O. H. Conrad who held the ribbons over the fiery steeds that propelled the front end of the coach.

Last Monday two of the leading attorneys of the local bar were taking depositions in County Attorney Tolin's office on the second floor in the Court-house while Esquire Baker and a jury were trying John Masters, of Constance, in the Court-room below, for an assault and battery. Everything was progressing quietly, when, all of a sudden, there was an eruption on the second floor that caused the jurors to rush franticly from the box, their first impulse being to flee from the temple of justice which they were certain was about to be demolished by an earthquake; but before they could make their exit the supposed shock had subsided, and they ascended the stairs to the second floor from whence came the noise which they supposed proceeded from a cause about to dismantle the building, but the temper of the irate attorneys had fallen below the point of mortal combat, and no personal violence had resulted, it only being one of those manifestations of brotherly love that so often crops out among opposing counsel. Esquire Baker corraled his jury and proceeded with the trial, Masters being fined one cent and cost for having propelled a rock into young Proble's forecastle.

Montgomery Anderson, of Constance was in town yesterday.

Mrs. Tousey and daughter, of Visalia, Kenton county, are spending several days with friends at this place.

Miss Kate Bradford and Miss Osie Yager, two Florence belles, returned home yesterday from several days visit to friends in Burlington.

Mr. B. F. Corbin, of Iowa, made this office a brief call last Saturday morning. He says the political situation in his State is very uncertain, and that Cleveland has a fighting chance for the electoral vote.

Mark Collins, of Wittsburg, Ark., was here the latter part of last week, and is the same genial fellow of years gone by. Mark's visit to Kentucky at this time is of special importance, he leading to the altar at the Eighth Str., Cathedral at 5 p. m., to-day, one of Covington's fair daughters. They will return to Arkansas in a few days, followed by the good wishes of a host of friends, of which the RECORDER is one.

NEIGHBORHOOD NEWS.

Florence X-Roads.

This damp wet weather is no advantage to the corn in the shock.

Small grain looks well. Some of the farmers have suspended sowing till the ground drys.

The recent showers have revived business around here. Russell's mill is running with a full force again.

W. Y. Crigler, of Carlisle, made us another flying visit last Friday. His little daughter, Bessie was with him.

Dr. Tanner, of Hebron, has a patient at Jno. P. Utz's. The horse is convalescing greatly to the regrets of the doctor.

Prof. Cole commenced his school last Monday with as large attendance as ever had here. He expects to give a strawberry and ice-cream festival Saturday night for the benefit of the school. All are invited.

Florence.

A mass meeting will be held at this place Saturday, October 11th, at 2 o'clock p. m. for the purpose of furthering the enterprise which is now being pushed by the people of the northern part of the State, in the interest of agriculture, stock raising, etc. It is desirable that the farmers and Fair men of Boone county especially be present at this meeting, as it will virtually be a Boone county institution, though within the borders of Kenton county. And it is not to be supposed that the neighboring cities and county will lend them aid, which is essential to the successful carrying out of the affair, unless the people of this county and immediate neighborhood give their assistance. We can not too strongly urge upon the former the importance of having an annual Fair. Wherever an agricultural society is found, in that same community will be found a greater per cent. of prosperous and thrifty farmers than elsewhere. Come out, farmers and Fair men, and help the good work along.

Rabbit Hash.

John P. Ryle's new tobacco barn is about completed.

Cal's dog is playing havoc with window shutters in the burg.

Prof. Bell will commence a 5 months school in Bellevue on the 6th inst.

The U. S. dredge boats are dilligently at work removing the dam at the head of the bar.

Uncle Jimmie Ryle, of Gunpowder, has delivered a fine lot of apples to Wilson & Riddell.

Tom Marshall will have his new house finished in time for a Christmas dance, but we will wait for an invite.

It is reported that Wm. Clore, proprietor of the Rising Sun plow shop, is very low and cannot survive many days longer.

Mrs. Tom Riggs has been very sick for several days with flux, but by the careful treatment of Dr. Cowen, she is convalescing.

We have no ground for complaint about rain. The cisterns are filled and the branches are running, furnishing plenty of stock water.

Scarcely anyone in the neighborhood is through cutting tobacco. If the wet weather continues many days longer some of the weed will be caught by frost.

One day last week Mrs. Kate Kirtley was going from James A. Wilson's to Mrs. McConnell's when the horses attached to the wagon became frightened and started to ran, throwing her out of the wagon, breaking her arm between the wrist and elbow.

Wash Ircnegle, the boss workman on B. H. Ryle's new barn, fell backward one day last week, from the top of the barn, a distance of about 20 feet, striking on his back. Dr. Cowen was called immediately but was unable to tell exactly what injuries he had sustained.

Capt. J. M. Riddell, of Williamstown, has made his little grandson, Charlie Finch, of this place, a present of a handsome little saddle.

A MISTAKE.

There had been a little tiff 'tween the farmer and his wife—
"Ah! woman's been our plague," he said,
"since first we went astray!
There was never any trouble, and never any strife,
There was never loss of money, and never loss of life,
But a woman, good, or bad, was the reason of the fray."

"If a woman's such a plague to men, why do they marry, dear?
Why do they woo and flatter her, and take her to their home?
Why are they never satisfied but when their plague is near?
And is there a necessity to whisper in her ear:
'You are fair as any angel, and sweet as honeycomb?'

"And if their plague should sometimes make a visit half a day,
You'd think they'd do their very best the visit to prolong;
But instead of that, they grumble that she's so long away,
And they wonder 'what's the matter;' and when she comes they say
'I'm thankful you are back again, for every thing's gone wrong.'

"It's certainly remarkable!" She tossed her pretty head;
And then she set the supper things, and cut
the bread and cake;
Her eyes were bright as any stars, her cheeks were rosy red,
The farmer looked at her, and rose, and with a kiss he said:
"I meant, our comforter, dear wife, 'plague' was a great mistake.

"The best of men will make mistakes, so just forgive me dear
For foolish words said thoughtlessly, since this is what I meant—
There was never any happiness, good fortune, or good cheer,
There was never life worth living but with some good woman near;"
And she smiled and kissed him lovingly, and both were well content.

OUR ANNIE.

When Johnny brought her cloak or her dinner to the factory door, he always left them for "our Annie," and his confidence in the efficacy of the pronoun and his contempt for any other appellation caused his name for her to follow her even inside the door, where it clung to her, and invested her with an affectionate distinction in a place where the strictest justice is meted out by popular opinion, and that opinion never too modest to make its verdict public.

There were some among us who thought her worthy of the name of heroine as well, though when she came to be compared with the accepted standard in literature, the divergence was so wide that her title was clearly open to dispute.

She was not beautiful, to begin with: hers was a quiet face, dark eyed and shy, and not one to impress an observer unless it had been seen upon an occasion when struggling hate and victorious love transfigured it, and such occasions are rare in a lifetime. As a rule, the heroines who wander somewhat inanely on from preface to finis have but one occupation, that of love-making; and this excludes all others. They toil not, neither do they spin, nor take any thought for raiment. Clothes, becoming and imperishable, grow upon them. They go through fire and flood, mire and snow, with no disfigurement of scorching or bedrabbling, or they

"Sit in splendor, like the sun, Shining with nothing at all to do."

If by any miracle a venturous author makes his heroine labor for dress and shoes, with what a flourish of trumpets is that fact proclaimed, and with what special providences he surrounds her, that this monotonous business known as "earning a living" may not be painfully prolonged. In a late case an unfortunate young lady made a few æsthetic bonnets, but wealthy friends and a lordly lover hovered near to see that she did not overtax herself, and to protest at intervals against her doing anything whatever. Not so with our Annie. From the hardest of mattresses she rose singing in the morning, and, rain or shine, trudged to her work, returning long after the sun had set. Of her and thousands like her it was sternly written from eternity that "one who can not work in this universe can not get existed in it," and it was her specific business to keep herself, and certain others dependent upon her, alive, which she did by the labor of her hands, wealth and nobility, as lookers-on, being conspicuously absent.

Notwithstanding which she was busy and light-hearted as any chirping sparrow—that despised bird, in common with her class, being taxed with many vices, but never with sulkiness or laziness. Her shoes would wear out, to her sorrow, and her dress fray at the seams; worse than that when spring rains poured down upon her, it was not without reason Johnny teasingly sung,

"Jenny's a' wat, poor body,
Jenny's seldom dry:
She dra'g'et a' her petticoatie
Comin' thro' the rye."

She hated a wet and raveled skirt, and to keep her dress of gray wool neat at the bottom, she cut it off whenever it began to sprout into ragged threads; but it needed the process so often that if it did not, like the dress of the ballet-dancer, begin too late, it must certainly, like that, have ended too soon, had she not taken the precaution to piece it at the top. Therefore in external decoration the statuesque heroines of fiction left Little Annie far behind, and in this respect quite hopeless of ever overtaking them. Their draperies float or cling, and the plainest fall gracefully in simple folds to their feet, but when were they ever pieced at the top to eke them out?

As quite a secondary, if not accidental consideration, Annie "kept company" with Tom, who stood at his table and cut by thousands the shirts she made by dozens. She must have made them all the same, whoever held the keen knife, the price of them being highly necessary to her getting existed. For her this world's business consisted first in living; after that, in loving. He was like the sugar in her tea or the butter on her bread, not absolutely necessary, but very pleasant withal, and not to be relinquished without a pang. His tenderness flavored a life that must have been either flat or bitter without him, but which with him, was not only endurable, but hopeful contented, and sometimes blissfully happy. There was neither romance, nor rivalry, nor mystery in an affair so commonplace. Tom was "our Annie's steady company," and all the factory had, for two years, quietly accepted and understood the situation. Their attachment was like the constant flame of a burning lamp, rather than the wild, irregular glitter of love's phosphorescent light: some day they were to be married, and waited only, as such lovers do, for a favoring opportunity. Meanwhile she was satisfied with the daily nod and smile she looked for and received as she passed the cutter's table. She could even be proud of Tom; he was not only strong and handsome, but ambitious, master of his trade, and bound to make money by it. When he was head cutter, and the old folks comfortably settled, when Johnny was big enough to take the burden from her [illegible] begin to think of her simple trousseau. With such thoughts to speed her fingers she would sing softly to herself, and her cup of joy seemed too full to keep without sharing. There was something more than generous in the manner of her diffusing so small a sunbeam of happiness to her right hand and to her left. She befriended a new worker, [illegible], homesick and discouraged, with a kindly grace that sprung from her own glad heart, and imparted to her in a few days all those secrets whereby labor might be saved, and which it had taken her some years of toil to discover. When the crusty foreman of the pressers would no longer grant the privilege of making tea upon the laundry stove, our Annie found a way. Down upon her knees she went, and patiently boiled her water on a hot flat-iron, and shared her cupful with a comrade, and Hebe's immortal bosom never thrilled with more delight, hearing Olympian praises of her nectar, than did Annie's when there was a gathering of the clans, a rise in hot-irons, and the corner in boiling water being broken, little clouds of fragrant steam arose once more to that black and sooty heaven, the factory ceiling. When grimy and fatal oil spots, almost as tragic in the consequences as that "spot" which would not "out" for all the perfumed washings and invocations of Lady Macbeth, seared some poor timid worker with their ruinous ugliness, Annie would leave her seat, and with a drop of cold water and her magical touch restore the snowy whiteness of the fabric. When a neighbor's scissors grew dull, and funds for sharpening were low, she gave them an edge upon the neck of a glass bottle, counting her time well spent for a grateful "Oh, thank you!" and her needles, her oil, her soap to smooth a stubborn seam, or to hide the lime in weighted muslins, were ever at the service of others, who were not slow to avail themselves of her liberality. With a pieceworker, time is literally money, and though the power of fifty horses drove the wheels, it would have taken a concentration of selfishness not possessed by Annie to see any one, unaided, trying vainly to make living wages on shirts at fifty cents a dozen. To a more worldly-minded worker, who chided her good-nature, and reminded her of her own loss, she replied:

"But, dear heart, you don't want a voice from Heaven or handwriting on the wall to tell you what to do, when there's something to be done and nobody by but yourself to do it!"—a homely paraphrase of the noble maxim: Do the duty that lies nearest.

There was nothing in her akin to the priest or Levite who merely looked on or passed by; she had the sociable Samaritan way of crossing over and giving her two-pence unsolicited; and in the exclusive society of the other world—more exclusive and more just than this—little Annie and that good man may stand side by side with other kindly company whose merits have been overlooked or underrated.

It seemed impossible for harm to befall one so gentle and so safe in her obscurity. That Heaven's lightning should fell a heaven-defying tree or tower is in the course of nature; but that it should descend merely to root up and blast a simple violet, or strike a wild bird dead in ruthless violence, appeared to us who saw it like blindest fate or bitterest chance.

One frosty winter's morning a stranger came into the factory to work. Her white and awkward fingers fumbling nervously with the hands, her softer voice and finer dress, marked one who had descended a step or two to walk upon our level. A fierce tempest it must have been that drove her from her world down to this, so poor, so bare, so grinding. No nobleman sighed nor wealthy friend protested in her case, nor were there, apparently, any æsthetic bonnets to be made. Silent but assiduous, she took her place, and whatever she thought of the poor company in which she found herself, she breathed no word of it aloud. The absence of a lordly lover may have sealed her lips, for she never declared loudly of us, as did the bonnet maker, that we were guilty of a newly discovered sin: exclusiveness being new to us, at all events.

"They are poor silly things, most of them, and as full of prejudice and exclusiveness as any one," she avers. "I've never seen distinctions in society so awful as the distinctions between shop-girls and parlor-girls. I supposed once that all work-people were on a level, but really I had no idea of inequality till I came down to them."

Little Annie knew nothing of the criticisms flung at her class by one not born to labor, if there are any such, and had she known it, she would never in consequence have hidden Alice to keep her distance. She might have wondered greatly, as some of us did, what occupation "a parlor-girl" followed, that a chasm so awful yawned between her and a shop-girl, but factory-girls are on a plane still lower, perhaps, and as they live and eat and work together from dawn till dark, draw only one distinction, the natural one between vice and virtue, and recognize but one inequality, that which gives a skillful worker the advantage over one less deft. The stranger sat by Annie, whose dark eyes saw with instant pity how sorrowful and ill at ease she looked, and knowing every turn in labor's long lane, she would not see her go astray. Sympathy delicately expressed by encouraging smiles and a helpful hand soon won her confidence, and in a few weeks Annie was the acknowledged protector and friend of one her senior by a year at least. As one who nurses some poor transplanted flower sees it at last upon a sunny morning raise its drooping head and turn its leaves to the light, and knows that it will root and bloom, so Alice's self-appointed guardian rejoiced when she lifted her blue eyes to look around, and counted her work at the day's end, and gayly smiled to find the count so creditable.

"I shall really be able to pay my way," she cried, and, as an afterthought, "many thanks to you," while Annie told her how she might do better on the morrow, not dreaming that there are plants which twine and hug, and with their parasitic breath and clinging arms kill the brave sapling that nourishes them; and so, as in the nurse's tale, they gaed, and they gaed, till spring-time came again, and with the awakening buds and blossoms bitter wisdom came to one at least.

When Tom had looked, through the long winter hours, where duty and inclination bade him, to the face of his sweetheart, he saw the stranger's shy sweet glances, and slowly became aware that he looked twice as often as before; and if he did, he asked himself; who was to blame for it? He had not walked into temptation nor courted it; it met him suddenly with his feet set in honor's path, and assailed him there unarmed and unprepared. He could not look at Annie and not see Alice; he could not but compare this delicate porcelain, with the coarser ware which fate had assigned to his lot. He was ambitious of the best in all things, in his work and in his ways, and so, in love, his virtue had a fatal leaning toward vice. He saw a woman of finer mould than the woman who was waiting his word, and saw, too, that she recognized and approved of his ambition, could help him, being a step above him, as Annie never could, and be a credit to him. If she held him bound—well, he had made a fatal mistake for himself; but if she held him to it, he would not swerve from the fulfillment of a plain duty; he had no more intention of defrauding little Annie than he had of turning soldier or sailor, or otherwise changing his trade. Until the day when Annie herself saw the thoughts of his inmost soul laid bare by an accident that he had no power to avert, he kept his secret, or thought he kept it, as well as is in the power of man to keep such a secret, which at best is not very well.

Was it by coincidence merely, or was it by design, that one day, when they were all free at dinner hour to draw new breath or stretch their cramped limbs, a merry singer gayly sung her "Courage Song," low at first, and then louder, with her bright eyes fixed on Annie?

"And if heaven, bending over,
Should turn black instead of blue,
If my own, my own true-lover
Should prove false instead of true.
Do you think for the untrue one I would cry?
No; I'd laugh and get a new one—that would I?"

"I hate that song," cried Annie, "it has a broken heart in it."

"What would you do, then?" asked the singer, while her companions glanced compassionately at Annie. "You can't die just because you want to, you know."

"Then I would live to weary Heaven for justice," she said, with sudden fire, and rose to resume work, wondering somewhat at the earnest eyes that looked into hers, but more at Alice's averted face, crimson to the forehead. Days after, when the very air seemed to bring her ill omens, she thought of it. In a path where the roses of love and pleasure grow thick on every side, a wayward hand reaching over might pluck a bud or two and the loss remain unnoticed, but in a life that is barren and desolate except for the greenness of a single cherished plant, the jealous eye detects every change, and after some months of painful doubting, Annie found that the blossoms were strangely blighted: not in a single night, but slowly, surely, as if the secret dews that nourished them were gradually withheld; their perfume and their color went, and all that ancient sweetness, and as they dropped their dry leaves one by one through her trembling fingers, she knew that they were dead. Then the sun vanished, and the heavens frowned like brazen walls, from which she hid her face in terror, mourning like the Arabian emir of old: "Wherefore is light given unto him that is in misery, and life unto the bitter of soul; which long for death, but it cometh not, and dig for it more than for hid treasures; which rejoice exceedingly and are glad when they can find the grave?" Wandering bewildered in a darkened land, like one in an evil dream, she could not but know who had stolen her lover from her, and it was in those days that she took to discussing theological questions in her own mind with unwonted vehemence as she stitched, not that they were a diversion or recreation, but only because she could not help it. She was shocked to find that she was fast growing wicked in the hard certainty that God would punish all falsehood and deceit, and that it was any comfort to think so. The poor little violet whose leaves had reached up toward the sky, drawn thither by love's soft sunlight, had still its dark root in the black earth, and if Annie again turned Heavenward, it was, as she said, to weary the saints for justice. Did God mean to punish her by so sore a trial? Like righteous Job, she felt she had not merited her suffering; that it was not the natural consequence of her own acts, but a frightful calamity that had befallen her, and she prayed that she might die. Then, in the fierce reaction of jealous passion, she hoped that they might be punished for their perfidy, not hereafter, but here, where she could see and know; and still the everlasting wheels whirled around as she stitched, and her whole life whirled around with them. That one prayer, at least, God put into her power to fulfill, or leave unfulfilled, for herself.

She still wore upon her finger the circlet of gold that Tom had placed there; and though they were estranged—that was undeniable—they had not quarreled, nor spoken the words which must part them. That he would never do, she was sure; but she would prove it, for the strain of suspense was greater than she could bear. Alice, glancing sideways, measured her with the bonnet-maker's measure, which may from her level, be correct. They are poor, silly things, most of them, this one especially so—poor, for she lost her lover; silly in that she had not chosen a truer friend: but Alice never dreamed of the storm raging beneath that calm exterior; nor did Tom, who wondered at her calmness: while she, under her eyelids, saw, and felt too, his bright, flashing, cruel knife crunching and dividing with unerring certainty from morning till night, till it seemed as if her heart lay bare beneath the stroke. She would not stay to be tortured so; she would end it now.

Rising from her seat, she folded the work she had finished, and carried it to be inspected; she must pass Tom's table on her way to the room below, and she had resolved to lay the ring before him without a word: she could not breathe till that was done. But some one stood in her path. Lifting her eyes, she saw Alice, whom she had not missed from her side. Though her back was turned, Annie could see the flush on her fair cheek, her pretty, shy face raised to his, while she waited for the bands he was cutting. They did not notice her, nor even see her as she passed, crying aloud in her soul for vengeance upon them. She loitered by the inspector's desk, and returned with leisurely step, carrying her new work in her arms: she had slipped the ring from her finger, and wrapped it in a scrap of clean muslin; the little package burned her palm; she could not go back to her seat with her purpose unaccomplished. Lingering by the door, she looked within. How absorbed they were. She waited with as much patience as her sorely tried soul could summon, for he could not cut bands forever, though he evidently prolonged the task to its utmost extent: nor could Alice tarry many minutes more, for all her dainty counting them, and taking them up one by one with her white and slender fingers, and doubting that she had enough until he counted them again. Annie lost not a glance nor a smile; she would, woman-like, have gleaned them all though purgatorial pains were in them; and so they stood, unconscious of the flashing eyes that watched them.

Could she ever forget those minutes which seemed unending, or the long room photographed forever on her memory? Shining beneath his table, the swiftly revolving shaft gleamed in the waxing light, twisting noiselessly, like a mighty snake in pain, turning, now visible, now in shadow, as it had turned for years before. Close to the floor, and projecting beyond the end of the table, the treacherous rod spun round till the air was blurred with its motion, as it had spun harmless for months. Once they had imprisoned it in a box, which, carelessly broken, had never been replaced. No one could be caught by it, or fail to see it, who walked toward it, for its draught alone was warning to one who approached it, and who ever walked backward in a place like that?

Alice, perfidious Alice! Moving as if to depart, she saw—they both saw—the pale face, the bended brows, the disquieting eyes flashing upon them in astonished observation, and startled into guilty recoil, she took that one step backward. Something in that dreadful look reminded her of death and judgment; while Annie, in mental misery, was madly defending vengeance.

Then for answer she saw her enemy sway and totter, pulled backward toward the shaft, heard her sharp cry, and understood. The deadly draught had caught but a wandering thread of her flounce, then the dress itself, and last in a gigantic [illegible] from which neither her own strength nor Tom's could release her, they writhed together, while her shrieks paralyzed those who, having lost presence of mind, were powerless to assist her. He had sprung to her at her first cry, knife in hand, but in her unreasoning terror she threw herself upon him, pinioned his arms, and clung to him, though he shouted and entreated in agony. "For your life, for your life, Alice, let me go!"

She heard nothing, saw nothing; her head was on his breast, her arms around him, and the knife fell from his grasp. Of no avail to brace himself against the table, and hold her till the muscles stood out upon his skin like whip-cords; his one-man power against that of fifty horses—which dragged them to the floor, had them down upon their knees, will grind them to powder unless some angel intervene. She who stood in the doorway, looking with horror upon her answered prayer, saw in his face the love he felt for Alice above the agony of his struggling, and it had not flashed into any mind but hers—hers—in all that confused and flying crowd, the one thing that will save them. Had she prayed for vengeance? With tenfold vehemence she cries aloud: "Now God forgive me!" and looks about her. They have shouted to each other, the lookers-on, to stop the engine; but it is in the basement, and there is now but the twinkling of an eye, an inappreciable fragment of time, between life and a most dreadful dream. A woman has but two weapons, the use of which comes to her as naturally as if she had been born with them in her hands. One is her scissors, the other her broom. With the first she does all her carpentering; with the other she goes forth to warfare or defense: and a broom now stood beside little Annie at the doorway, where a careless sweeper had left it. The broad belt of the engine was directly over her head, whirling upon its wheel. With the end of the handle of her improvised weapon she took unerring aim, and flung off the belt, and with the consistency of her sex, having cried to the heavens for justice, would none of it when offered, but turned aside into a corner, and wept with gratitude for their deliverance.

Nay, more; with trembling hand she wrapped her own cloak around the shoulders of her enemy, whose dress was but a rope of twisted rags; with her own handkerchief she bathed the pale forehead of the foe she had rescued from the jaws of death, bruised and bleeding, sick and faint with the shock, but otherwise unharmed, and held her in her arms till they brought a carriage in which to send her home, then relinquished her place to one whose right no one disputed, and the factory knew Alice no more.

Close by his knife she found her ring, and in the silence of her own home she wrapped it anew, and sent it to them, and took up her life, desolate indeed, its one power having perished, but not barren of humbler blooming, sweet and comforting in after days. The tenderest consideration, the most affectionate solicitude, and the unfailing kindness of her companions were Annie's, though life had changed, and she with it. We who knew her well, loved her well: and saw in her dark eyes something that was better than beauty; while looking on her patient forehead we felt it better a thousand-fold to be Abel than Cain.

And they pass backward and forward, at dawn and at dusk, by thousands, such girls, each with her own heart and her own story: "but," saith Esculapius, in quiet scorn, "they are as much alike as if a grain of corn that had been ground and bolted had tried to individualize itself by a special narrative."

Which sounds as if the learned doctor and the casual maker of æsthetic bonnets had shaken hands, and agreed upon it that no good thing could come out of Nazareth.—Harper's Magazine.

The Care of Farm Implements.

Every farmer who employs transient laborers learns the importance of having every farm implement put in its proper place every night, or before, if the job be finished before night. If tool be left where last used by one who is not constantly employed, when wanted, the one who used it last not being present, it will be very difficult to find it. It is important that the farmer himself should be careful to keep all farm implements in their proper places for if he is careless, it is very certain that his hired help will imitate him, and in this way the implements of the farm will be so scattered that it will be very difficult to find them, unless it is remembered where they were last used.

When tools are left scattered over the farm, there is not only a great loss of time in looking after them, but often when found they are not in condition to do good work easily, even if they are not decayed so as to break when put to use. As we ride through the country we see many costly farm implements that have been left in the field, to be housed at the farmer's convenience, which evidently does not come until months after. This is not economy, for most of farm implements that are now in use are of a character to be seriously injured by being exposed to either rain or sunshine, and when exposed to both it requires but a short time to render them nearly worthless.

Few buildings on the farm are more important than a tool-house: this should be large enough to hold all of the tools, and if there be room enough in addition to make the simple repairs on the implements it will be a great convenience.

There are portions of almost every farm implement that should be kept well-painted, and other portions that should be well-oiled: there are things that every farmer can do when the weather is not suitable to work out in the field. Many implements will last twice as long if kept well-oiled and painted, and yet the cost of doing it is so trifling that it is not worth considering.

The introduction of improved farm implements has so largely increased the value of the tools that are necessary to run a moderate size farm that it is an important question as to how to take care of them so as to make them last the longest.—Massachusetts Ploughman.

"The Saving Remnant" in Syria.

I can not conscientiously say good-bye to my Arab enemies without making acknowledgment. Before leaving Syria I encountered a single solitary instance of the unmercenary spirit, which will remain a perpetual green spot in the desert of my Levantine memories. I was riding through a field with Mr. Floyd, and being overtaken by thirst, we stopped to get a drink of water from a peasant at work garnering wheat. The water we sucked out of a goat skin by means of a hollow reed, and it was delicious. I tossed the man a half franc, which he took, bowed politely and said:

"You are quite welcome to the water without paying anything."

At first I staggered under this revelation of unexpected unselfishness. Then a tide of home memories swept over my bosom, and I wept. I had almost forgotten that benevolence, courtesy and generosity exist in the world. The circumstance, little and simple though it was, carried me back over the seas and deserts to that land where such acts of hospitality are not phenomenal; where, indeed, people sometimes refuse to take money at all for a draught of cold water. Alas! that in the country where first was proclaimed the blessedness of giving the refreshing beverage of nature in His name, such a circumstance should now be so exceptional as to cause marveling! I do not want to represent the race so totally bereft of the gentler graces that pertain sometimes to the Occidental humanity, and, therefore, feel that this acknowledgment is due.

Ventilation.

If two persons are to occupy a sleeping-room together for a night, let them be weighed upon retiring, and then again in the morning, and they will find that the actual weight is at least one pound less in the morning. Frequently there will be a loss of two or more pounds, and the average loss throughout the year will be more than a pound. That is, during the night there is a loss of a pound of matter which has gone off from the body, partly through the lungs and partly through the pores of the skin. The escaped material is carbonic acid gas and decayed animal matter, or poisonous exhalations. This is diffused through the air in part, and in part absorbed by the bedclothes. If a single ounce of wood or cotton be burned in a room, it will so completely saturate the air with smoke that one can hardly breathe, though there can be but an ounce of foreign matter in the air. If an ounce of cotton be burned every half hour during the night the air will be continuously saturated with smoke, unless there is an outlet for it. Now the sixteen ounces of smoke thus formed are far less dangerous or poisonous than the sixteen ounces of exhalations from the lungs and bodies of two persons who have lost a pound in weight during the eight hours of sleeping, for while the dry smoke is mainly taken into the lungs, the damp odors from the body are absorbed both into the lungs and into the pores of the entire body.

Nothing stronger can be said to prove the necessity for ventilation in bedrooms, and of thoroughly airing the sheets, coverlets, and mattresses in the morning before putting them into the form of a neatly-made bed. Children more than any others suffer from bad air. The restless tossing and muttering, the disturbed sleep, all give strongest evidence of the effects of bad air. This is further confirmed by the dull eye, stupid expression, languid movements, and unrefreshed feeling which are visible in the morning. Every house should be well ventilated, the body sufficiently covered with warm, loose, suitable clothing, and be sure the sleep will be sound and refreshing, and will be manifested in the bright eye and vigorous growth and action.—Cleveland Leader.

Some Causes of Bad Flour.

The general belief among the masses of people to-day is that the millers are to blame altogether for so much bad flour. But those who have given the subject their careful attention find that nine farmers out of ten are the chief cause themselves; and we frequently hear the remark, that flour ain't as good now as it was fifteen or twenty years ago. I, too, agree with them to a certain extent, but what is the cause of this inferior flour? First, let us take a common sense view of the matter. Do the farmers of to-day take the pains with their wheat that they did fifteen or twenty years ago? I answer no. Some may wish to know the difference; so I will explain: Then the farmer let his wheat get thoroughly ripe before cutting—put from ten to twelve sheaves in a shock, let it cure out, and then stacked and let it go through a sweat before threshing. Thus the grain was thoroughly matured and in its natural state. But now we find farmers (and plenty of them) who cut their wheat entirely too green, and often just after a rain, before the wheat has dried off—tie it up in this condition, and put from fifteen to thirty bundles in a shock, and as is often the case, thresh before it is dry or had time to go through its proper process; then take it to the mill and expect a choice grade of flour, and if they fail to get it, swear the miller is of no account, or else cheated him out of his wheat and all the time the wheat should have been left in the straw to thoroughly mature. Now, this is a common occurrence, and a growing evil on the part of most farmers. There is no doubt but wheat will dry out more in the straw in five days, than it will in ten or fifteen days in the bulk; and moreover, such a grade of wheat will not command a good price, because it is shriveled, dark and musty, and all the improved mill machinery and gradual reduction systems in the world cannot turn out a good grade of flour from such wheat.—Fincastle (Va.) Herald.

Weaning and Feeding Young Pigs.

Pigs should gradually be weaned, and fed in a separate pen. If kept in a field, make a small inclosure for them. When managed in this way, pigs will continue growing when the sow fails to afford sufficient milk. Overfeeding at weaning time, is injurious. The pigs gorge themselves and become ill-shaped. They should be fed a little, six times a day. Pigs with disordered stomachs can not thrive. Inflammation of the bowels is a common disorder, and is caused by over-eating, unwholesome food, and exposure to cold. Food much fermented will induce inflammation of the stomach and bowels. This is the cause of much mortality among hogs fed with slops from hotels, asylums, etc., where there is a large amount of fermented material mixed together in the swill-vats. The same condition may follow the feeding of much corn, with but little exercise in the open air. When there is access to green food and the soil, young pigs may be fed corn more largely. People now wish more lean pork, and the skilled swine-growers should recognize this desire and act accordingly. The more high-priced pork they can sell, the more profit they will realize. Fine wheat middlings make the best ground feed for young pigs.

The form of the trough is important. It should be so constructed that the pigs can not get into it with their dirty feet. Nail slats across the trough so that the pigs can not crowd each other. Feeding on the ground is shiftless and wasteful, especially corn or small grain. Always place the dry food on a platform in a high, dry spot. The platform should be large enough to accommodate the pigs without crowding. The grain may be kept on the platform by a narrow siding. The platform should be frequently swept clean. When not in use, it may be turned up edgewise to prevent decay. The bottom boards are nailed to stout scantlings, which rest upon flat stones.—F. D. Curtis, in the American Agriculturist.

New and Stale Bread.

The difference between new and stale bread is familiar enough, but the nature of the difference is by no means so commonly understood. It is generally supposed to be a simple result of mere drying. That this is not a true explanation may be easily proved by repeating the experiments of Boussingault, who placed a very stale loaf (six days old) in an oven for an hour, during which time it was, of course, being further dried; but, nevertheless, it came out as a new loaf. He found that, during the six days, while becoming stale, it only lost one per cent. of its weight by drying, and that during the one hour in the oven it lost three and one-half per cent. in becoming new and apparently more moist. By using an air-tight case instead of an ordinary oven, he repeated the experiment several times in succession on the same piece of bread, making it alternately stale and new each time.—American Miller.

—Near Turin, Italy, a young woman poisoned herself last month on the marriage of her younger sister from fear of becoming an old maid.

HOME AND FARM.

—To cure weak eyes, bathe your eyes daily in salt water; not salt enough to cause a smarting sensation.—Detroit Post.

—The gravy made from roast lamb is much improved in flavor if a few thin slices of bacon are laid over and under the roast.—Troy Times.

—Experience shows that a razor will act more efficiently if dipped in boiling water before being used, but the philosophic reason of the fact is not obvious.

Try and get a little green grass around your home. Nothing cures the ill mind so quickly as verdure. It is manifestly wrong and unnatural, too, to rear children on a playground made of stone-flagging or Nicholson pavement.—Current.

—The farmers of the Ohio Valley who have old corn to spare, and there are always a large number of them, propose to feed their hogs the coming winter on wheat. They think that wheat will yield them better when turned into pork than if sold in its crude state at the current market prices.—Cleveland Leader.

—Where grain is drawn to the barn somewhat damp farmers often open doors and windows to allow a current of outside air to dry it. This is generally a mistake, especially if ventilation is continued during the night. The heated air from the grain is cooled rapidly, and this causes moisture to fall upon the top of the mow almost equal sometimes to a shower of rain.—Prairie Farmer.

—There need be no difficulty in plowing under the tallest weeds or rye if a log chain is attached to the plow so as form a loop and draw the tops down to the ground. Cutting the weeds before plowing only cumbers the surface with troublesome rubbish, which is the more difficult to turn under, as it is not held to the ground by roots, but is free to be moved along in front of the plow.—Exchange.

—Cucumber soup is very easily made. All the ingredients required are one quart of stock, yelks of two eggs, a teacupful of cream and a small lump of butter. Put the butter into a saucepan, and after slicing a large cucumber very thin and scattering salt over it, put the slices into the saucepan and brown them slightly. Then pour the stock over them. Mix the eggs with the cream just before serving.—N. Y. Post.

—Rye is usually sown on the poorest land, given the least care and the least manure of any crop on the farm. This is at least true in sections where wheat is grown, as the wheat is considered most valuable. No wonder that with such treatment rye should have a bad reputation and be called the poor farmer's crop. But with good treatment, rye will respond as favorably as any other grain. Some who have manured rye very heavily for ensilage, and allowed the portion not eaten to ripen its seed, have found surprising results. One such farmer last year grew thirty-eight bushels per acre. Notwithstanding the heavy manuring, the rye stood up till harvest, while wheat growing so heavy straw would be broken down and the grain a failure.—Ohio Farmer.

New Needlework.

The artistic works of the Japanese, only of late made familiar to us by means of exhibitions and the like, have on account of their novelty and peculiarity an especial attraction for the spectator. For instance, the Japanese applique embroidery shows the highest completion, and now that it has become marketable its sphere of use for various purposes is considerably enlarged. Used with other embroidery or paintings this applique is excellent for decorative purposes, such as ornamenting fire and wall screens, cushions, borders. Wonderful flowers, birds and insects in dazzling, well shaded colors, sometimes a faithful copy of nature, otherwise most fantastical, form a charming combination. The separate pieces of embroidery are worked over cardboard and secured on squares. We select one of the smaller ones, with all sorts of animals on it, for our illustration. A piece of silk laid over it and an original cover of stuff like paper, the well-known style of which with its Japanese colors, is quite a study, protects the embroidery from the air and dust. These squares may now be purchased in large shops. It has now become so general to have table linen with a colored border, that, especially for company, one can scarcely imagine a handsomely arranged table without this agreeable ornament.

Although the interwoven red and blue borders suffice for daily use, we see for grand occasions table cloths and napkins adorned with the most artistic needlework, which, since all possible tones have been produced in fast-colored cotton, often display a most variegated arrangement. In houses where the plain white linen from the grandmother's stories is still in use, modern taste is brought to bear in the long, narrow crumb cloths laid over the large table cloth. But sometimes the careful housewife likes to have the ornamental border on the tea and coffee cloth and napkins produced by her own industry.

The embroidery is done with fast-colored blue cotton in tambour stitch. The cloth has a hemstitched border about one and one-half inches broad; this is followed by a narrow row of embroidery rather more than an inch deep, then comes a space, and after that another row of embroidery six inches broad. Both these border rows are executed in renaissance style. The shields in the four corners of the cloth are intended to be alternately filled up with the date and the owner's initials. The napkins have the same narrow border, but only the shields in two opposite corners.—The Season.

The Charm of the Rose.

There is probably no inanimate object in the world more beautiful than a delicately-tinted rose. There is certainly nothing else which combines such beauty of form and color with such exquisite delicacy of texture and such delicious perfume. I can think of nothing to equal a half open flower of La France. I choose La France because of its perfume, of its color. The perfume is certainly unequaled; powerful, yet never heavy, it seems the very breath of summer. Then look into the rose's heart! Was ever such glowing rosy rose seen elsewhere? Like the perfume, it is powerful, yet always tender and delicate. As we look into the flower's cup we see it all aglow with this brilliant, tender, vibrating red, but the outer part, where the petals turn back, is of a milky whiteness, a satiny smoothness. The inner petals are small and ranged round the cup, the outer ones are long and somewhat irregular, making a very attractive shape.

While everyone acknowledges the beauty of the rose and recognizes its color and its perfume, very few indeed know truly why it is so charming. The charm seems to me to lie, in great part, in the fine silk texture of the petals and in their translucency. No other flowers have these in such marked degree and it is these qualities which make the contrast between the cool, clear rim and outside of the cup and its glowing heart. The other charm is that which is the most felt when we look down into the depths of the half-open bud. It is the charm which it shares with every beautiful thing which is "hidden yet half revealed."—George B. Lambdin, in Art Union.

Missing Baggage.

Many vexatious delays which take place in the transfer of trunks are due to the negligence of the company which carries them.

The agent of a baggage-express asked a lady in the cars if she had any baggage to be delivered. "Yes," she said, "but I had great trouble finding one of my trunks, and I can't have this one lost."

The agent assuring her that it would be delivered safely, inquired where she wanted it delivered.

"To the steamer Arago," he answered.

"The Arago!" said he, "are you sure it is the Arago? That sails at three o'clock."

"Yes, that is right."

The trunk was delivered, but the lady did not appear, and at three o'clock it started for France on board the Arago.

When the agent returned to the office he found a policeman and the lady waiting for him. "This lady has entered a complaint against us," said the express manager.

"I have not seen that trunk yet!" exclaimed the lady, with much indignation.

"I don't think you will see it either, for some time," answered the man. "That trunk has gone to France. Don't you remember I asked you the second time about the steamer? You said the steamer Arago."

"I know it, but I meant Argo."

This was a little steamboat which crossed to New Jersey from near the French steamer's wharf. It cost ten dollars and six weeks of time to get that trunk back to its owner.—Youth's Companion.

A Dude's Device.

The ways of ye dude are devious, and they have by no manner of means been exhausted in print yet. At a german the other night a practice they affect, which was hitherto unknown to me, received illustration.

I sat chatting with a golden-haired young lady in a quiet corner. A well-developed member of the dude genus approached.

"My deah Miss Clawa," said he, with an idiotic leer, "I see a hair on your shoulder; may I—ah—have it?"

"As it's nothing I prize very highly," she replied, "you may." The dude clutched the prize with his glittering, monkey-like claws, carefully wound it over his finger and then deposited it in a Russia card-case. "But what in the world do you intend to do with it, Augustus?" queried the young lady.

"He, he, he!" simpered the dude, and his fishy eye assumed a cunning look; "you see, Miss Clawa, m-m-my girl is a brunette. I—I'll lay your light hair on the lappel of my coat, and—and—he, he, he!—it will make her as jealous as can be, don't you know?"

My fair companion said nothing, but she looked whole encyclopedias.—N. Y. Star.

The Life is the Blood—Prevent Disease—Surgery the Last Resort—A Telling Letter.

It is conceded that DR. DAVID KENNEDY'S FAVORITE REMEDY, of Rondout, N. Y., is the most effective preparation now in use for all diseases arising from a foul or impure state of circulation. Hence it is more than likely that if the writer of the following letter had habitually taken "FAVORITE REMEDY" ten years ago he would never have suffered from Cancer.

PITTSFIELD, Mass., March 22, 1884.

Dr. D. Kennedy, Rondout, N. Y.:

DEAR SIR: About six years ago I was obliged to resort to external treatment for the removal of a cancerous growth on my lip. On my return home, I became sensible that my blood needed a thorough cleansing. My whole system, too, required toning up. While casting about for the best medicine to do this, your "FAVORITE REMEDY" was so highly commended in my hearing, that I resolved to try it. I did so, and the result surprised me. It was effected so quickly and completely. I soon got over the depression produced by the operation, and since the "FAVORITE REMEDY" which I have continued to take in small doses, has kept me in such health and strength as I never had before, nor expected to have. It is the best blood purifier in the world. I am sure of that. Yours etc., MATTHEW FARRELL,

BOONE COUNTY RECORDER.

VOLUME IX. BURLINGTON, KY., WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 8, 1884. NUMBER 49.

TOPICS OF THE DAY.

THERE are twenty-eight blind clergymen in the Church of England.

OF the 60,000 Jews in New York City it is stated that not one is a bar-tender.

BOILED peanuts are a favorite dish with the Chinese, who cook them beneath water to extract the oil.

THE hair is now arranged by young ladies in a coil on the crown of the head, with little curls at the neck and a curled bang.

WITHIN thirteen years the number of slaves in Brazil has been reduced one-half, or from 2,500,000 in 1871 to 1,200,000 in 1884.

THE late Samuel W. Swett, of Boston, left an estate appraised at $1,421,110, of which the sum of $800,000 goes toward charitable objects.

A SAMPLE of American cheese in London, being analyzed, proved to contain no milk nor any of its derivatives. Its chief ingredients were lard and coloring matter. Who made it?

THERE are no large areas of corn to-day that frost would injure. Old corn has been consumed closer than usual, and there will be no glut of corn on the market for some months at least.

IN New York City there are stands at the hotels where umbrellas may be had at twenty-five cents a day. Those who rent the umbrellas are obliged to deposit their cost.

THE accounts of coachmen eloping with rich employer's daughters is becoming monotonous. To vary this elopment business, how would it do for some bank President's daughter to elope with the cashier?

WASHINGTON IRVING, whose good gray quill shed the sort of indelible ink that charms the children of men, stands on the books of the United States Treasury as a defaulter—to the amount of of three cents.

THIRTEEN years ago three physicians decided that Colonel Corcoran, of Washington, could live but a short time. He has assisted at the funerals of all three of the doctors, and is now in vigorous health.

A LARGE painting of Mrs. James K. Polk, which was presented by the ladies of Tennessee, has been hung in the Green Room of the White House as a companion piece to the portrait of Mrs. R. B. Hayes.

THE American Hebrew notes the fact that Jews in Russia actually own and work more than 1,250,000 acres of land, and rent from the crown nearly 1,500,000 acres more, so the Jew does sometimes invest in land.

SIX millions of people are estimated to have died of starvation in India during the last seven years. The soil destined for their support was employed in raising opium, with which to kill sixteen millions of Chinese.

THE largest room in the world, under one roof and unbroken by pillars, is at St. Petersburg. It is six hundred and twenty feet long, by one hundred and fifty in breadth. Twenty thousand wax tapers are required to light it.

AN earthworm six feet five inches long has been sent from the Cape Colony, Africa, to the London Zoo. A fish story of corresponding size would be very desirable property for the American angler.

KEROSENE oil and milk, in the proportion of one quart of the former to five quarts of the latter, makes a wash which will destroy the apple-tree bark louse. It will also kill the striped cucumber and squash bug, and many other pests. It can be applied with a large syringe.

MUCH of the discomfort of wearing glasses, says a New York optican, comes from the fact that the proper distance between the eyes is not maintained. If spectacles are worn with the frames too narrow, the focus of one eye conflicts with that of the other, and an effect is produced very similar to that of being cross-eyed.

A BACO-SHAKESPEAREAN Society has just been organized in New York, to be composed of persons who do not believe that Shakespeare wrote the plays and poems to which his name is generally attached. One hundred persons attended the preliminary meeting, and it is proposed to hold regular meetings.

IN France, bitter willow is used in flavoring and coloring tobacco. Its use is vehemently denounced by the doctors as causing softening of the brain.

ELOPEMENTS would not be so bad could they be confined to families consisting of a houseful of marriageable daughters. For instance, there are parents with a number of eligible girls on hand who no doubt would welcome an elopement occasionally, regardless of the eloper, be he a coachman or a European prince in disguise. These elopers, however, generally select for their victims some rich man's only daughter.

SELLING oleomargarine for genuine butter in New York is likely to bring trouble upon some of the thrifty butter merchants of that city. The Deputy Dairy Commissioner of New York has been actively engaged in ferreting out those merchants who have been engaged in the above business, and eight arrests have already been made. The parties will be vigorously prosecuted. The wholesale butter merchants are giving their warmest support to the movement.

THE CHOLERA.

Estimated that the Plague has Cost Italy £1,250,000.

The Deaths from the Disease in Italy up to Date, 10,800.

LONDON October 5.—The record of the week seems to justify the belief that the spine of the cholera epidemic has been broken, and that its disappearance is now only a question of weeks. It was ten weeks ago last Thursday that the first fatal case of cholera was reported in Italy, and the deaths have thus far made an average of nearly a thousand weekly. The cholera has cost the Italian Government a million and a quarter of pounds. If it lasts a few months longer it will cost them more than three millions, and nine to ten thousand bills have been protested in Naples. The mortality in Naples among the better classes has been more than it has been at any other visitation of recent times. It includes eleven priests, a score of nuns and as many doctors. The temporary orphan asylum at Naples is crowded with children, and hundreds of others are privately cared for, Lady Otwey having eleven in a small orphanage of her own. According to the official and municipal figures there have been 9,512 deaths in Italy up to date, but people who ought to know say that in the terrible month of September fully 1,200 died at Naples alone, and a Roman paper estimates the total deaths up to Wednesday at 10,800. Out of sixty provinces in the Italian mainland, forty-four have been infected, but only thirteen have had more than thirty deaths, and only eight have had more than one hundred deaths. In France the pest is still declining weekly, and there seems to be no reason to fear that the isolated deaths in the Departments of Correse and Lot mean a dangerous spread.

Honors to Howgate Cancelled.

WASHINGTON, October 5.—The lack of mail facilities in the Arctic regions led the Greely party to do some curious things. When they left in 1881, nothing was known of Howgate's embezzlements. Neither relief expedition reaching them, they heard nothing of it. In naming their new discoveries, they naturally remembered the officer of the Signal Service. One body of water they called Howgate Lake; a point of land was dubbed Cape Howgate; a high mountain, Mount Howgate, and so on, the now famous fugitive coming in for most of the honors in this line because of the zeal he had shown in the work of Arctic exploration while connected with the Signal Corps. These designations for the geographical discoveries were all written upon the maps and charts brought back by the survivors. Naturally enough, the discovery of the fact recently created some consternation, which changed to amusement when it became known about the Signal office. By direction of General Hazen, the offending name was erased in every place it appeared upon the maps, and the names of other officers of the Signal Corps substituted.

From Egypt.

ALEXANDRIA, October 4.—The merchants and bankers of this city have presented a memorial to the Government asking that vigorous measures be adopted to suppress the brigands who are scouring the provinces pillaging property and firing upon people.

CAIRO, October 4.—Advices from Dongola state that the Mahdi of that place, in an interview with Colonel Stewart, guaranteed that the villages along the route of the Gordon relief expedition would supply the expedition with provisions and camels.

Panic in a Procession.

PITTSBURG, PENN., October 4.—There was a Republican torch-light parade in Allegheny City to-night. A carriage containing four members of the Lawrenceville Carriage Corps, the finest organization in the parade, was passing the corner of Federal and Robinson streets, the horses became frightened, and dashed into a dense crowd of spectators on the pavement. One man had four ribs broken and three children were badly injured. There was a terrible panic until the horses were secured.

The Congressional Library.

WASHINGTON, October 5.—The Congressional Library, while primarily for the use of Congress, is always, as the property of the Nation, open to all the people without any ticket of admission, and derives its support, directly or indirectly, from the Nation. It is, perhaps, the largest storehouse of human knowledge and of valuable materials for the use of scholars to be found in the United States.

Duties Abolished.

MADRID, October 5.—King Alfonso will to-day sign a degree abolishing the duties levied by Spain upon Cuban sugars creating differential flag duties upon Spanish and West India sugars imported into Spain in foreign vessels, increasing duties to all foreign sugars, and discriminating in favor of sugar from nations having treaties and against nations without, like England and America.

A Dastardly Act.

TOPEKA, KAN., October 5.—A freight train on the Santa Fe Railroad was wrecked near Emporia Junction, Kan., Saturday night. The fireman, named Scott, was killed, the engineer injured, and the engine and nine cars wrecked. A crosstie had been placed on the track, evidently for the purpose of wrecking a passenger train that preceded the freight, and by some means escaped the destruction. A reward of $1,000 has been offered for the arrest of the miscreants. It is believed the Governor will offer an additional reward of $500.

In the First Degree.

FORT WAYNE, IND., October 5.—At Decatur, Ind., the past ten days have been occupied in court there trying Charles Warst, as an accomplice of Fred Richards for the murder of Amos Bockasto. The jury went out at eight o'clock last night, and this morning at two brought in a verdict of guilty of murder in the first degree, and assessed his punishment at imprisonment for life. It will be remembered that Richards was sentenced to be hung, and is in jail here awaiting a new trial.

Would Not Treat.

JERSEY CITY, October 5.—George Bates, aged forty-five, a ship carpenter, died this morning from the effects of injuries inflicted last night by a party of roughs known as the "Bridge ——." Bates had refused a demand for money to purchase beer. Several of the gang were arrested.

Hatton Appointed.

WASHINGTON, October 4.—Frank Hatton has been designated by the President to act as Postmaster General for ten days from to-day.

Runaway Accident.

CINCINNATI, October 4.—Annie Frickhoff, a twelve-year-old girl, was run over and killed by a runaway horse to-day.

THE CHINESE WAR.

Firing From the Heights, the Chinese Retiring—Two Engagements in Tonquin—The Mongolians Driven Back With Great Loss.

PARIS, October 4.—The Telegraphe states that it has received information that the Government intends shortly to recall Admiral Courbet from China, and has therefore instructed him to destroy the Chinese fleet in the event of the capture of Kelung failing to cause China to submit to the French demands. General DeLisle sends a dispatch stating that hearing that Chinese troops, between Bacle and Langson were moving forward he took the measures necessary to drive them back to their gunboats. A brilliant engagement ensued, four thousand Chinese troops being pitted against him. Commander Cholie, of the Massne, was killed in the fight. When the dispatch was sent the Chinese were being steadily driven back, and had lost heavily. Admiral Courbet telegraphed from Kelung, under date of yesterday, as follows: "I commenced operations against Kelung Wednesday by occupying the height of St. Clement. The Chinese forces, after a fairly warm engagement, Wednesday night evacuated two of their works west of the height, which we afterward occupied. I am now fortifying them, and shall operate on Saturday against their works eastward of the height. Our loss was four killed, one missing and thirteen wounded. The Chinese loss is estimated at from eighty to one hundred killed and from two hundred to three hundred wounded. Admiral Lespes commenced an attack on Tamsui on Thursday, and will occupy that port if possible.

LONDON, October 4.—Advices from Hanoi to-day state that the gunboats Mousqueton, Massue and Hache, while cruising in advance of a party which was reconnoitering in the valley of Lochnam, were attacked by Chinese regulars. One French officer was killed and thirty men wounded. Reinforcements have already arrived at the scene of the encounter, and others, under the command of General Negriar, have left Hanoi.

HONG KONG, October 4.—A serious riot among coolies occurred here yesterday. Some boatmen refused to convey the cargo to French ships, and a general strike followed, resulting in disorder. The populace maltreated the police, who endeavored to preserve order. The military finally quieted the disturbance. Several natives were killed and a number wounded. The excitement has now subsided.

SHANGHAI, October 4.—It is reported that natives in Shangtung killed an English colporteur named Bagnall.

No Hope for Butler.

COLUMBIA CITY, IND., October 4.—Governor Porter spent the day here for the purpose of getting at the real sentiment of the community regarding the sentence of Charles Butler, who followed his wife to Pierceton, Kosciusko County, from Columbus, O., and deliberately murdered her by shooting her down with a revolver, for which he is to be hanged next Friday. He found the feeling very bitter and will not interfere. He had an interview with Butler in the afternoon. The scaffold on which O'Donnell was recently hanged at Fort Wayne will be used.

Improvement in the Iron Trade.

ST. LOUIS, October 5.—A dispatch from Chattanooga, Tenn., says the iron interest is reviving in the South. The Woodstock (Ala.) Iron Company have just closed a contract for thirteen thousand tons of car wheel iron at twenty dollars and fifty cents per ton. This is the largest single order placed in the South since the depression began. Reports from other furnaces indicate increased inquiry for iron.

Singular Shooting.

LITTLE ROCK, ARK., October 4.—Yesterday, while James Hester and Frank Howard, colored, were butchering sheep at the slaughtering pens, Howard stood facing the sheep and shot at it with a Winchester rifle. The ball struck the animal, passed through, rebounded at a right angle, passed through a pine door and lodged in Hester's groins. He died this morning from the effects of the wound.

A Young Lady Killed.

TAYLORSVILLE, ILL., October 4.—Miss Rosa Smith, aged seventeen, of Grove City, this county, was accidentally shot and killed this afternoon. She was trying to secret a shot-gun to keep her young brother from finding it, when the hammer caught on a projection and Miss Smith received the contents of one barrel in her breast, killing her instantly.

Mexican Finances.

MEXICO, October 4.—The National Bank, having collected satisfactorily fifteen per cent. of the revenues to apply on the Government's account at the bank, and having received the second installment of interest on the loan of $10,000,000, has given assurances to the Government of an advance sufficient for the needs of the outgoing administration.

Starvation in Labrador.

OTTAWA, October 4.—Mgr. Bosse, Apostolic Prefect of Labrador, has arrived here for the purpose of interviewing the Government to obtain food and pecuniary assistance for starving natives. The catch of fish having proved a failure, much misery, and destitution prevails.

A Wealthy Young Lady.

BALTIMORE, October 4.—Miss Mary Elizabeth Garrett, only daughter of the late President Garrett, of the B. & O., is by her father's death the wealthiest unmarried lady in the United States, and is only twenty-eight years old.

Suffocated in Grain.

BUFFALO, October 4.—A temporary bulkhead at the Niagara Elevator, this city, gave way to-day. Thomas Daly was buried in grain and suffocated to death. Two other men were injured.

A Canadian Elopement.

QUEBEC, October 4.—James Villeneuve, son of the Mayor of St. Jean Baptiste, Canada, took $1,400 from his father, and eloped with a Quebec girl to the United States. The youthful pair were captured, and the money recovered.

Under a Train.

DETROIT, MICH., October 4.—P. J. Yorkey, while riding on a freight car, struck his head against a bridge was knocked under the train, and cut in two.

Copyright Fees.

WASHINGTON, October 5.—The fees paid into the Treasury on account of copyright are increasing every year, and for the past five years were as follows: 1879, $14,869.90; 1880, $16,808.50; 1881, $17,051.50; 1882, $18,554; 1883, $20,000—amounting to $86,808.90.

A Valuable Discovery.

MIDWAY, KY., October 4.—Yesterday a lad named Robert Taylor, in the employ of J. J. Givens, while digging postholes, discovered a pot, which is said to have contained a large sum of money. The boy claims there was $80,000 in it.

An Embezzler Arrested.

SAN FRANCISCO, October 5.—D. M. Burns, Secretary of State during Perkins' administration, was arrested this evening charged with embezzling State funds.

SUFFOCATED.

A Fire in a Michigan Mine Starts in a Pile of Chips.

Five Men Asphixiated, and the Whole Establishment Threatened.

HANCOCK, MICH., October 6.—Saturday night fire was discovered in an idle portion of the Hecla branch of the Calumet and Hecla Mine, in the eleventh level between Nos. 3 and 4 shafts, where for several years, wooden wedges from timber were made. The accumulation of chips and shavings, partly saturated with oil, through some unknown cause, became ignited. Several men sent down Saturday night to use the hose were driven back by the smoke. Thomas Gibble was suffocated and could not be rescued. Sunday morning John Rapson, with three other volunteers, descended to examine the pumps and attempt to recover Gibble's body. After going a short distance they were driven back. Rapson was overcome. He was seen to fall back, but his comrades could not return to him. Other volunteers, among them R. Berryman, descended to recover Rapson's body. Three men were overcome. Berryman made strenuous efforts to save his comrades. He ran to the shaft for air, and, returning, threw the three men into the car. Then he ran out again for more air, and returned and rang the bell. The car raised the three unconscious men. Berryman was almost exhausted. The recovery of the three is doubtful. There is danger of the fire reaching the large tramway, which is saturated with oil, and may conduct the fire to the other levels. The extent or progress of the fire is unknown. The mine is filled with smoke. The shafts are being closed to prevent a draft. Great fear and excitement prevails. This is the first underground fire in the Lake Superior copper mines, and the first suspension of work in this great copper producer since the strike of 1872. The mine is heavily timbered throughout with pine, which is very inflammable. A large gang descended to-day to fight the fire.

Suicide at Sea.

NEW YORK, October 6.—An immigrant named Christopher Friedel committed suicide on the North German steamship Fulda during her recent voyage from Bremen. She left there on September 14, and when two hours out Friedel jumped overboard. A boat was lowered and the man rescued, but in an unconscious condition. He was placed in the steerage hospital, where he was resuscitated after considerable difficulty. Shortly before the ship reached Southampton, and while Friedel was in the hospital, he asked the attendant to call his wife. The attendant was not gone more than five minutes, but on his return, he found his patient suspended from the ceiling by his suspenders. He had hanged himself, and when discovered was dead. He leaves a wife and seven children.

Heavy Robbery by a Masked Band.

EDENBURG, PA., October 6.—Five masked men entered the house of John Sherry, Saturday evening while the family were eating supper, and commanded all to hold up their hands. Besides Sherry there were at the table two men, Michael Keiser and George Best, a servant girl and a boy. The entire party were gagged and bound, and Sherry was then compelled to open his safe, from which they abstracted $200. They also obtained $6,000 from bureau drawers and other places about the house. The gang then drove off in a carriage which was in waiting. There is no clue.

Riot in Pittsburg.

PITTSBURG, October 6.—Forty laborers engaged in the excavation for the new jail building struck this morning for an increase of twenty-five cents per day. Shortly after 1 o'clock four or five returned to work at the old wages, and a number of strikers attacked them with bricks and clubs. A general row followed, in which numerous cuts and bruises were received by the participants, but no one was seriously hurt. The riot was finally quelled by the police, who arrested the ringleaders.

Colonel Stewart and Party Murdered.

CAIRO, October 6.—It is rumored here that Colonel Stewart has been killed at Berber. Major Kitchener telegraphs that the whole of Colonel Stewart's party were murdered. Colonel Stewart and party stranded on the rocks of the cataract at Wady Gerna. He had requested the Mudir of Dongola to send him assistance a few days ago.

New York Tenement-House Life.

NEW YORK, October 6.—Inspector Owen testified before the Tenement-house Commission to-day that he had visited 562 tenement houses in the city, containing 5,050 families, and 20,017 persons. In ninety per cent. of them the closets were in foul condition.

The French Capture Tamsui.

HONG KONG, October 6.—The French forces under Admiral Lespes, which commenced an attack upon Tamsui, captured and occupied the town, and Admiral Lespes has sent three battalions to effect a juncture with Admiral Courbet.

Drowned While Drinking from a Spring.

GALENA, ILL., October 6.—Yesterday, in the town of Guilford, this (Knox) county, the daughter of Henry Hinton, a well-known farmer, fell forward into a spring while drinking, and was suffocated in only a few inches of water.

Shipping Silver From England.

LONDON, October, 6.—One hundred and seventy-five thousand dollars in silver bullion engaged shipment to-day for New York. A further outflow is expected unless American exchange meanwhile should recover.

Smuggling Diamonds in the Mails.

NEW YORK, October 6.—The Custom-house examiner of foreign mail, at the postoffice, to-day seized forty-one large diamonds found in the mails of the steamer Brittanic. Their value is $10,000.

Beautiful Snow.

QUEBEC, October 6.—Cold to-night, with a slight fall of snow.

—The dude is no longer fashionable. He is out of date and very far removed from the fashionable men of to-day. The dude was in his glory a little less than two years ago, when the fashion of wearing abominably tight trousers, vacant smiles, pointed boots, and silver-headed sticks first started in. For the first time in the history of civilization a fashion was popular which gave narrow-chested, cadaverous and spindle-shanked young men a chance for their lives.—San Francisco Argonaut.

—W. H. Mercer, of Webster County, Georgia, has a plow which he uses every year in making his crops that has been in use in his family over one and fifty years. It was made in England by his great-grandfather and brought by him to this country.

—Men who pay as promptly as is possible, because to do otherwise is to inflict injury upon those who gave them their confidence, are more reliable than those who do so from selfish considerations.—The Interior.

—Claret wine was used recently to extinguish a fire at Mission St. Jose, Cal., owing to a lack of water.

THE COMMONWEALTH.

Louisville Leaf Tobacco Market.

The weather has been too broken for the interests of tobacco in an advanced stage of growth, but in many instances late tobacco has been benefited by the rains. It is supposed that 65@75 per cent. of the crop east of Louisville has been cut, and 40@50 per cent. of that south and west. In North Carolina bright tobacco has intrenched upon the domain of cotton in some counties, as Burley has invaded the Bluegrass counties of Kentucky. Wake, a large cotton county of North Carolina, was placed somewhat extensively in bright tobacco this year, and on Friday a warehouse for its sale was opened in Raleigh, and 15,000 lbs. of the year's product was sold at $20@30. It was a sort of hurrah occasion however, and the notions of the buyer were duly encouraged by speeches from the Governor and others. We quote full-weight packages new-crop sound tobacco as follows:

	Dark and Heavy.	Burley.
Trash	$6 00@ 6 75	$6 00@ 7 00
Common lugs	7 00@ 7 25	7 50@ 8 00
Medium lugs	7 50@ 7 75	8 25@ 8 75
Good lugs	8 00@ 8 50	9 00@ 9 75
Common leaf	8 75@ 9 00	10 00@10 50
Medium leaf	9 50@ 9 75	11 00@12 50

Miscellaneous Items.

THE Rockcastle jail has but one inmate.

DR. WM. M. FUQUA, of Hopkinsville, has been elected to the Chair of Anatomy in the Memphis Medical College.

IN a scuffle between John Dickerson and Dr. Daniel Baker, at Nicholasville, the other night, the former ruptured a varicose vein. Dickerson is said to be the biggest man in Kentucky.

A PROHIBITION club of fifty members has been formed in Henderson County.

NICK GIBSON shot and killed Frank Douglass at the fair ground, Hopkinsville, the other day, during the fair, in a dispute over three dollars involved in a game of chance. The negro was running the gambling establishment and refused to pay Gibson the money he claimed to have won. Both drew pistols simultaneously, but Gibson fired first, and Douglass fell with a bullet-hole in his stomach and one in the corner of his mouth, either of which would have been fatal. Gibson was arrested and is in jail.

ELDER A. THORNTON, of Paducah, has been called upon by his colored brethren to become a candidate for Congress, and has accepted. He makes the fifth Congressional candidate in that district.

LOUISVILLE won the prize in the Knights of Pythias competitive drill at Hopkinsville.

ELLIS LEE, shot at Lair Station, by Loyd, died the other day. Loyd is still at large.

THERE are 118 pupils in the State School for Deaf Mutes at Danville.

THE marriage of the Hon. Clarence U. McElroy, of Bowling Green, and Miss Lillie Trigg, of Glasgow, is announced.

THE Kentucky Grand Lodge of Knights of Pythias met at Hopkinsville, a few days ago. Eighteen of the twenty-four lodges were represented. The following officers have been elected for the ensuing year: G. P. C., D. O. Wilkins, Carrollton; G. C., A. G. Moore, Louisville; G. V. C., Edward Atkinson, Henderson; G. P., James A. Young, Hopkinsville; G. K. R. S., B. W. Morris, Covington; G. W. E., Geo. W. Menz, Louisville; G. W. A., Evans Williams, Newport; G. I. G., C. L. Billings, Louisville; G. O. G., J. H. Short, Paris; Grand Trustees; Bryan Hopper, Hopkinsville, and W. O. Ford, Covington.

BEFORE Judge Thompson, in the City Court of Louisville, a few days ago, the application for admitting Andy Wepler, the slayer of Henry Clay, to bail, was resumed, and after hearing all points in the matter through the arguments of the attorneys on both sides the Court returned an opinion adverse to Wepler's cause, and he was remanded back to jail to await the action of the Grand Jury.

WASH FLETCHER, colored, was hung at Paducah, on the 3d, for the murder of Amanda Jackson in August, 1883. The murdered woman was the mother of Fletcher's mistress. He became enraged at the daughter and attacked her. The mother was killed in defending the daughter from assault. Thousands of people, mostly colored, witnessed the execution. Fletcher asserted his innocence to the last.

AT Elkton, George Jolly went to the house of Scott Cobb to whip him. They engaged in an altercation and Jolly shot Cobb in the breast. Cobb then wrenched the pistol from Jolly and shot him twice, killing him almost instantly. Cobb's wound is serious.

AT an early hour the other morning a party of masked men went to the house of Frank Briggs, a respectable citizen, who lives a few miles back from the town of Concord, Lewis County, and after beating the old gentlemen and his wife, ransacked the house. Mrs. Briggs had her skull fractured and will die. The parties are suspected, and a vigilance committee is organizing to investigate.

LULU WEST, a Bellevue school teacher, was arrested the other day for cruelly whipping an eight year-old pupil named Johnson.

WHILE coupling cars at Paducah, the other night, George Harris, colored, fell beneath a car and had his right arm badly mangled. He protested against treatment when a physician was called, and died from his injuries in about three hours. He had been at work as a railroader for some time.

MISS S. WADE, while returning from church, near Sulphur Well, was thrown from her buggy, sustaining a fracture of the left leg and some severe bruises.

ANDREW HARRIS, who, a short time ago, was shot through the lungs by a negro, at Nicholasville, severely stabbed Henry Talbott, colored, the other day, at that place.

JOHN FREEMAN, of Estill County, has been convicted in the Madison Circuit Court of the murder of John Smiley, in Richmond last November, and sentenced to twenty-one years imprisonment.

JOHN JOHNSON and Dock Lloyd, having had a difficulty, met at Lair's Station the other afternoon and began shooting. They missed each other, but Johnson's shot hit Lloyd's wife in the foot, and Lloyd's ball lodged in Ellis Lee's head, which will prove fatal. All the parties are colored.

AT Nicholasville, the other day, Andrew Harris and Henry Talbert engaged in an altercation, in which the latter was dangerously knifed. He was carried to Dr. Fishe's office, where his wounds were dressed. Harris was shot through the lungs some time since, from which he recently recovered.

PROF. D. C. DUDLEY, Principal of the Kentucky State Institute for Deaf Mutes, has resigned.

MRS. JULIA MCDONALD, wife of A. T. McDonald, of Winchester, committed suicide the other day by taking morphine.

AT Louisville, the other night, a street-car mule which came in contact with an electric light wire was instantly killed by the powerful current of electricity. The conductor of the car took hold of the wire and was severely shocked.

A WARREN COUNTY bull threw a negro through a wire fence and killed the mule he was riding, a few days since.

Young Lions Reared by the Bottle.

At the Zoological Gardens at Leipsic (Germany) we once had four cubs brought into the world by a young lioness, and as is sometimes the case, she had not sufficient milk for her babies, and we were obliged to lose them entirely or try what bottle nursing would do. It was with considerable trouble that the young things were gotten out of the cage, for the mother made furious resistance and gave me several tastes of her claws in spite of the assistance of two of the keepers whom I had stationed on the outside, each armed with one of the long iron forks used for feeding, with which to keep the beast away from me during the removal. At last I succeeded in getting all four out of the cage, and after placing them carefully in a basket, I took them home to my own rooms.

The next step was to get a large box in which I put some straw, covering it well with an old, soft rug, and after depositing my strange pets in their new nursery, stood it near the stove so that they could enjoy the warmth.

Then came up the feeding question. I took an empty wine bottle, bought several India rubber nipples—such as are used for human babies—and made arrangements with the milkman for the increased size of my family.

At feeding time I filled the bottle with milk slightly warmed, to which I added as much sulphur as could be taken on the point of a penknife, and tried my experiment. To my delight the little beasts took lovingly to their new way of feeding, and evinced a decided love "for the bottle."

At first I used to feed them every four hours, keeping this up until they were six weeks old, after which time every five hours was often enough as long as they were on their milk diet.

Knowing the importance of regularity in meal hours I bought an alarm clock, and every night set it to awaken me at the proper intervals, and if any observer had been at hand he would have smiled to see me engaged in my novel maternal experiment. Often I have sleepily turned out of bed at the sound of the alarm, donned my dressing gown and seated myself on a low box, holding a bottle in each hand, while the cubs tugged at the ends, my own head nodding the while on my breast. As they grew older they became somewhat expensive, as they bit through over two dozen of the rubber nipples before they left off the bottle.

When first I took them in charge (immediately after their birth) they were about the size of Newfoundland pups, but in the course of six weeks they had nearly doubled in weight. They also began at this age to be very amusing in their antics, and used to fight so vigorously for their first turn at the bottle that I used to be obliged to take them singly out of their box in order to feed them comfortably.

As soon as their teeth were strong enough I gave them young chickens and pigeons to eat, which change of diet seemed to meet with their entire approval. Of course the birds were given in a raw state. At the Zoological Gardens of Dresden, where a similar attempt was made, the entire litter was lost through feeding upon cooked ments instead of raw. Naturally, in the matter of diet, one must adhere as closely as possible to the food they would have had in their native land and wild condition.

By the time the cubs were three months old I used to let them run round the room, and one can not imagine anything funnier than the way they played together. They would roll over each other and tumble about as though there was not a bone in their whole little soft bodies. Sometimes one would manage to climb up on a chair, which was a signal for the others to rush and try to dislodge him from his stronghold, but he would frequently hold the situation for several minutes before they could rout him, and then, when he did come down, the "ground and lofty tumbling" would begin afresh.

When they had reached the age of four months I returned them to the gardens, where they were put in a cage and amused and delighted many visitors by their playfulness. They were subsequently sold to another garden, where they are doing very well. My labors were often very arduous, and my anxiety great: for I loved my pets and had their welfare greatly at heart, but the abundant success that crowned my efforts more than repaid me for the trouble they had given.

The experiment has been tried of putting young cubs to a cat, but this has very seldom succeeded, as there is rarely milk enough for their wants, nor does it seem to agree with them. After a few weeks of such nursing they die from a softening of the bones, which is a very frequent and deadly disease among the young of all wild animals.—Cor. Forest and Stream.

Slow Poison.

It is not, when we look into the matter, a surprising thing that so many people die early in the country villages of forms of disease more or less malarious, who, we might think, at first and superficial observation, were living under every condition of health, with exercise, sunshine and fresh air in the greatest abundance. But a second glance, and the conclusions drawn from the premises it affords, and the premises it surveys as well, give us plenty of reason for this illness and death, where there ought to be only robustness and long life. In many of the country houses of our acquaintance the house-cellar is filled every autumn with a crop of promiscuous vegetables; if it is a good dry cellar, the immediate decay is small, although there is surely some decay; if it is a damp cellar, the decay is large, and the vapors of the fermenting stuff, seldom picked over and purified, are slowly accumulating, ready to rise and do a deadly work. This cellar, in the usual instance, is rarely or never whitewashed with a view to any disinfecting power of lime, nor is it ever ventilated, except as an open door now and then lets into it some air that never finds its way out, and does nothing, while becoming foul itself, but help push upward into the house the foul air already in the cellar and even that air comes most frequently from the barn-yard, the outer cellar door or bulk-head opening generally on the barn-yard side of the house. Sometimes, too, although not very often, the cellar is used as a sort of wood-shed, where the sawdust and fine chips gather themselves together, and only wait for moisture to create their own poison. If added to this, any of the hens and chickens are brought into the cellar for better protection in case of early hatching or illness, as has been done there only needs one thing more, besides the absence of light, to complete its poisonous character—and that is the presence of a spring of water, a spring usually thought to be a treasure, and stoned in and curbed to preserve it. One thing more, however, not optional albeit with the owner, often occurs to add a last power and potency to the capacity of this sort of cellar for evil, and that is the presence of foul gases in the earth itself, that seem to find their way along the upper stratum of soil, travelling underground, as we are told by men of science, and sending their noxious exhalations into any receptacle found on the way, such as a cellar. Many a city resident whose cellar has no gas-pipe in it, can at times plainly discern the smell of gas there, and many a country one fails to account for ill odors and strange gases in his cellar by any other theory. Of course no one is responsible for this last feature, except in one way, as it is one of the agencies of nature, and the result probably, of the decomposition of the earth, or of substances wrapped in the upper layers of earth. But in the cellar that is ventilated it can do no harm, and the responsibility lies in the neglect of ventilation that would gives these foul gases, with all the rest, egress and dispersion in the open air. When now we remember that in the near neighborhood of the house, also, there is usually what is called the barn-yard heap, festering the year round, a necessary thing, not to be reckoned as an evil in the longer run, except when near the house or the well, that this is always emitting a noxious breath of its own to load the neighboring air, and that with the chill of night succeeding the sun and warmth of every day this noxious breath of organic decay falls with all the other heavy particles of the air to the ground, and makes a stratum like that stratum of mist which one standing on a hill sees in almost any valley—if we remember all this, and recollect, too, that the room in which, as a rule, the master and mistress of this country house take their night's rest is on the ground-floor, we shall have no good cause for wonder that diphtheria and typhus and scarlet fevers and all the long train of zymotic diseases are generated in their system.

This bed-room, in most cases, we say is a room on the ground floor, and generally opens out of the kitchen; it is usually small, and is so handily placed that it is a species of catch-all for old clothes and the odds and ends of family use; it is not often that the windows are left open at night; in a righteous dread of insects, thieves, marauders, and night air, they are generally so close that they might as well be battened; and there is a stout chimney-board lest any ventilation possibly occur and give cold and rheumatisms by diluting the lukewarmness of the air already bottled up in the place; the door into the kitchen is perhaps left open, but as cooking has been going on there all day, perhaps woolen clothes steaming and drying, perhaps several pipes smoking, the air is hardly an open question.

In this bed-room on the ground floor, seldom aired, situated in the midst of the outer miasm rising from the barn-yard and pig-pen, and settling all about the house—which perhaps it is as well the close windows do their best to exclude—and with the foul breath of the cellar stealing up with the dark and subtile celerity of all poisoners, with a fraction of air such as it is between them to breathe over repeatedly and load with their own poison—in this bedroom, we say, these people take their night's rest, unconscious how fast and how far it is leading them to that long good-night from which there is no waking. Laborious weary people, they sleep well, and the little malarious fiends do their work as well. Are there any hereditary germs of disease in their system that might under other circumstances escape fostering and never come to light?—the vitiated and weakened blood lets them loose in consumption and scrofula and cancer. While, be they healthiest people born on earth, inheriting no taint, the air they breathe in these close nights above their cellars can do no less than give them deadly dysenteries and burning fevers. Wars and famines and earthquakes, great plagues of cholera and the like, doubtless slay their thousands every year; but tens of thousands of people, who never learned the delights of airy upper-story sleeping-rooms, where the first ray of morning comes like a gay awakening friend, are slain in quiet, unobtrusive ways every year by the ground-floor bedroom in the country farm house over the unventilated cellar.—Harper's Bazar.

Fraternal Instincts.

A St. Paul traveling man, who dropped in to swap a few tall style lies with the Herald staff, told us this story:

"Three years ago I was connected with a New York house that handled a large amount of imported goods, and I was started off for Europe one day to attend to some business matters. The second day out I was strolling about the deck of the steamer when I noticed two portly, finely-dressed men eyeing each other attentively. They bore every evidence of wealth, and I put them up as two merchant princes on a pleasure tour. I was within about two feet of one of them when the other came up to him and said:

"'Going to do Europe?'

"'Yes shall make quite an extensive tour.'

"'Me, too. In fact I may never return to America. Let us understand each other and be friends on the trip. I have felt drawn toward you ever since I first saw you by a sort of a—ah—a sort of a fraternal instinct, as it were.' (Here he lowered his voice). 'May I ask if your departure was a hasty one? Is your absence an—ah—well, an enforced one?'

"'Oh, no. I am simply on a tour of pleasure and sight-seeing.'

"The other seemed puzzled for a moment and then said:

"'I can not but think there is an invisible bond that draws me toward you. May I ask what business you follow?'

"'Certainly. I am a New York plumber,' cried the other excitedly; 'I know that a fraternal instinct was swelling my heart like a balloon. I am the late President of a New Jersey bank, and have brought the entire funds of the Institution with me to to help me enjoy my tour.

"Well, sir," the drummer continued, "you ought to have seen those two fellows grab hands and shake and smile and wink at each other. Then they went to a secluded portion of the cabin and sat down and talked business for four solid hours. I went up to them that afternoon and told them that I had written another man's name to a draft for a large sum and was going to Europe for my health, and the way those fellows dosed me with champagne on that trip was fearful!"

And the c. t. smiled grimly and ambled down the winding stairs to the busy street below.—St. Paul Herald.

SCIENCE AND INDUSTRY.

—Professor A. H. Sayce has deciphered an Assyrian tablet which gives an account of a transit of Venus 1,600 years B. C.

—An invention is reported for making rural transportation easier and cheaper. It is a cheap wooden railroad made to run wagons over.

—A single shoe manufactory in Massachusetts turns out by patent machinery in twelve months as many pairs of boots and shoes as 30,000 shoemakers in Paris made by hand in the same period of time. Great are the uses of machinery.—Boston Post.

—The Medical Times, referring to the 5,000 incandescent lamps in use at the English hygienic exhibition, says that they are the domestic light of the future, adding that the well-founded objection formerly raised by oculists that the light was a series of flashes is not now true except in theory.

—Bricks made of cork now constitute one of the new German industries. The usual size is ten by four and three-fourths and two and a half inches. They are prepared from small corks, refuse and cement, and have not only been used for certain building purposes on account of their lightness and isolating properties, but are also employed as a covering for boilers in preventing the radiation of heat.

—Rolled gold is made by casting an ingot of brass, and while this is still hot pouring upon it a thin layer of gold alloy. The ingot when cold is forced between steel rollers until a long thin ribbon is produced, of which the proportion of gold and brass is the same as of the ingot. The percentage of gold is reduced as low as two and three per cent. This rolled gold is used in making cheap bracelets and watch chains, and costs but little more than brass. It wears from one to ten years.

—A curious experiment has lately been made at Acqui, Italy, by the proprietor of some baths there. This gentleman has at his disposal an inexhaustible supply of hot water from a natural spring, the temperature being 167 degrees Fahrenheit. The surplus not required for the baths has been diverted so as to flow through pipes to a garden on the outskirts of the town. Here the warm liquid flows beneath a number of forcing frames containing melons, tomatoes, asparagus and other garden produce. The result is that a supply of these delicacies is ready for market at a very early period of the year, when, therefore, they fetch high prices.

PITH AND POINT.

—"You were loaded," said Justice Duffy, of New York, to Charles and Philip Gunn as they were led to the bar by Policeman Burns, who had found them drunk. That's a brand of whisky I never heard of.—N. Y. Times.

—A youth of Hibernian extraction in chopping wood with a hatchet, the other day, was so unfortunate as to graze the thumb of his left hand with which he was steadying the piece of kindling he was splitting. Ruefully gazing at the injured member, he remarked: "Begorra, it was a good thing I did not have hold of the handle with both hands, or I'd have cut it off, sure."—Exchange.

—"Say, Pat," said a gentleman to his hired man, who had many domestic quarrels. "With whom would you sooner fight, the English or your wife Biddy?" "Och, bedad," was the reply. "whin the English declare war, a mon foinds it out in advance, an' he gits a chance ter run, but whin Biddy declares war a divil a bit do I found it out until I have recovered. D'yer understand?" The gentleman comprehended the peculiar position of his domestic.—The Scissors.

Curious Facts About Silk-Worms.

A writer in Land and Water says the ideas of the ancients upon the subject of the origin of silk were rather vague, some supposed it to be the entrails of a spider, which fattened for years upon paste, at length burst, bringing forth its silken treasure; others that it was spun by a hideous horned grub in hard nests of clay—ideas which were not dispelled till the sixth century, when the first silk worms reached Constantinople, introduced and cultivated, like many other benefits, by the wandering monks. From thence they were soon imported into Italy, which for a long period remained the headquarters of the European silk trade, until Henry IV. of France, seeing that mulberry trees were as plentiful in his southern provinces as in Italy, introduced silk-worm culture with great success. Kirkby mentions the following interesting extract from the "Courier de Lyon," 1840, as showing the extraordinary quantity of silk there annually consumed at that period: "Raw silk annually consumed there, one million of kilogrammes, equal to 2,205,714 lbs. English, on which the waste in manufacturing is five per cent. As four cocoons produce one graine (grain) of silk, four thousand millions of cocoons are annually consumed, making the number of caterpillars reared (including the average allowance for caterpillars dying, bad cocoons and those kept for eggs), 4,292,400,000. The length of the silk of one cocoon averages 703 metres (1,526 feet English), so that the length of the total quantity of silk spun at Lyons is 6,500,000,000,000 (or six and a half trillions) of English feet, equal to fourteen times the mean radius of the earth's orbit, or 5,494 times the radius of the moon's orbit, or 52,505 times the equatorial circumference of the earth, or 200,000 times the circumference of the moon."

OUR CLOAK ROOM.

The crowning point of everything that is New, Brilliant and Attractive will be Our Cloak Room. We will open in a few days a full line of ladies' children's New Markets, Circulars, Jackets, Paletots, Sealskins, &c. and an assortment of Plain and Beaded Jerseys. Many of these goods are direct importations from Europe. No lady should fail to examine and price these goods. All are invited to call and we will make it profitable to you to buy OUR GOODS in preference to worthless and shelve worn goods as are now offered and sold in so many stores. This has been the great bane of the Dry Goods trade, and the only way to remedy this evil is by only patronizing stores where such goods are not kept and offered for sale, and we can proudly say

SUCH a STORE is OURS.

NEXT Tuesday is the Ohio election.

THE warm, damp weather has injured some of the tobacco.

A cool wave is advertised for the Ohio valley this afternoon.

THE Republicans elected the Mayor and other officers in Newport.

OHIO is submitting to a heavy oratorical bombardment this week.

WM. CLORE, proprietor of the Rising Sun Plow shops, and a leading citizen of that town died last week.

THE Pennsylvanin State Fair was attended by 200,000 people and the receipts were $60,000.

OVER sixteen thousand negroes have emigrated from the United States to Liberia, and others are constantly going.

OUR Government has now $170,000,000, or 600 freight car loads, of silver dollars piled up in its treasury vaults and still manufacturing at the rate of two millions a month.

THE Democratic Executive Committee of this State has no money with which to employ speakers to send into the doubtful Congressional Districts, and the speakers who go there, volunteer their services, and in politics it is like the old negro said about preaching: "Poor pay, poor preach."

OWING to the rapid growth and multiplication of carp they are well calculated to become a source of a considerable food supply for man. Arrangements for their propagation are easily and cheaply made and a large supply of fish can be kept on hand, where nothing else of material value can be produced.

John R. McLean, editor and proprieter of the Cincinnati Enquirer, will be married this morning to Miss Emily F. Beale, daughter of General E. F. Beale, of Washington. The ceremony will be private, and in the presence of only the immediate relatives of the two families, at the residence of the bride's father.

A great-grandson of the immortal Patrick Henry was jailed in Louisville, last week, charged with disorderly conduct. Within the last eighteen months, in Louisville, a grandson of John J. Crittenden has been sentenced to the penitentiary, a great grandson of Henry Clay was killed while in a drunken debauch, and a great-grandson of Patrick Henry, jailed. Louisville is not a good place for descendents of great men to stop in.

To secure the Fair for this part of the State will require the exercise of liberality on the part of the people of this county. No community in Kentucky is better calculated to make a grand success of such an institution, and derive great benefits therefrom. Every department of an agricultural society will be beneficial to them, and in a few years the results from it will amply remunerate the farmers and stock raisers for the money they invest in such an enterprise.

EDUCATIONAL.

[Communications for this column must be addressed to Prof. T. H. Stephenson, Burlington, Kentucky.]

A NEW PRONOUN.—Grammarians have always felt the need of a pronoun of the common gender. A Mr. Converse offers one, which he claims has all the requisites that are necessary to make it acceptable to scholars. It is short, correctly formed, and euphonious. The word is thon, being formed from two words that and one. The declention is nominative thon, possessive thons, objective then, and independent thon. The following sentence: "A friend should not abuse the confidence reposed in him," would read thus: "A friend should not abuse the confidence reposed in thon." It will unite, like the personal pronouns, with the word self to form a compound word, as; thonself. But the word, we think, sounds a little harsh, which may be because it is new and the ear unaccustomed to it.

The early English writers might have supplied us with such a word. Its introduction would then have been comparatively easy, while it may be found a very difficult matter to give such a word general currency now.

A singular pronoun of the common gender is certainly needed. Every writer and public speaker, who knows the requirements of the rules of the English language has felt the need of such a word. Such awkward expressions as "Every one must answer for himself." "Either John or Mary will bring her book." "Every one of us was mistaken in his opinion," and all others of a similar kind would be obviated by the introduction of such a word. The same difficulty does not exist in the use of the relatives. We say the man and the woman whom he saw. The animals and plants which he described. If there are two antecedents, one refering to persons and the other to things, we then use that, as; He describes the men and the customs that he saw. It is difficult to construct sentences like the above, containing the personal pronouns, so that the difficulty will be obviated. In examples like the second above, it is impossible to avoid the difficulty. The difficulty is perplexing when conversing with a lady, we are required to say each one of us saw his mistake.

Chicago Schools.

In the first year of the primary schools there are enrolled 13,751; in the second year the numeer decreasee to 10,251; the third year to 8,947; the fourth year 6,134; the fifth year or pupils 10 and 11 years of age, only 4,701.

Only 4,701 pupils at the age of 11 years remain in school out of 14,651 who started at the age of 6 years.

Or, in other words, 8,950 pupils have ceased to attend school. The sixth year 3,124; the seventh year, 1,749 the eighth year, 981.

Only 981 pupils at the age of 13 to 14 remain in school, out of 13,651 who started.

12,670 have stopped, and only 981 remain.

Only 7 out of every hundred complete the common branches.

These figures do not have any reference to high schools but only to those primary schools where the fundamental branched—reading, writing, geography and arithmetic, are taught.

The Electroscope.

New applications of electricity multiply of late years, Dr. Guidrah, Victoria, claims to have so far perfected an instrument called the electroscope, as to be able to transmit by electricity, vibrations of light, and thereby to reproduce scenes to the eye from a distance many times beyond the range of human vision. According to the London papers, a trial of this instrument took place recently at Melbourne, in the presence of scientifi and public men:

"Sitting in a dark room, they saw projected on a large disk of white burnished metal the race course at Flemington, with its myriad of active beings. Minute details stood out with pertect fidelity to the wonderful picture through binocular glasses it was difficult to imagine they were not actually on the course itself and moving among those actions they could so completely sean."

SHOULD the Democrats succeed in carrying Ohio next Tuesday it will be a corker to the Presidential campaign on the Republican side. But the political history of that State for the last twenty-eight years shows that it has been reliably Republican at all times in the October campaign preceeding the Presidential elections in November, by majorities anywhere from 5,000 to 59,000 in round numbers. The Democrats have occasionally elected a Governor and other State officers in Ohio, but the Republicans have never suffered that occurrence in a Presidentinl year, and the Buckeye State is of as much importance to them this year as it has been at any election immediately preceding the election of a President therefore the Democratic party will not be surprised at that State taking its former place in the Republican column again next Tuesday.

THE meeting which, doubtless, will finally determine the fate of the Rabbit Hash and Gunpowder pike will be held in a few days, and it is to be hoped that those, to whose great interest it is to have the road, are prepared to increase the amount of money subscribee to an amount necessary to construct the road. Many reasons why the road should be built have been given, and there are many more which could be presented, but if those parts of the county which are traversed by pikes are compared to those where mud roads binder the movements of the farmers about seven months out of twelve, an argument is at once discovered which is unanswerable. The thrift of the people on good roads is not because these people are more industrious and better managers than their less favored neighbors, but it is due the advantages that a good pike gives to all localities through which it passes. A road that can be used at all times is an immeasurable blessing to any community.

No new bids have been received by the Commissioners of the Sinking Fund for the labor of convicts outside of the penitentiary, and the contract of Mason & Co., for convict labor, both inside and outside the Penitentiary, having expired yesterday, the greater part of the prisoners employed by them have been turned over to the State. They will retain a very small number to finish up some work which they still have on hand, arranging with the Commissioners for the hire. The State now has upon its hands eight or nine hundred convicts which it must provide for at once. They must be fed, clothed, housed and guarded at the expense of the Commonwealth, and the taxpayers must be prepared to pay for it. The State has laid in no supplies of coal or provisions for this purpose, and it will require great activity and intelligence upon the part of the new warden to get things in order before the coming cold weather. It is true there is no money in the treasury, and no immediate prospect for any surplus that may be used for this purpose, but these convicts must be fed and cared for by some means, and we are to rely upon the genius of the Commissioners and the warden to supply them.—Yeoman.

The farmers are now garnering the harvest, and swindlers who use the guise of agricultural implements to swindle them out of the fruits of their toil are already in the field. We warn our farmer friends to be very careful about signing any document that is left in the hands of a stranger.

An exchange published in Page county, Iowa, furnishes us with an illustration which proves our warning is not sounded without cause. It is as follows:

"Two or three farmers in the country were made victims of a scheme worked by two swindlers, who drove about in a fine carriage and claimed to be the agents for a successful working patent in the form of a revolving harrow. As is the usual custom of such parties they were exceedingly anxious to have some enterprising farmer in each township invest in the patent, and take the right for selling a certain territory. The persuasive power inherent in these agents was such that the farmers seemed to lose control of themselves and became willing subjects. The first reported case is that of a well-to-do-farmer near Yorktown, who, as he afterwards said, was not aware of entering into a contract, but after the agents were gone he found a paper with his signature attached binding him in the sum of $100,000, and upon coming to Clorinda an hour later to investigate the matter he found a note of one hundred dollars against him in the bank. Another farmer near the College Springs was duped in the same manner, and upon arriving in Clorinda found a mortgage on his team recorded. Neither of these men seem to know how the business was transacted, and both assert that they know nothing of signing a contract. The swindlers are yet at large, and it behooves one to be on their guard for them. Such traveling companies, as a rule, have nothing that the people need, and it is the safer plan to have nothing to do with them."

An exchange furnishes the following, which will serve to warn some of our former friends of the menthods employed by these sharpers, and is not much of an exageration of the words used by those oily-tongued swindlers: "Patent stump pullers that will extract anything from the tooth of a fine comb to the roots of a giant oak; a patent wagon jack that can be used to grease anything, but more particular the pockets of the vendors; a lightning rod that will draw the electricity 499 yards and conduct it to the bowels of a stone quary, and shake the rock out to the surface all dressed and squared ready for use: a patent sulkie good to attach to the plows or haul saw logs, with draft so light that the team will have a hard time to keep out of its way. These are a few of the long list of humbugs that farmers are solicited to patronize. No money down is asked; only your note, which grows so distressingly fast that you fail to recognize it."

During the very low water in the river the Government has had several ugly snags removed from the channel.

Mrs. Dempsey had the misfortune to lose another work horse last week. She has had seven to die in as many years.

It will be very convenient for some of the boys to be absent this week, at Latonia, while the big sixteen is holding forth in Burlington.

A. W. Murphy moved his effects back to Walton again last Saturday. He will continue to boss Walton's tobacco shop at this place in the fall.

Rev. Carney, of Illinois, occupied the pulpit in the Baptist church at this place last Sunday morning and evening, his last sermon being to a large congregation.

Burlington never was in a better fix for feeding the multitudes that flock here. Two hotels and numerous boarding houses offer their services to furnish food for the hungry.

Mrs. Rice, relict of Jackson Rice, was buried at Petersburg last Saturday, having died from the effect of the shock she received when her son, Geo. Rector died a few days before of typhoid fever.

James Conner made three heats with "Lady Daisy" one afternoon last week. If "Lady D." were allowed to run in harness, Jim might win money with her at Latonia this week.

Our townsmen, James Westbay, accompanied by Col. J. J. Landram, next Congressman (?) from this district, called on the next President and Vice-President (?) in Cincinnati last week.

The big sixteen is now scrutinizing the moral records of the county for the last six months. That body generally finds a few infractions which it refers to a higher tribunal for final disposition.

There will be a free lecture at Ashby Fork school house next Saturday evening, Oct., 11th, at 3 p. m. Ladies not admitted, but young men, boys and parents are especially invited.—Subject: youth.

Mr. S. B. Huey, formerly a citizen of Boone county, but now of Arlington, Texas, made our office a short call Monday. He says it is very dry in Texas, and that they have had no rain there since the 27th of June.

Washington Craven being anxious to get his tobacco housed was at work last Sunday, when a plank on which he was standing turned, throwing him to the ground. In his decent he struck a rail, breaking two or more ribs.

The grand jury is composed principally of young men, and it will not be surprising if the county gets a pretty good shaking up.

The fall meeting of the Latonia Jockey Club is now on, and numerous fliers are there, which will make fine sport for those who love to witness sharp contests between "the noble animals." The races will continue through this week.

Attention Farmers.

All persons who have taken stock, and all friends of the agricultural society of North Kentucky, are earnestly requested to be present at the meeting to be held in Florence, Saturday, Oct., 11th at 2 o'clock p. m.

The day has come when to leave the grave of the departed one unmarked by a neat stone, is not suffered by even those in the most ordinary walks of life, and all can be pleased in both design and price by Huschart & Co., of Lawrenceburg, Ind. John Beall, of Hebron, is their agent.

The judgment of the Boone Circuit Court in the case of James Breeden, &c., vs. W. M. Rogers, &c., (the Salem Church case) was affirmed by the Court of Appeals last week. Col. J. Landram as a special Judge, delivered the judgement in the lower court, which was in favor of Rogers, &c.

I have the largest and best assortment of solid leather goods in this part of the country, and can and will sell at less prices and profits for cash than any dealer in this section. Club together and come and I will sell good solid goods at retail, at wholesale prices. J. Q. Davis, Big Red Boot, Rising Sun, Ind.

Missouri Smith, Chas. Kenner and others have filed in the Boone Circuit Court, an appeal from the order probating the will of Samuel Moore, dcd. The contest will come up at the next term of that court, the appeal not being filed in time for this term.

In response to an invitation, last Sunday, about thirty of "Happy" Jack Turner's friends assembled at his house, three miles from town on the Petersburg pike, to partake of a feast he had prepared for them. The table was laden with an exuberance of nice shoat and turkey and many other seasonable articles of food, of which the crowd partook heartily.

As the visiting attorneys depend on making expenses at this term of court including transportation and a few "set 'em ups," they will be sadly disappointed, and their wives should not be surprised were they to receive a dispatch something like the following: "My Dear wife—am at Burlington busted flat—send me enough money to get home on."

The burley tobacco crop of this region is so heavy that the raisers are put to it for house room in which to store it. Large barns have been built supposed to suffice, but in most cases, after filling them all, and the stables and sheds of other buildings have been brought into requisition, there is still a large surplus. The cutting is nearly done, and a thrifty second crop is coming.—Yeoman.

Buckley's Detacher is an article that everyone who uses a buggy, spring wagon or a carriage needs, because it is so far more convenient and very durable. They are used by J. A. Huey, John M. Haskal and others, who say the time will come when no other single tree will be used. For farm, county or State rights apply to C. C. Graves, Bullittsville, Boone County, Ky.

A. O. HALL, Superintendent.

I wish to inform the public that my process of painting is one of the best known to the profession. The work I do wears well, no chalking or pealing or other annoyances so common to the work of inexperienced painters. All work done in the latest styles, and prices reasonable. For recommendation I refer to those for whom I have done work, such as house painting, graining, and paper hanging, in fact all kinds of house and carriage painting. If you have work you want done drop me a postal and I will come and see you about it. JAS BERRY, Burlington, Ky.

The following named gentlemen compose the grand jury for this term:

Woodford Carpenter, Foreman, F. A. Utz, O. W. Gaines, Jacob Rouse, D. M. Snyder, W. T. Ryle, Lewis Conner, Thos. D. Willis, Geo. L. Smith, Lystra Aylor, Alvin Corn, O. P. Tanner, Late Rice, Benj. Crisler, W. A. Tanner and H. C. Duncan.

The petit juries are composed of the following persons:

Jury No. 1.—Lewis Rice, B. C. Tanner, John Aylor, J. M. Utz, Jas. Osborn, Howard Blankenbecker, Jno. Fulton, W. A. Carpenter, Hamp Adams, Dennis Neal, Geo. Arnold, J. M. Gregg.

Jury No. 2—M. W. Graves, Joseph Stephens, Marion Stephens, Jas. Pearson, Geo. Rouse, A. Beemon, C. C. Roberts, C. S. Smith, Joseph Riddell, Geo. H. Walton, Absalom Aylor, Chas W. Saxton.

We call the attention of the readers to the advertisement of Messrs. Heyn & Bro. of Rising Sun, Indiana. From personal observation and experience we are convinced that this firm carries the most complete stock of goods in Southeastern Indiana, besides selling away below city prices. Unlike many other firms they do not advertise one thing and mean another, but they can be relied upon as acting upon their word. The country would be much better off if all our business men would act upon this principle. In this connection we whisper that such a store should be liberally patronized by the public. We will mention but one solid fact in regard to their ready-made clothing. There are too many would-be clothiers in this country, but those are "few and far between" that can furnish a garment fit to be worn by a gentleman wishing to dress modern and respectably. A word to the wise is sufficient.

NEIGHBORHOOD NEWS.

Petersburg.

The distillery has commenced work.

J. Frank Grant has moved into his new store room.

Dr. Ed Terrill has been very sick for several days, but is improving.

We are sorry to report that Mrs. Jenkins, wife of J. C. Jenkins, is not expected to live many days.

Miss Belle Terrill, eldest daughter of Henry Terrill, is laying very low with that dreadful disease, consumption.

Hebron.

The picnic last Saturday was well attended.

The Ohio river has been higher and lower this year than was ever known.

The Hebron school commenced on Monday, with Miss Cassie Foulke as teacher.

E. E. Rouse and Geo. W. Knapp will start west next Monday to hunt them out a home.

Business is improving and the farmers are jubilant over the fine rains and green pastures.

Longstreet.

Tobacco about all cut.

Henry Clore is improving slowly.

There has been some corn cut up, and it is moulding in the shock.

There is a big acreage of wheat sown this fall, in this vicinity.

We had two nice fox chases last Wednesday and Thursday nights.

Charlie Clore was sun struck the other day while sowing wheat.

Mrs. J. J. Lillard has been quite sick, but is improving at this writing.

Alfred Cason has a stalk of corn that has four ears on it, and W. I. Rouse one with six good size ears.

Mrs. Haglish has returned home after a visit with her children and friends in the neighborhoods of Florence and Union.

Rabbit Hash.

The health of the neighborhood very good.

Little Hubert Acra has commenced to take lessons in the first reader, under the instructions of Mrs. Bell.

George Ward has quit playing ball and stays at home and entertains his company which arrived last week—It is a girl.

The Chas. L. Grant left the wharf last Thursday evening for her home, after an absence of 3 or 4 months, she passed through the chute without upsetting.

Several of the neighbors passed of the evening very pleasantly last Wednesday, at the residence of Prof Bell's, by listening to music furnished by the string band from the drege boat, assisted by our town violinist, B. C. Calvert.

Our gunsmith, John Smidt, came very near loosing his old and only family cat, last Thursday. She fell through the curb of an old cistern, by the aid of the neighbors she was soon relieved of her critical condition without any injuries.

While out hunting the other morning, R. T. Stephens, son of Solon Stephens, met with a painful but not serious accident, by the accidental discharge of his gun, shooting off three of his toes on his right foot. Dr. Cowen dressed the wound, and if luck jaw does not set in he will be alright in a few days.

Plattsburg

Fall pastures are coming up nicely.

J. A. Tolin is still laid up with a crippled hand.

Mrs. Alice Walker is teaching the Woolper school this term.

Corn is selling at 50 cents per bushel in the field, in this vicinity.

W. H. Housley had five acres of tobacco that will make 2000 pounds to the acre.

Geo. C. Gibbs has gone to Kansas to look out a location, he is at present in Harper county.

To see a young man with 'grip sack in hand going towards the river is a sign that the grand jury will soon be in session.

Rev. George Froh has been returned to this circuit and will preach at the Ashby Fork school-house the 4th Sunday in each month, in the afternoon.

G. C. Voshell will move to his Kansas farm in the spring. We regret to lose George from our midst, as he is one of our most thrifty farmers and a good neighbor.

One day not long since in company with Jas Thege, we took a look through the new distillery at Pete. It is a great improvement over the old one, as the machinery is all new and of the most modern kind.

Union.

W. M. Rachal and T. C. Smith are at home from college.

Cal Gordon, of Hebron, was in the village last Sunday.

Mrs. J. A. Huey, jr. has returned from a visit to Louisville.

Miss Hattie Smith, of Covington, is the guest of Spencer Smith.

John J. Garrison has been very low with typhoid fever, but is improving.

Miss Linda Stansifer, of Walton, is visiting her aunt, Mrs. M. C. Norman.

Geo. Gaines, of Bullittsville, visited Mrs. Amanda and Lizzie Huey, Saturday and Sunday.

Mrs. Eliza Senior and Mrs. Jennie McDaniel, of Missouri, are visiting their sister, Mrs. Hedges.

Since the rains and warm weather the pastures present a verdant appearance. The cattle and horses seem to be thankful.

The trustees are taking active steps toward repairing the school-house. They are good trustees and it is to be hoped, will meet with encouragement from the patrons.

The citizens met in the Town Hall last Saturday and formed a detective organization, to protect horses and other property. It seems to meet with the approval of all, hence, must be a good one.

Bellevue.

J. E. Botts is confined to his bed with his old ailment.

H. C. Botts is at home again among his many friends here.

L. W. Knuts and wife have gone to Brown county, Ohio, on a visit.

Mrs. J. E. Walton and sons shipped 300 sacks of wheat from here to Lawrenceburg, last Friday.

Several orchards of apples in our vicinity have been sold to parties in Aurora, Ind., at $1 per barrel to be gathered by the purchaser.

Those of our readers who want to learn the particulars of the last "fish fry" on the island, are referred to Hon. Jim Henderson and Wm. Rush.

Our public school commenced last Monday under the tutorship of that noted Instructor of the young ideas, Prof. B. F. Bells. It is hoped that all who feel an interest in the education of their children will give the Prof. all the assistance and encouragement they can.

The continued showers with the heavy fogs and unusually hot weather is injuring considerable corn in the field and especially that in the shock. We hear of considerable tobacco housing in the house from house burn, here in the bottoms.

After a drouth of three months duration which has been noted for its severity in our vicinity, a succession of fine showers came which lasted more than a week, and has set the grass and fall grain to growing nicely. The earth that, three weeks ago seemed to be burned out is now covered with a carpet of beautiful green.

Last Saturday evening the citizens of Bellevue met at the school-house for the purpose of locating "Uriven well" which they had subscribed to so liberally. After hearing the report of those who had charge of the subscription and ascertaining that enough had been subscribed to sink the well, two points of location was voted upon and the corner of T. J. Clore's lot, opposite the Baptist church selected. M. J. Cobb and Dr. Platt were appointed a committee to contract, superintend and settle for the material and construction of the well. The work of driving the tubering will begin about the middle of this week. Thus our many friends in our adjoining towns when visiting us after this, if not supplied with the best of liquors and viands will be furnished with a bountiful supply of "Adams ale" free of cost.

Personal Mentions.

[If you have friends from a distance visiting you or expect to be away from home on business or pleasure, let us have the item for this column.]

Charles Pope, son of W. H. Pope has been quite sick for several days.

Mr. and Mrs. L. H. Dills sojourned in Williamstown a few days last week.

Mrs. Sarah Carpenter returned home last week, after a [illegible] visit to relations in Cincinnati.

Col. Montfort, Col. J. J. Landram and Judge R. B. Reed were the first legal luminaries from a distance to shoot across the judicial horizon of Boone at this term of court.

REPLY.

What, then, is Love? she said.
Love is a music, blent in curious key
Of jarring discords and of harmony;
'Tis a delicious draught which, as you sip,
Turns sometimes into poison on your lip.
It is a sunny sky infolding storm,
The fire to ruin or the fire to warm;
A garland of fresh roses fair to sight,
Which then becomes a chain and fetters tight.
It is a half-heard secret told to two,
A life-long puzzle or a guiding clew,
The joy of joys, the deepest pain of pain.
All these Love has been and will be again.

How may I know? she said.
Thou mayest not know, for Love has conned the art
To blind the reason and befool the heart;
So subtle is he, not himself may guess
Whether he shall be more or shall be less;
Wrapped in a veil of many colored mists,
He flits disguised wherever he lists
And for the moment is the thing he seems:
The child of vagrant hope and fairy dreams
Sails like a rainbow bubble on the wind,
Now high, now low, before us or behind;
And only when our fingers grasp the prize
Changes his form and swiftly vanishes.

Then best not love, she said.
Dear child, there is no better and no best.
Love comes not, bides not at thy slight behest.
As well might thy frail fingers seek to stay
The march of waves to yonder land-locked bay,
As stem the surging tide which flows and fills
With human energies and human wills.
The moon leads on the strong, resisting sea;
And so the moon of love shall beckon thee,
And at her bidding thou wilt leap and rise
And follow o'er strange seas, 'neath unknown skies,
Unquestioning; to dash, or soon or late,
On sand or cruel crag, as is thy fate.

Then woe is me! she said.
Weep not; there is a harder, sadder thing,
Never to know this sweetest suffering!
Never to see the suns, though suns may stay,
Or share the richer feast as others may.
Sooner the sealed and closely guarded wine
Shall seek again its purple clustered vine,
Sooner the attar be again the rose,
Than Love unlearn the secret that it knows!
Abide thy fate, whether for good or ill.
Fearlessly wait, and be thou certain, still,
Whether as foe disguised or friendly guest
He comes, Love's coming is of all things best.

IN QUEER COMPANY.

How a Journalist Passed an Evening Among the Outlaws of the Metropolis—A Story of London Life.

It was late on a very cold afternoon during the winter of 1876-77 that I was hurrying westward along the Marylebone road, congratulating myself upon having turned my back upon the bitter east wind and comparing the climate of London towards the end of December with that which I had been enjoying exactly twelve months previously when at Calcutta, as one of the special correspondents with the Prince of Wales. I had got nearly as far as the Edgware road when a man touched his hat to me and asked me for the wherewith to get a night's lodging. He did not look like an ordinary or a professional beggar. His clothes, although very shabby, were evidently well made. He looked so pinched and weary that I stopped and fumbled in the ticket-pocket of my overcoat for a sixpence to give him. He stared at me very hard indeed whilst I was getting the money, and as I handed it to him, broke out with an exclamation of wonder, asking me whether my name was not so-and-so. I replied that it was and asked him where he had ever seen me before. To make a long story short, this poverty-stricken man asking alms on the public streets turned out to be a gentleman I had known many years before, when he was a Captain in one of our crack lancer regiments and had a private fortune of his own of more than fifteen hundred a year. When I had last seen him he was a man of little over thirty, but was now on the wrong side of fifty, and, owing to want, care, hunger, cold and dirt looked very much older. He had always been a very fast man. Betting, cards and doing bills at sixty per cent. had worked out their legitimate ends upon him. I had lost all sight of him for fully twenty years, but remembered having heard that he had been obliged to sell out on account of his many debts. All this and much more, too, he related when he came to my house, as I had told him to do, and helped him, as far as it was in my power with a little money and some old clothes.

When I asked him what he intended to do for the future, he said that if he could only get a decent outfit and a few pounds for traveling expenses, he had an opening in Paris that would soon put him on his legs again. It so happened that I knew slightly two or three men who had been in the same regiment with this individual; and of these there was one who was very well off. I therefore wrote out an appeal for the poor fellow, sent it to the different parties, and was greatly pleased when, instead of realizing, as I had hoped, some ten or fifteen pounds, the contributions sent me came to upwards of thirty pounds. With this money I first got the unfortunate man a fairly good outfit of clothes and then made over to him the balance left, about six pounds, to use as he liked. He was exceedingly grateful and asked me to express his thanks to those who had responded so generously to my letters. It was about a fortnight after I had met him on the Marylebone road that he called to bid me farewell and to thank me again for all I had done, which, after all, was merely having written some half dozen letters and taken a little trouble in getting his clothes as good and as cheap as I could. He told me that he was leaving for Paris that evening.

For five or six months I neither saw nor heard anything about him. At the end of that time I received a note from this individual telling me he was in London, saying he would like to see me and giving me his address at a respectable hotel near Leicester Square. I wrote an answer and as I happened to be going into the neighborhood I called at the hotel, intending to leave it there. But as the waiter told me that the gentleman was at home and was then writing in the coffee room I went there and found my former acquaintance, who seemed delighted to see me. He had evidently prospered since I last saw him. He was well, it perhaps somewhat flashily, dressed; had what seemed to be a valuable pin in his neck-scarf, a thick gold chain from one waistcoat pocket to another, and two or three rings on his fingers. He looked more like a Frenchman than an Englishman, and would certainly have passed a better muster at Brebant's or in the Cafe du Helder than he could have done in a London club. But what showed more plainly than anything else that he had done well, and what pleased me greatly, was that he there and then pulled out a roll of bank notes and insisted upon repaying me what I had collected for him from his former friends. It was in vain that I protested that those gentlemen had parted with their money as a gift and not as a loan; that I did not know where to find them at present, and that I begged he would not think of repaying me the small portion I had contributed to the amount. No; nothing would serve him but to make me take the money and to give it back as best I could to those who had assisted him in his great distress.

As a matter of course I was very curious to know by what means he had, at some means or at any rate, recovered his position in the world, or how he had managed to fill his empty purse. But to all my questions he gave the most evasive answers.

He frankly said that I was not only puzzled as to what his mysterious business could be, but that I had serious thoughts of not coming near him again until I found out whether my doing so would compromise myself. And apparently obeying a sudden impulse, he all at once opened out and made what I may call his confession to me.

"For some time past," he began, "I have seen that you wonder what my business is and why I am so mysterious with regard to what I do and what I write. Well, I will now make a clean breast of it."

He then told me that some two or three years previously he had got into what he called "worse than a mess" in Paris. He had somehow got mixed up with a gang of card-sharpers, without knowing to what an extent they carried on their dishonest practices, and had so far compromised himself that the French police had him at their mercy. They had, however, let him off, holding over him the power they had to prosecute him at any future time, should they think he deserved it. But they made certain conditions with him, and these were that he should go to London and furnish them from time to time with all the information he could gather respecting certain receivers of goods stolen in France, who resided in this metropolis. In order to do this the more effectually, he had managed not only to get acquainted with the leaders of a gang which worked for their friends in Paris but he had also got himself received as one of them, and used to go to their meetings almost every night. The work, as he told me, had been most unpleasant, but it was nearly at an end; and the French police had promised that he should very soon be altogether free from his engagements with them.

To mix with people of whom little or nothing is known, and to penetrate into places which are hidden from the generality of mankind, has always had a great charm for me. Mr. Dane was not a little surprised when, instead of leaving him after I had heard his story, I told him he would do me a great favor if he took me to a meeting of his dishonest friends, and that I would pledge myself never to give any information that might lead to a single member of the band getting into trouble. After making some objections to my request, he at last consented, and said that the first night he could get out he would go to the meeting of the gang by himself, but would then make arrangements for me to accompany him the following evening. And thus it was that I managed to get into very "queer company."

From what I could gather it seemed that there had been, a few days before, a robbery of valuable jewels in Paris and that the difficulty of those connected with the affair was to get the plunder safely over to the United States. The London police had been put on the alert, but the thieves—or shall I call them the agents and helpers of thieves?—did not seem to fear them. They discussed very freely the relative merits of the French and English detective systems, saying that in cases of house-breaking and murders the latter rarely failed to bring the offenders to justice, but that in cases of clever "plants" the former were much more to be feared.

"You never know," said one Englishman present, with a round oath, "where or when you may come across those horrible French spies. Why, we might have 'em, in the very midst of us, some one who is in their pay."

But of the United States they spoke in the highest terms; or in very much the same manner that an artisan who could not earn the wherewith to pay for dry bread in this country might praise some place in the Far West where industry was certain to gain an honest living. From what I gathered it would seem that whenever a robbery on a large scale is carried out the first object of those concerned is to get "the swag" out of the country as soon as possible. Thus, the produce of a plunder in Paris is almost invariably taken to London and vice versa. If the thieves can so arrange beforehand as to get away from where the theft has been committed within a few hours of the completion of their handiwork, they believe themselves to be all but safe, or at least the chances are about five to one in their favor. If they have the luck to get clear of Europe and safely land in America the chances are that they will get clear altogether, realize a good price for their plunder and make things pleasant all around. The United States, as I said before, is a capital country to go to; but South America is still better. In neither of these parts are many questions asked; but in the latter country the prices given are higher than in the North and sales are more readily effected. In London the market for jewelry is by no means good; for, as a rule, the stones have to be taken out of the setting, and the latter has to be secreted or instantly melted, else the police are pretty certain to get scent of the affair.

There was one member of this respectable society to whom I happened to sit next, and who told me in an undertone that he had once held a commission in the Indian army. Without appearing to do so, I put in the course of the evening some half dozen leading questions to him, and found that not only was he telling me the truth, but that I remembered perfectly well the circumstances some fifteen years previously, which caused him to be tried by a general court-martial and cashiered. He was evidently a leading spirit amongst those present. Under the peculiar circumstances which brought me amongst those I spent the evening with, there may well be applied the old adage of "honor among thieves." And although only the younger son of a younger son, this man belonged to a family of which the head is a respectable baronet, not unknown in either the political or the fashionable world. But never once throughout the whole evening was this individual addressed by his right name, of which I am certain the rest of the company were ignorant. In fact, he never told me in so many words who he really was; it was only when he mentioned the circumstances connected with his court-martial and said to what corps he had belonged that I remembered all about him. He appeared to be not only very popular, but quite a leading man and an authority among those present. But it certainly seemed wonderful to see him, a well-born, a well brought-up man, who had been educated at Harrow, had afterwards held a commission for some years in the Indian army and had risen to the rank of captain, so fallen as to have become not only a professional thief, but to glory in his shame.

Throughout the evening he told stories of his adventures in rascal-land, which were always listened to and invariably applauded. In one of these tales he related how he had some years previously taken lodgings in a well-known street near St. James' Square, calling himself Lord So-and-so. A "pal" of his, who was "in the swim" with him, had gone to a certain wealthy gentleman in South Kensington and had asked for the place of butler, giving a reference to the so-called "lord," who told the tale with great glee. The gentleman, who had advertised for a butler, was known to have in his house a considerable quantity of plate and his wife to have a great deal of valuable jewelry. They were wealthy people, having lately returned from one of the colonies, where the gentleman had acquired a large fortune. The latter called upon the would-be nobleman to ask about the character of the butler.

"I received him," said he who told the tale, "with a kindly condescension and consideration, which seemed to please him and yet to make him very respectful. I gave Tommy"—the sham butler—"an excellent character, saying that I had only parted with him because I was going to travel in the East for a couple of years. The party was quite satisfied and quite agreeable to take him. Tommy got the place, was much liked and remained there about two months. Then"—winking his eye—"there was a robbery of plate and jewels to a large amount. Tommy beat a speedy retreat and I went to the States, and there Tommy met me. It was a good thing, a very good thing, was that plant and a very simple one, too. To this day I don't believe the party has any idea that the noble lord in the West End lodging was a deceiver. He wrote to me to say how he had been robbed and that he feared the butler had had a hand in the business. I replied—on paper with a coronet, if you please—that I was very sorry, but could hardly believe my old servant would have been guilty of such a crime. In these days the police were not very fly and the whole affair was soon forgotten."

Another little adventure of the same kind which the ex-officer related of himself did not turn out quite so fortunate, or rather, as he expressed himself, he had "very nearly come to grief." He had gone to Paris, put up at a very good hotel, paid his way regularly and had purchased from time to time a considerable quantity of jewelry at a fashionable shop, for which he had, as he expressed it, "parted with the ready" to the extent of some two hundred pounds. When he thought that he had won the confidence of the shopkeeper he order a number of bracelets and earrings, all of great value, to be sent to the hotel, intending to play off the old trick of taking the goods into another room for an imaginary lady—who was said to be ill in bed—to select from and then to make off with the whole parcel. But the shopman who took the things to the hotel seemed to have some misgiving about the intending purchaser and insisted upon following the latter into the inner room, where there was no lady at all, either sick or well. As the individual who told the story said of himself, he blundered over the affair and did not deserve to succeed, for he ought to have secured assistance to work the affair properly. The shopman got angry and went away, threatening to expose him. But the intending thief was too sharp for him. He had already paid his hotel bill and had ordered a cab, so as to be ready for a start. He now took advantage of these preparations and drove off to the Calais Railway Station, remained there a short time, then ordered another vehicle, made his way to the St. Lazare station, got to Havre and arrived safely in London.

But his regrets, when he told the story, at having expended two hundred pounds without making any profit, were curious to hear. Any one who listened to him without hearing the first part of his story would have imagined that he had lost the money in the most legitimate speculation. The company who heard his tale condoled with him as if he was a merchant who had been unfortunate in some adventure he had tried and failed.

I was anxious to know what the company I was amongst thought of the London as compared with the French police in the work of detecting crime. But, under the circumstances it was a difficult matter to question them about. I was afraid to ask questions on the subject lest I should be thought to display too much curiosity and should awaken the suspicions of those amongst whom I was and so cause them to suspect I was not one of themselves. But it so happened that I found the subject made easy for me. The newspapers had very lately been discussing the details of a robbery of bullion that had taken place on one of the French railways. To the company amongst whom I found myself such a subject was as interesting and as certain to be discussed as the Two Thousand or the Derby would be at a sporting club. In this affair the thieves had been successful at first, but so soon as it became known the French police had telegraphed to every seaport in France and had set themselves to work in Paris to find out the culprits. They were successful and managed to lay their hands upon the three men who had carried out the robbery. But this had been done in a manner which the company I was amongst that evening stigmatized as "sneaking" and "cowardly."

"In England," said one of those present, "the police are hard upon a fellow when they catch him. But when they are trying to find the men they want they are fair and above board. They have no dirty spies. They act honorable. You can always tell pretty well when a plain clothes officer is after you. But the French have a low, sneaking way of going to work. You never know but what the landlord of the hotel, or the waiter, or the porter, or the shopman who brings you a parcel may not be a detective in disguise. No. Give me Old England to do business in! Everybody here, even the police, is on the square."

"Yes," said one of the party, who talked a good deal about Paris, and seemed, from what he said, to have "done business" in that city to some extent, "and that's not the worst of it. Why, I have known these French police employ women to spot down a fellow. There was two years ago a big affair in the Champs-Elysee. The chief hand in it was a New Yorker called Johnson. He would have got clean away with everything had it not been for a female with whom he associated. He was caught, and got what they call travaux forces for ten years. He never could find out who it was that peached on him. But one of his French pals discovered: after he was taken, that this woman had been all along in the pay of the police, receiving money from them as well as from Johnson. Do you call that fair play?" he asked, indignantly, to which a universal cry of "shame! shame!" was set up in reply.

There was one thing which struck me very forcibly throughout the evening I spent in what Frenchmen would call this eccentric company, and that was how none of those present ever once compromised themselves by talking of any future "business." At any rate, such matters were never made a subject of general conversation. For some time after I first joined the party I noticed that some one or other of them would go and talk to another individual in a low tone of voice, but those who thus spoke to one another evidently took great care that what they said should not be heard.

In England we set great value upon the publicity given by the press to everything that takes place. The company in which I found myself on this memorable evening—or at any rate those with whom I spoke on the subject—praised this national peculiarity as much as, or even more than, most of us do. They said that the newspaper reports about "plants" and the manner in which robberies are carried out are, as a rule, the most utter rubbish; and that the daily accounts of what the police had not done in any particular case were of the utmost service to them and virtually kept them informed of what their enemies, the guardians of society, were doing. The more publicity given to all cases in which they were concerned the better prepared were they to avoid places and persons that might be dangerous to their safety from arrest and other troubles. Several of the party expressed themselves very earnestly to the effect that the English newspapers would always be allowed to publish the fullest details of what the police knew in cases of robbery. On the other hand, they abused the French Government in no measured terms for not allowing similar intelligence to be made public, one of the company asking in a very sarcastic tone and manner whether that was republican liberty which put a stop to the press telling people facts which had really happened. From what was said on this subject it would seem that the gentlemen who follow the profession of those among whom I found myself that night look upon publicity in all police inquiries as of the greatest use to them.

In the course of the evening I got my friend who had brought me to the place to ask one of the party in a sort of off-hand manner whether he and his friends were not afraid of a detective officer coming amongst them and giving information to the authorities of all he saw and heard. The question was purposely put in a rather loud tone of voice and at a moment when there was a lull in the general conversation, so that others might hear it. For answer there was returned a general laugh, and then a burly, somewhat elderly man—who, if I may judge from his talk, must have had considerable experience in the profession—spoke up.

"Detectives!" said he. "We don't fear no detectives here in London. We know them all in their plain clothes just as well as if they were uniform. They acts on the square with us. They don't go a-making of themselves up to be what they ain't. They don't tell us what they are; but we know 'em well. Just let any one with eyes in his head go a-loafing round the police courts for a minute or two, and he'll know every detective in London." After a short pause this individual, who was a sort of oracle amongst his fellows, continued: "There's one thing I'll say for the plain-clothes officers, you can't 'square' them; and it's no use trying to do so. But, then, you have them in another way, you know them at first sight, and it would only be a duffer of the first water that would allow hisself to be taken in by them."

My friend replied: "Well, there are people who get taken in by them."

"More fools they," was the rejoinder. "I don't think you'll find one of this ere company who has ever come to trouble through them, unless it were his own fault."

As the night advanced the persons who formed this assembly began to leave the place, singly and by twos and threes, bringing to a close the most extraordinary evening it was ever my lot to pass. On leaving the place my friend linked his arm in mine and took me through several narrow streets, none of which I recognized—crossing and turning very often—until all of a sudden we found ourselves on the south side of Lincoln's Inn Fields, and a few minutes more were in Fleet street. My companion, knowing that I wrote for newspapers and periodicals, asked me, as a personal favor, not to give any account of the affair until at least a couple of years should have passed. This I promised to do. And as more than eleven years have elapsed since I passed that evening amongst the agents of thieves my promise has not been broken. As for the person who was my guide that night I only saw him once or twice afterwards. He came to call on me in the winter of 1878 and told me he was about to sail for America, but would not be away more than four or five months. But from that day to this I have never heard a word about him and can not tell whether he is dead or alive.—Chambers' Journal.

Evening Up the Yield of Crops.

It has been said of men who live upon and farm poor land, that they should go about the premises always having gypsum in one pocket and clover seed in the other. There is a meaning in this expression broader than is conveyed by its mere literal interpretation. Acting upon this idea it is well to look over one's fields as crops have matured and see the extent to which defective places have failed to yield a paying return. A very significant hint is furnished by the yield upon a given portion of the field, of oats that make short sheaves, or corn that grows to a short stature and bears nubbins only. The same may be said of thin spots in the pasture or meadow, and of low places where water stands. The significance of carrying gypsum in one pocket and clover seed in the other, is brought out by the scanty bearing knoll, while in the instance of a sag in the land the decreased yield is not due to defective nutriment in the soil, but to too much water about the roots of growing crops. It is a fact, that crops can not be grown successfully upon food highly diluted and chilled by being held in solution in cold water, just as it is true that animals can not be fattened upon food similarly diluted and given in such way as to keep the digestive and assimilative organs at too low a temperature. Concentrated, undiluted food is required to build up the tissue of animals and make them firm withal, while to underdraining we must look for the removal of the diluted and chilled state in which the sustenance of plants is held in these wet sags upon the farm.

We may call this "evening up the yield." If in a team working together, one horse is in good flesh and another in thin condition, no even, fair execution of work is expected till the thin horse is fed up and made effective. In the case of these uneven yields, the plan of leaving land to lie over, "fallowing," as it is termed, is not practicable, for perhaps nine-tenths of the field will be amply productive with one-tenth only at fault. Now that the crops have given evidence of the local shortcomings, drive a stake where these evidences have appeared, and through liberal loads of manure in the one case and tapping the water accumulation from beneath in the other, it will be fair to expect next season's yield will be, in a measure at least, "evened up." No one need be at a loss and think he must call in a chemist to analyze the soil in these cases of spotted crops, as they may well be termed. As a rule, crops themselves make a better analysis of the land—and this is true of the whole field as well as of defective spots—than any chemist can, showing the evidences above ground in the one case, in the stunted, pale-colored growth, and in the other, in the luxuriant, wide-spreading, deep-tinted plant. The same rule can wisely be applied to a field spotted in the manner named, as to a collection of farm animals under the feeding process. Among these will be individuals that should be singled out from the main herd, and fed in a special manner, upon rich foods. Now it is known to pretty much all farmers that, continuously, from year to year, the crops are what we here term spotted, and that this comes from the cause named. It takes the highest skill in breeding and feeding to keep up a uniform state of flesh and appearance in a herd; and a herd not so kept looks uneven and unsightly, yet not more so than the fields whose yields are not kept evened up.—National Live Stock Journal.

—"There are quite a number of peculiarities connected with cuffs. We have one customer, a clerk in the Third National Bank, who is in the habit of figuring on his cuffs. Sometimes he uses an aniline pencil, and it takes a good deal of work to get the marks out. Then he has a habit of always turning his cuffs and marking up the other ends, so that by the time they reach the laundry they look more like two dirty telegrams than anything else. Quite a number of reporters have the same habit, and I found the text and leading outlines of a minister's sermon upon a pair on Wednesday morning.

—When Captain Cook first visited Tahiti, the natives were using nails made of wood, shellbone and stone. When they saw iron nails they fancied them to be shoots of wood, and desirous of securing such a valuable commodity, they planted them in their gardens.

Cloudy Chemistry.

Those who write on agricultural chemistry for the farm papers, or talk in public, should at least be familiar enough with the science to write and talk correctly—and the reporters, if themselves ignorant of the subject, should get the speakers whom they report to prepare their own abstracts of what they say, for perhaps it is sometimes the reporter who is to blame for the remarkable chemistical feasts with which we are occasionally regaled. To illustrate: A speaker at a recent meeting of the Massachusetts Horticultural society is made to say that "nitrogen is not plant food, but a solvent;" all of which is sheer nonsense, except the final statement that nitrogen is not plant food.

At another meeting of the same well known society, the same speaker is reported to have said that "in the cellular structure of plants every cell is enveloped in a tissue composed of nitrogen"—which is about as close a tissue of error, botanical and chemical, as could well be crowded into so small a space. Again, he speaks of the excellent effect of coal ashes in extracting nitrogen from filthy waters, the nitrogen turning first into ammonia, then into nitric acid, and then into soluble nitrates which wash away. Verily, the days of the old alchemists must be coming again, if one substance can be "turned into" another in this style; and all this appears in one of Boston's best known papers.

Now what is this nitrogen, about which so much is said and written for the farmer's benefit in these days when so many more farmers think that such things are worth reading about than in days when we older men were small boys? It is a perfectly inactive and harmless gaseous substance, it makes up almost four-fifths of the air that we breathe: its evident purpose there is to tone down the action of the oxygen which makes up the remaining one-fifth; and it serves this purpose just because it is so utterly without any effect on even the most delicate tissue or sensitive fluid of plant or animal; and this is what is said to make waters filthy!

To talk "nitrogen clouds" in the upper part of the atmosphere, washed down by rains, is an absurdity. Clouds in our atmosphere are due to the condensation of water, which also in a gaseous and invisible form is always present there, into a visible form by a fall in temperature; no fall in temperature that is even within man's power to bring about by artificial means, very much less any fall naturally occuring in the air, can make a cloud out of nitrogen. Again, there is no more nitrogen where the clouds are than at the surface of the earth; and even if there were it would not be washed down by the rains, because rainwater can at the most take up only a very little of it; and even if it were washed down it would be of no use to the farmer.

Nitrogen is what chemists know as an elementary substance, since by no operation, however powerful that they can subject it to, can they break it up or decompose it into two or more other substances unlike itself. In this free, elementary state, it has not, so far as our positive knowledge extends at present, any agricultural significance or use whatever for the production of crops. Though it can not be broken up into new substances, it can be made to join in chemical combination with other elementary substances, such as hydrogen, oxygen or carbon, etc., and form the compound substances so often named in agricultural chemical writing, ammonia, nitric acid or nitrates, protein or albuminoids, nitrogenous matters and so on.

In these conditions nitrogen is of the utmost agricultural importance, and becomes more and more useful to the farmer, just in proportion as he knows how to handle it make it serve his purpose. In the form of animal refuse, or other waste nitrogeneous matters all of which are mostly wasted protein or albuminoids, or in the shape of nitrates or ammonia compounds, he uses it to make his crops grow; in the protein of his crops he uses it to make meat or milk; and finally when he can work up its compounds no further, that is when he has got as much of it as possible back from the wasted protein of his manure into the protein or albuminoids of the grain or milk, wool or meat that he sells, he would find on going into the chemistry of the matter that this nitrogen constitutes the chief, or at least a very important part, of the money value of these finished products of his farm.

Chemical decompositions and recombinations, or this chemical play coming together in some form or combination with each other, and brought about by the power of the sun in the presence of a certain degree of moisture is the very foundation of crop production. It begins with sprouting of seed or tuber, or any other waking-up of plant activity in spring, and does not stop for an instant till the crop is harvested; and then, even, it may continue to a feeble extent, but the less the better. If it was possible that the carbon, oxygen, hydrogen or nitrogen should suffer even but a very small alteration in the chemical properties, by which the sun would lose any of his power over its combinations, a disastrous disturbance in crop production might follow, worse than any effect of drought or invasion of insect, pest or disease.

The farmer is really the intelligent agent for bringing these chemical compounds together under such conditions of sunshine and soil that this great chemical work can go on. Agricultural chemistry is the science that attempts to learn all about the character of this work, and how best to make it move on vigorously and successfully to the end; if acquaintance with any science can be useful to the agriculturist, certainly this can be. Like every science, this one must have its own peculiar names for the things it deals with, and its own peculiar statements as to what things are and how they behave; a correct knowledge of the meaning of these names, and of the first principles of the science is the very beginning of a farmer's chemical wisdom; and any one who utters such misleading agricultural chemical nonsense as that quoted above, or without a protest allows such to be reported as his utterances, does the cause for which he is supposed to be working more harm than good.—Dr. G. C. Caldwell, in N. Y. Tribune

—Probably the most cheerful light station on the California coast is the Farallon light. Thomas Owen, W. H. Rugg, David R. Spiain, Philip Savage and an army mule are the accredited Government forces at that place. The following story is told about the mule: "He has been at Farallon several years. All his work consists in hoisting up twice a year the provisions brought over by the light-house Inspector in a steamer. He has learned the sound of the whistle, and when he hears it, hides to shirk work. At the last visit of the Inspector the mule hid and had to be hunted for two hours in the rocks before he could be found.—San Francisco Chronicle.

—There is a little Shoshone papoose at Tuscarora, Nev., only four years of age and not much larger than a pickle jar, who evinces wonderful aptitude for molding images out of mud and clay. His mother was engaged at a washtub outside of a house the other day, and from the mud caused by the sloppings, the little savage molded a deer and a horse, which were almost perfect in contour and form.—Denver Tribune.

HOME AND FARM.

—A flock of sheep on a timothy meadow, naked and defenseless, is a bad sight to see. They will cut away the bulbs which are the life of the grass. They will eat their heads off by eating the roots of the timothy.—Cleveland Leader.

—To feed young pigs a little six times a day is better than to do so less often, says an exchange. By a "little" is meant enough to fill the stomach moderately full, but in no case to the extent of stuffing or gorging. This latter manner of feeding will destroy the appetite or produce an inflated or poddy condition and stunt the pig.—Chicago Journal.

—The crook-necked squashes are not as watery as the round ones. Select those that are tender. If they are not too old you can cut through the skin with your nail. Wash them and cut in slices about a half inch thick, and lay them on a cloth in a steamer. When they are tender, turn them out into a hot dish and mash them, adding salt and butter to taste. If the skins and seeds are not tender enough to eat, rub the squash through a colander.—Exchange.

—Preserved peaches: Twelve pounds ripe peaches, six pounds sugar, one pint vinegar. Make a syrup of the sugar, vinegar and a little water. When this comes to a boil drop in a few at a time and cook until they are so soft that a broom splinter will easily pierce to the stone. Do not think that this is a recipe for pickled peaches; the vinegar will not be noticed except in the increased richness of the preserves.—Boston Budget.

Farmers generally have not watched or studied the effects of change of feed as a corrective of ailments in stock. The condition of the system may be more effectually and safely controlled by food than by condition powders or any of the many patent nostrums. "Throw physic to the dogs," but not to the stock. We have laxative foods and constipating foods. If the farmer who feeds his horses and pigs every day, himself, is at all observing, he will vary the feed to suit the condition of the animal, and not wait until the animal's system is hopelessly deranged.—Ohio Farmer.

—The Grocer and Country Merchant refers to the damage done to wool by careless marking with tar or paint, which will not wash out, and gives this recipe, which is said to resist the weather, but yields to warm water and soap: "Take lampblack or Spanish red, and mix with strong vinegar; mix it well to the thickness of paint. The sheep should be marked on some part of the back; by this means the mark is not so likely to be obliterated by the animals rubbing together. By employing the above mixture, instead of the wool being depreciated in value as it is by the use of tar and paint, it will bring its full value."

—Apple Sago Pudding: Pare and core a half dozen sour, juicy apples, and arrange them in a buttered pudding dish; fill up the hollow of each apple with sugar and put a bit of butter on top. Cover the dish closely and set in oven to bake till the apples are thoroughly done. Meanwhile boil in a double kettle a scant cup of sago with two cups of water and a little salt. When done, which may be seen by the transparent, jelly-like look of the sago and by the taste, beat in a lump of butter, sugar to taste, and flavoring if desired. Pour the sago over the baked apples in the pudding dish and set back in the oven to brown on top.—The Household.

Free Homes.

Rent is the tyrant of our town and city homes. It is a continual cloud over the contentment of many a family. We are all the while hearing what a curse the rent system is to Ireland. Yet in the United States there are thousands upon thousands of excellent citizens who really have no more independence than the average Irish peasant. They are able to pay rent, but after it is paid they have nothing left.

A baneful catch-phrase is abroad, viz: It is cheaper to rent than to own. Sometimes it is, and more often it is not. The question of economics which that saying involves can not be generalized. It depends upon the circumstances of the individual case and its affirmative is very unsafe because very uncertain. In many single cases it may be true one year and false the next. But it is always safe for a man to own his house and be free from the slavery of rent.

The best liberty possible to the American citizen can seldom be had except in a home that is free from rent. The fullest responsibility of citizenship can scarcely be felt by the man who does not own the roof that shelters him. The reason of this is to be found in that almost indefinable lack of independence which every rent-payer feels, and which he sometimes feels with a keenness that is severely humiliating. On the other hand, there is not a sufficient reason why such a large proportion of our town and city people should be rent-payers. At least eighty per cent. of our industrious, middle-aged men could have already been owners of their homes if they had chosen to be reasonably saving for that purpose. This is easily possible without any loss of respectability. It is a false and harmful idea that respectability necessarily involves expensive living. But even were it so, all the possible loss of social standing occasioned by decent economy is recompensed when the home is actually gained and the man has shaken off the shackles of rent. Other things being equal, the home-owner will be more respected than the renter, especially if he has acquired his home by his own industry and economy.

The saving of rent will pay for a home in a remarkably short time. For a man of small income there is no way to a free home except through careful economy, and a good point to begin at is in the saving of rent. Let him move into a cheaper house, put up with disadvantages for a while, save the difference in rent and add to this saving by economy in some other direction. In a very short time he can make a first payment on a home that will suffice him. After that the same rent money he was paying before he moved into the cheap house will meet the interest and pay some of the principal upon his purchase. Then the work of home-getting grows easier at a rapid ratio, for both the principal and interest accounts are reduced with each payment. The ending is easy and a free home is the result. Henceforth, rent-money is not the weekly or monthly anxiety at the house. The cloud has been lifted and the comforts and elegancies do not have to be dispensed with in order to every few days appease the demand for rent.

In this country a free home is possible to almost every healthy man.—School and Home.

—The wild horse of America, although now native to the soil, is descended from the tribes of wild horses that still rove the plains of Central Asia. When the discoverers of this continent first landed there were no horses anywhere in either North or South America. Centuries before the horse had been introduced in Europe from Asia, and had become common all over the continent. When Columbus arrived here on his second voyage in 1493 he brought with him a number of horses, which were landed in Florida. They were introduced to Mexico by Pizano.—Chicago Herald.

Money that Nobody Owns.

There are, it seems, $20,000,000 in securities and money in the treasury of the United States that no one claims. In times gone by sundry persons have bought government securities which they have lost or which have been destroyed; hence the money [illegible] unclaimed bonds in the treasury. There are savings banks in New York which have in their vaults large sums that will never be claimed. They belong to poor people who died, or that have moved away, or have forgotten they had ever any money in the banks. There is supposed to be some $80,000,000 of unclaimed money in banks and trust companies throughout the country which is lost to the heirs forever.—Demorest's Monthly.

BOONE COUNTY RECORDER.

VOLUME IX. | BURLINGTON, KY., WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 15, 1884. | NUMBER 50.

TOPICS OF THE DAY.

IN China the sum of $121,752,000 is expended annually for the worship of ancestors.

THE King of Siam has 263 children. He pretends to be surprised because his neighbors are always moving.

WORKERS in bleacheries where chlorine is largely used are singularly exempt from all germ diseases.

WHEAT will soon be cheap enough to enable the baker, at his present and old-time prices, to keep from starving to death.

JAMES WILSON MARSHALL, who claims to be the discoverer of the great gold fields of California, is living at Sacramento and is without property.

COLONEL STEWART and forty of his men have been sacrificed upon the Egyptian altar, where England has offered up the lives of so many a soldier, brave and true.

A CHAIR is in use in Newport lawn which registers the weight of any one sitting in it without the sitter's knowledge. It is said that several ladies have been sincerely vexed at this stratagem.

SOME French women have adopted the English tailor made dress with so much enthusiasm that they wear it even at the races, where it is very much out of place.

SINCE the inauguration of cheap telegraphy in France, the number of telegrams sent in that country has increased enormously. Last year there were fifty-eight telegrams for every one hundred of the population.

THE lords must go. Gladstone, in his speeches in Scotland, has shown increased severity toward them. Even the London Times comes out and says the privileges of the lords must be reformed. The people, it seems, have tired of giving up all the fatness of the land to hereditary greatness.

IN Missouri there is a lake which is unique. It possesses a beach largely composed of lead sand. This has been produced by the gradual breaking down of a bank containing veins of galena. The water is said to be poisonous, and no fishes are ever to be found near the beach.

CAPTAIN PRATT, Superintendent of the Indian Training School at Carlisle, Pa., has returned from New Mexico, bringing seventy-seven young Indians of the Pueblo tribe, ranging in age from nine to twenty years. The fall term of the school opened the other day with 400 pupils.

THE Chinese forces exceed 760,000 men. With such an army Li Hung Chang might be expected to hurl the French invaders into the sea. But at the least calculation 700,000 of these Chinese soldiers have neither patriotism nor courage, and will skedaddle on the slightest provocation.

CAPTAIN BOYCOTT, whose name has enriched the English language because of an effort to cut him off from all relations with the world, has been nominated for Parliament from County Mayo, for which Mr. Parnell was returned at the general election of 1880. His selection will no doubt give the wits all the employment they need in working over the jokes about his name.

LORD RUPERTSWOOD, of Victoria, is reputed to be richer than Vanderbilt. He is worth more than $200,000,000, and his wealth is rapidly increasing. He inherited a great estate from his father, including millions of cattle and sheep in Australia. His residence at Melbourne is said to be the most magnificent in the world. It cost $4,000,000. He is a very liberal giver.

A SCIENTIFIC correspondent of the Boston Transcript writes that during the last ten or twelve years Mr. Keely has utterly failed to give any evidence of the truth of his invention, except to concentrate a great pressure in metallic vessels and exhibit the pressure to spectators. He has never given the slightest evidence of a valuable motor power.

GEN. CROOK declares that there is not in all the State of Pennsylvania a village with the same population more peaceful and law-abiding than the 5,000 Apaches on the San Carlos reservation. The red men have done wonders toward adopting the ways of civilization. The squaws attend to household affairs only, the "bucks" show a willingness to sweat their brows for a living, and government is asked to provide schools and facilities for cultivating the soil and raising stock.

AN English resident in China says that the family house boats are one of the most curious phases of domestic life in that country. They are about the size of two good four-post beds placed end to end. They are covered in at night by a roof of bamboo matting, and in them man and wife, grandparents and little children, cook, sleep and worship, the family altar always occupying the place of honor.

THE astronomers at the Greenwich observatory have been making calculations as to the [illegible] the star Arcturus in his progress towards the earth. They find, as the result of twenty-one observations, that this beautiful, scintillating star is coming for us at the rate of fifty miles and 78-100 per second. This amounts to about 3,000 miles a minute, 180,000 miles an hour, or 4,300,000 miles a day. If Arcturus makes a straight shot we will probably be knocked into smithereens, but not for 93,000 years yet.

CHANGE OF SEX.

A Prominent Young Lady of Chicago Becomes a Man.

The Nods and Winks of Her Schoolmates Lead to a Startling Discovery, and He Is Now Using a Razor.

CHICAGO, October 12.—A well-attested case of a change of sex, which from the prominence of the parties interested has created considerable interest, has just been made public. Mr. John C. Sprey, is a well-known, wealthy and respected citizen. His family consisted of four girls and three boys up to about two months ago. He now has four boys and three girls. The second daughter, Miss Harriet Sprey, was brought up as a girl, and considered herself as such. Much care was spent upon her training and education. She attended the West Division High School, and was a frequent visitor to the natatorium. Here she was considered an expert swimmer. Her powerful frame and awkward movements and athletic manner excited suspicion among her girl friends. She made rapid and satisfactory progress with her studies. There came a time when a manly down adored the upper lip. Her voice, too, deepened from its not unpleasant contralto, and was alternated with the full chest tones of a basso. The young women of the school were quick to see all these indications, and their suspicions were aroused. There began to be nods and winks, and for the first time in her life Miss Hattie began to get the cold shoulder. The matter was brought to the attention of the teachers, and Miss Hattie was sent home. When Miss Hattie had been home some days she had a private and confidential conversation with her mother, which resulted in the calling of an eminent surgeon, Dr. Moses Gunn, well-known in medical circles and a preliminary examination and corroboratory circumstances decided all parties that an operation was necessary. When this was concluded, Miss Harriet, now Harry Sprey, put on a suit of her brother's clothes, had her hair cut, bought a razor, and entered upon a new career as a young man. A day or two when in company with his brother he departed for a school for boys and young men in the city of Boston, where at last accounts he was prosecuting his studies diligently and fitting himself for the battle of life. A number of physicians spoken with upon this very interesting case say there are few like it on record in the books of medical science.

Railroad Wreck.

GREENSBURG, PA., October 12.—This afternoon at Hunkers Station, on the Southwest branch of the Pennsylvania Railroad, a disastrous collision occurred. Engine No. 40, with a train, left the junction here, with orders to meet a north-bound train, Engine 430, with a train of coke, at Thompson's Station. For some unexplained reason the engineer of the north-bound train failed to stop at the telegraph office, at which place a red flag was displayed, and orders waiting to meet the south-bound train there, but instead went a distance of a quarter of a mile to Hunker's Station, where he collided with Engine 430, completely wrecking about forty loaded cars of coke, demolishing both engines, killing one man, and seriously injuring three others. The coke cars caught fire from the engine, and in a few minutes the mass of wreckage and coke was a roaring furnace, as nothing could be done toward clearing the wreck until the fire was extinguished. A fire engine and two hose-carts were sent from Pittsburg by special train to the wreck, but up to a late hour had not succeeded in extinguishing the flames.

Firing the Mines.

NEW STRAITSVILLE, O., October 12.—Mines Nos. 5, 6, 9 and 83, belonging to the Columbus and Hocking Coal and Iron Company, were set on fire last night; also the C. C. and M. Company mine at Sand Run, and W. A. Shoemaker's hoppers, near Nelsonville, were burned. The syndicate have a large force of men working at No. 6 mine trying to smother it out. In No. 7 the fire is beyond control at present. The gas and smoke are so bad that it can not be entered. All the bank cars belonging to that mine are inside. Pinkerton guards have once more been brought to this place, this time to guard the workmen and not the empty mines, as before. Special trains have been going back and forth all this afternoon.

Mysterious Shooting.

WHEELING, W. VA., October 12.—At Peterstown, Monroe County, yesterday afternoon, Miss Nancy Greley and her affianced, Rush Williams, were in a room together, when a shot was heard, and the family rushing into the room, found Miss Greley lying on the floor, her head in a pool of blood, and Williams standing over her with a smoking revolver. Miss Greley, with difficulty, said: "It was an accident," and begged them not to prosecute her lover if she should die. Williams was silent, and has not yet explained the matter. No quarrel was known of between the two. The wound is pronounced fatal.

A Kentuckian Suicides in Texas.

FORT WORTH, TEXAS, October 12.—A strange young man named Tyne Pest suicided this morning at the Pickwick Hotel with morphine. He was well dressed, with money on his person. He left a note requesting his body to be shipped to Point Lick, Ky. No cause assigned.

Blast Furnace Bursts.

JOLIET, ILL., October 11.—The Blast Furnace No. 1, at the rolling-mills north of the city, burst about 11 o'clock last night, setting fire to the stock-house, consuming it, with several cars and other property. Loss heavy.

THE HINDERSHOTS.

Father and Son Escape the Lynchers, and are Taken down the River by the Sheriff.

EVANSVILLE, Ind., October 11.—The attempted lynching of Stillwell Hindershot and his son William, at Cannelton, last night, proved a failure. The mob arrived at the jail about eleven o'clock, and, after a short talk with the Sheriff, was persuaded to retire without carrying out their object. The Hindershots were quietly taken down the river on the steamer Harry Logan, and lodged in the Rockport jail.

Bad Buzzards.

EPHRATA, PA, October 11.—Joe Buzzard, Wm. Weadener and Ditter Clark, members of the Buzzard gang, on Welsh Mountain, were released from jail recently, having served their time. Early yesterday morning they broke into the mill of C. Hershey, near Leaman Place, stole the safe, and hauled it to a field some distance away, where they broke it open with sledges, and secured $150 in money and a lot of valuable papers. The thieves then went to the house of J. N. Woods, who was awakened by the noise of his dogs. Woods and some other men gave chase. The robbers fired on their pursuers, and compelled them to retreat with several bullet-holes through their buggy.

AN EXPLOSION.

Two Workmen Injured—Irish Given Credit for the Deviltry.

QUEBEC, October 11.—About 1 o'clock this afternoon an explosion occurred at the new Parliament buildings, destroying a considerable portion of the masonry and windows of the new building which is just being roofed in. The explosion was at first supposed to have been the boiler of the engine used for hoisting material, but this proved not to be the case, and neither can it be attributed to the gas. The general impression appears to be that the explosion was caused by dynamite but as none of this was used on the works, the mystery is how it came there. An investigation is now being held. The explosion did considerable damage to windows in the vicinity of Parliament House. Almost all the windows in the house itself, in the section where the explosion occurred, are shattered. Mertel, a workman, and Charlebois, contractor, were the only persons injured, and these slightly. The damage by the first explosion was considerable. A hole about twelve feet by five wide was blown out of the wall on the third story, and directly over the right hand entrance to the Assembly chambers, and near the place where the Speaker's chair is situated. The second explosion occurred in the northeast corner of the same building. The corner-stone forming the support of the building was badly bulged, and it is doubtful if it can be repaired without letting down the whole wall. Whatever the reason may be for wishing the destruction of the building, there is no room to doubt that dynamite was used. Everything is quiet in the neighborhood, and a section of a battery is patrolling the ground about the building. The Government was waiting the completion of the building to call the House together for the dispatch of business. The building had been so far advanced that only part of one room remained unfinished. The Cabinet has decided to issue a proclamation offering a reward of $1,000 for information regarding the authors of the outrage. Guards have been placed on all powder magazines connected with the citadel, the military stores and cartridge factory.

Interesting Statistics.

WASHINGTON, October 11.—The Commissioner of the General Land Office has submitted a report of the operations of the office for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1884. The sales, entries and selections of public lands embraced 26,834,041 acres; Indian lands, 697,129 acres; total, 27,531,170 acres; an increase over the year 1883 of 8,101,137 acres, and over 1882 of 13,222,993 acres. Receipts from disposals of public lands, $11,840,993; from Indian lands, $938,137; total, $12,779,130; an increase over 1883 of $1,073,364, and an increase over 1882 of $4,392,750, to which is to be added $10,275 received for certified copies of records, making the total receipts of the year $12,789,405. The total number of entries and filing was 286,812, aggregating 40,625,000 acres, an increase over the preceding year of 60,724. The number of entries approved for patenting under preemption and other laws, 69,276, an increase over the previous year of 6,429. Agricultural patents numbered 51,337, an increase of 855 over the preceding year. The number of private cash entries was 9,894, and 3,266,095 acres were sold under the preemption law, an increase of 920,385 acres over the preceding year. The receipts from cash sales were $10,302,582, an average of a fraction over $1.32 per acre. 8,110 tracts of land, embracing 200,002 acres, were sold at public sale; average, $2.94 per acre.

Stewart's Murder Confirmed.

CAIRO, October 11.—The Mudir of Dongola's agent at Ambukel and the Governor of Merawe confirm the report of the murder of Colonel Stewart by Arabs. General Wolseley has ordered the Mudir to proceed to Merawe with a strong force to rescue the prisoners said to be in the hands of the Arabs. The steamer Nesifkheir, forming part of the Nile expedition, has arrived at Dongola. No British advance in force for the relief of Khartoum will be made until November. A messenger from Ambukel reports that after Gordon returned to Khartoum a boat, with forty Europeans and an Egyptian, accompanied by five negroes and three servants, grounded at Salamat. Sheikhs offered hospitality to the party and enticed them to their homes, where they massacred all but fourteen, who are now prisoners. It is unknown whether any Europeans are among the survivors.

An Unexplainable Suicide.

NEW ORLEANS, October 12.—Mrs. Louisa Mallory, nee Phelps, wife of G. Mallory, of Mystic, Conn., son of C. H. Mallory, drowned this morning in Ponchartain Lake. The lady leaped from the Northeastern train when near Slidell. The party were on the way to the city to spend the winter here, the husband being a Commissioner for Connecticut to the World's Exposition and Cotton Centennial.

President Woolsey, of Yale, Resigns.

NEW HAVEN, CONN., October 12.—From authoritative sources the Morning News learns that President Theodore D. Woolsey has resigned from the Yale College corporation, the reason assigned being his advanced age. He will be eighty-three years old this month. Rev. Amos Cheesbrough, of Durham, also resigns from the same body.

The Sicilian Cyclone.

ROME, October 11.—To-day's advices from Catania show that the recent cyclone was far more destructive than at first announced. The entire country about Catania is devastated. Vineyards and olive gardens have vanished. Fully three thousand dwellings were destroyed.

The Scott License Law.

CINCINNATI, October 11.—Judge Matthews, of the Hamilton County Common Pleas Court, affirmed the judgment of the Magistrate's Court in the test Scott law case, and an exception was taken to bring the case before the Supreme Court.

Missing Postmaster Found.

WASHINGTON, PA., October 11.—Postmaster Wylie, who has been mysteriously missing for over a week, has turned up in Omaha. A telegram received to-day says he has written two letters explaining his absence.

Canadian Exports of Cattle.

OTTAWA, October 11.—The exports of cattle since the opening of navigation to October were 43,651 head. Exports of sheep in the same time, 42,000.

One Profitable Exhibition.

PHILADELPHIA, October 11.—The International Electrical Exhibition, open since September 2, closed to-night. The net profits are estimated at $50,000.

MURDER FOR HIRE.

Liberated from Prison on Condition.

A Negro Assassinates a Certain Physician for His Liberation from Jail, and is then in Turn Lynched by His Employers.

NEW ORLEANS, October 13.—A double tragedy, original in its nature, occurred at Ellisville, Miss., forty miles from here, to-day. Deputy Sheriff Robert Snipes, Jacob George, a telegraph operator, and two or three others broke into the County Jail and offered a negro prisoner his liberty on condition that he would kill Dr. Schumacher, a druggist. The negro agreed to this, and calling the doctor out shot him, inflicting a desperate wound. The citizens were very indignant, and the instigators of the crime, in order to remove the witness and work upon the feelings of the people, organized a mob, who fired a volley into the negro, inflicting fatal wounds. Before death he made a full confession. Suspecting that this might happen the criminals slipped from the crowd and boarded a train for this city. The police have been furnished descriptions of the fugitives, and may effect their capture. Should they be returned to Ellisville the same mob that shot the negro is prepared to receive them.

Terrible Elevator Accident.

CINCINNATI, October 13.—This morning Wm. F. Thomas, employed as a gardener and general aid about the Cincinnati Hospital was ordered to bring a patient named Christian Turdoest, aged fifteen, who has been suffering from typhoid fever, into the amphitheater of the institution for the benefit of the students attending the clinic. He ascended to the second floor on the elevator and left it at that story while he went after the patient. The boy being too weak to walk was placed on a rolling-stretcher, something similar to a railroad baggage truck, and very heavy. Wheeling the boy along the ward and out into the hall, he reversed his position and walked backward toward the open elevator door, supposing the elevator was still there. Some negligent attache had moved it to a higher floor, but still left the door standing open. Thomas walked backward and stepped through the open door unconscious of his danger. Before he could recover himself he fell, and in his fall kept hold of the handles of the stretcher. With an awful crash they were hurled to the basement beneath, a distance of forty feet. The gardener was found under the stretcher dead. The back of his skull was crushed in and his face was an unrecognizable mass. The boy was carried to the examining room and expired in terrible agony thirty minutes afterwards. This is the second accident that has resulted fatally on the same elevator. Last winter the engineer of the place, S. E. Hutchinson, was crushed by the descending cab and instantly killed.

A Youthful Lover's Deed.

LANCASTER, PA., October 12.—Lawrence L. Cauley, of Philadelphia, aged eighteen, this evening shot Mannie Benson, aged fourteen, of this city, and then himself fatally. The shot fired at the girl made a painful but not fatal wound. Cauley some months ago was an employe of the Lancaster watch factory, where the girl was employed. He fell in love. He left Lancaster early in June, and went to Philadelphia. He persisted in sending the girl protestations of affection, and also letters threatening to kill her if she refused to receive his attentions. He returned to Lancaster ten days ago, and meeting the girl on the street this evening shot her, and then himself.

Reward for the Quebec Dynamiters.

QUEBEC, October 13.—The Government has increased the reward for information leading to the conviction of the authors of Saturday's outrage to $4,000, to which Charlebois, the contractor, adds $500. The police are vigorously at work in regard to the clue obtained, and an arrest may be looked for before long. All officers in the Departmental Building were open to-day and employes at their desks. It is thought an internal machine was placed in the building Friday night. Four men were seen hanging around the vicinity that night acting in a suspicious manner.

A French Defeat.

AMOY, October 13.—The French defeat at Tamsui is confirmed. Their forces were outflanked. The troops landed at ten o'clock on Wednesday morning and were obliged to retire to the ships at three o'clock in the afternoon, after being terribly handled. The loss was seventy killed and wounded. They also lost one gun. The Chinese beheaded the dead and wounded left on the field. The Chinese lost two hundred men.

Two Killed and Several Injured.

CAMDEN, N. J., October 13.—A collision occurred here between two Pennsylvania trains this morning. Joseph Carman, engineer of one of the trains, was killed, and the fireman of the other train fatally injured, having both legs cut off. Several passengers were hurt. Both engines were smashed.

Hog Cholera.

CHAMPAIGNE, ILL., October 13.—Hog cholera is committing considerable ravages in the north part of this city. In the vicinity of Rantoul the losses are very serious. One farmer, John Gifford, within a few days lost forty-eight head, many of them weighing 200 to 300 pounds. The disease is on the increase.

An Old Rascal Gets His Deserts.

PHILADELPHIA, October 13.—Thomas M. Scroggy an old man, in the stationery business, convicted of dealing in obscene pictures, books, etc., was sentenced to imprisonment of two years and a fine of $1,000, the full penalty.

Convention of Laundrymen.

PHILADELPHIA October 13.—The first annual meeting of the National Laundrymen's Association was held in the Continental Hotel to-day. Delegates were present to the number of 204 from all parts of the United States.

Brokers Assign.

CINCINNATI, October 13.—S. S. Davis & Co., bankers and brokers, of this city, have assigned. Liabilities $60,000, assets $50,000. The teller, Samuel Tudor, is defaulter for $10,000.

—In eight years the four-hundredth anniversary of America's discovery will be celebrated. The people of Genoa, Italy, are already discussing the contribution they shall make. Some are in favor of sending over twelve Genoese sea captains, as typical both of Columbus and Garibaldi, to debark on the same spot that Columbus first trod. Others favor the shipping over, for temporary exhibition in the new world, the fine statue of the great navigator that stands on the Piazza di Colombo.

—Labouchere, in London Truth, says Queen Victoria has made a new will. She has [illegible] money to give away. Prince Albert, her husband, left at least $3,000,000. A miser named Nelson bequeathed to Her Majesty $2,500,000, and all her life she has been saving the greater part of her annual income.

—A life of mere money-getting is always a failure, because you will never get as much as you want. The poorest people in this country are the millionaires, and next to them those who have $500,000.—San Antonio Light.

—The Pittsburgh Times prints a list of twenty-two boys drowned in that city during the past summer.

THE COMMONWEALTH.

Louisville Leaf Tobacco Market.

The weather has been singularly hot for this stage of the season, with a large amount of moisture in the air, the general condition being more characteristic of August than October. In isolated cases these conditions have benefited the most backward tobacco, perhaps, but on the whole has been more harmful than beneficial by starting a second growth. There is supposed to be only 20 to 25 per cent. of the crop standing, however, and the peculiar conditions noted have had more significance for the tobacco in barns than in the fields. There is a great deal of apprehension that serious injury may have resulted, especially in the more crowded barns. There are skeptics in regard to this, who argue that house-burn may have been prevented by scaffolding housed tobacco in the open air, but it is feared that this expedient has not been resorted to very extensively. The present conditions of the weather are quite as serious as in the fall of 1881 and 1879, if not more so. Following those autumns it was found that a touch of house-burn was not so depreciating to Burley tobacco on the breaks as to certain shipping styles, notably stemmers, but this may have been due in part to the general boom in Burley types in those years. We quote full weight packages new-crop sound tobacco as follows:

	Dark and Heavy.	Burley.
Trash	$5 00@ 6 75	$6 00@ 7 00
Common lugs	7 00@ 7 25	7 50@ 8 00
Medium lugs	7 50@ 7 75	8 25@ 8 75
Good lugs	8 00@ 8 50	9 00@ 9 75
Common leaf	8 75@ 9 00	10 00@10 50
Medium leaf	9 50@ 9 75	11 00@12 50
Good leaf	10 50@12 00	13 50@16 50
Fine and fancy leaf	13 00@16 00	18 00@20 00

Miscellaneous Items.

H. E. WOLFOLK, dealer in steamboat supplies, Louisville, has assigned. Liabilities $15,000; assets $10,000. He expects to compromise and continue business.

IN Woodford County the farmers and tobacco growers are still at the mercy of incendiaries—a regular organized gang. The tobacco men, for their protection, have appointed a committee to solicit subscriptions and raise a fund for the detection and prosecution of these offenders. The farmers are aroused and greatly incensed, and it is believed that the incendiaries will fare roughly if detected.

MR. JOSEPH LANHAM, a carpenter of Washington County, died of lockjaw. He stepped on a plank in which there was a nail. The nail passed through his shoe and entered his foot. He neglected the wound for three days, lockjaw set in and he died.

THE Kentucky Court of Appeals affirmed the judgment of the Jefferson Common Pleas Court for the railway company in the case of the administrator of Henry Young vs. L., C. & L. R. R. Co. Young was killed, and his administrator brought suit for $10,000.

THE loss of the burning of Potts & Son's mill at Richmond is estimated at $100,000.

SAM MCHUTTON, of Carrolton, went on a protracted spree and hung himself before it was over.

CLEM FUNK was killed by Dr. T. D. Williams, near Mooresville, whom he had assaulted with murderous intent.

AT Nicholesville, while little Mary, daughter of Ben. A. Crutcher, who is just recovering from a severe illness, was riding with her mother, she was thrown from the phaeton, the wheels passing over her. Her injuries are not supposed to be serious.

IN Scott County, fat hogs five cents.

THERE is a promise of a fine beech mast crop.

CONSIDERABLE complaint of house-burned tobacco in Scott County.

DR. JOHN B. PAYNE, one of the most prominent and respected citizens of Fayette County, died a few days ago, at the age of eighty-three years.

PAYNE and Viley, now sojourning in Canada for duplicating warehouse receipts, were expelled from the Louisville Board of Trade the other day.

WILLIAM M. MARTIN, of Petersburg, Va., a grandson of the great Nathanial Macon, of North Carolina, has settled in Owensboro in the tobacco business.

THERE is still at Ewing, Fleming County, the school-house in which were educated ex-Gov. Bishop, of Ohio, and ex-Gov. Jackson, of Missouri.

DURING the up trip of the Louisville and Kentucky River packet Sallie J. Cooper, the wife of the son of Captain Geer, of that packet, died quite suddenly at Pond Branch, thirty miles below Frankfort, from blood poisoning, supposed to have been caused by the bite of a spider. The lady first began to complain of a pimple on her chin. This grew rapidly into a large sore, and her head swelled as if erysipelas had set in. She continued to grow worse, and every attention that could be bestowed on her proved to no avail, and death ensued in a brief time. The remains were sent to Paducah, the former home of the deceased, for interment. She left a child a few weeks old.

DR. C. C. GRAHAM, of Louisville, celebrated the one hundredth anniversary of his birthday on the 10th. Dr. Graham is a Kentucky pioneer, and has had a varied experience as hunter, artisan, soldier, landlord and scientist. He was personally acquainted with Daniel Boone.

JOHN CASEY, an employe of the Bloomfield branch of the L. & N. Railway, was thrown from a hand-car near Logan's Station, the other morning. Three loaded truck cars passed over him. He received internal injuries about the chest and lungs which will probably prove fatal.

MRS. KATAKINA KRAUSE, a widow, living in Germantown, near Louisville, undertook to extinguish a coal-oil lamp at an early hour the other morning, when an explosion occurred, and she was very dangerously burned about the chest and back of the head. A boy employed by her saved her life by smothering the flames with a blanket.

AT a negro supper on Smoky Row, the negro quarters of Herrodsburg, the other night, John Clayburn, door-keeper, refused to allow Harry McAfee, a negro, in without pay. McAfee shot Clayburn in the left side, inflicting a wound from which he died next evening.

AT a shooting affair at Bainbridge, Christian County, the other evening, between Lee Ladd and Chas. McKinney, the former was killed and the latter badly wounded. Ladd knocked McKinney down, and the latter got up and ran, and was shot in the back by Ladd as he was running. Ladd followed him to a house near by, and McKinney came out with a gun and shot him dead in his tracks. Both were rather bad characters. McKinney's wound is serious and may prove fatal.

THE affairs of the Newcomb-Buchanan Co., of Louisville, are in such a bad condition that the assignee is without money to carry out the trust.

FIFTY moonshiners await trial at the October term of the United States Court at Louisville.

Two prisoners in the station-house at Bowling Green petitioned the Council to release them on the ground that they were to be married at an early day. The hard-hearted Council declined to see it.

MR. J. J. BOYD, a well-known citizen of Louisville, engaged in educational work, attempted suicide by morphine. His life was barely saved.

IN a difficulty at the colored church at Poplar Plains, Fleming County, Bill Williams shot Bill Storey three times in the bowels. Storey cannot recover.

THE DAIRY.

—Cows should have daily exercise and a never-failing supply of pure water at the barn if possible. They should have a small quantity of salt daily. When they are kept in the barn they should have all the food they will eat up clean twice a day, and should be fed from six to eight o'clock in the morning, and from three to five in the afternoon.—Farmers' Review.

—Buttermilk made from cream, and that made by churning whole milk after it becomes sour, are very different substances. Milk or cream agitated violently in contact with the air becomes changed in character, the fat separates as butter, and this usually marks the conclusion of the operation. It is, therefore, natural that it should be thought essential to the formation of buttermilk that butter should be produced. But this is not so. Skim milk, slightly turned and well churned, becomes buttermilk, and a most excellent and refreshing beverage it is.

—The highest priced butter in the world, according to the Farmers' Gazette, London, is made in the District of Isigny, Normandy. It sells at auction in Paris during winter, wholesale, at 75 cents per pound, frequently going up to 87½ cents. In summer it falls off to 50 cents. A peculiarity of the method of manufacture is that it is never touched by the hand and all utensils employed are of scrupulous cleanliness. The buttermilk is removed by repeated churnings in pure spring water until it comes away clear.

—Butter is in the cream in the form, principally, of particles of fat, enclosed in a membranous covering, the whole called a globule. The particle of fat has an individual structure. This structure may, by the force of heat or friction, be destroyed. To save it in its natural form is to "preserve the grain." Butter with a perfect or natural grain has many essential qualities that give it value. It has a finer color, and a clear, waxy appearance, unctuous taste, and a good keeping quality. The melting point of butter, upon which mainly depends its keeping quality when subjected to a high temperature, depends, in turn, mainly upon its structure or grain. If butter, on its way to the consumers, is to be exposed to the influence of heat, it must have its structure preserved; in other words, it must have a good "grain."—Western Rural.

Milk for Cheese-Making.

A patron of a cheese factory in Pennsylvania had his milk condemned, but after being out in the heat and sun till afternoon it made butter above average quality by setting in pans in the cellar. The milk is described as being "perfectly sweet but had an odor." Any milk from cows in fair health, which is sweet and clean, will make good cheese, and if it fails to do so the fault will be in the making or curing, and not in the milk, whether it has "an odor" or not. When objectionable odors occur in milk of which butter is to be made, the most effectual way of disposing of them is by heating the new milk from 140 to 160 degrees, when the greater part of them will become aeriform and be driven off, but some portion of them is pretty sure to be too stable to pass off in that way, and being of an oily nature, they cling to the fat in the cream and go with it into the butter, to the injury of its flavor and durability. Some alleviation may also be had by airing the fresh milk and by slightly souring the cream, the sour buttermilk absorbing the odor, but none of the means amount to a perfect purification.

In the manufacture of cheese it is different. Every shade of what is known by the synonymous terms, "cowey odor," "animal odor" and "taint," and also the odors and flavors of strong weeds, can be wiped out by airing the warm curd a sufficient length of time, provided clean and sweet rennet is used and the curd is got out of the whey before acid sets in. This is important, as the sour curd, like the sour buttermilk, absorbs and holds all odors tenaciously, and hence if souring is allowed to precede the airing the good effect of airing the curd is counteracted. The more complete removal of odors in cheese-making than in butter-making, enables the skillful manufacturer to make a fine cheese out of milk which holds odors that would injure it for butter-making. Hence milk which will make average butter will make first-class cheese, but it will not do so if the acid process of cheese-making, by which is meant leaving the curd in the whey till distinctly sour, is followed.—Prof. L. B. Arnold, in N. Y. Tribune.

Butter That Will Keep.

An authority on dairying says that the keeping quality of butter depends, more than on any other one thing, upon the entire removal from the butter of the buttermilk and what the buttermilk contains. Butter is mainly a fat, which fat, purified of everything foreign, will keep without salt if protected from the air. Salt would not help it to keep. Indeed, the two things, butter-fat and salt, have no chemical affinity for each other. On the other hand, buttermilk contains a considerable proportion of solid matter of a membraneous or caseous nature, upon which salt has a preservative effect. Butter, as pure as it can be made, by the best known process, will contain more or less of this membraneous and other foreign matter. It will require, at the best, as much salt as would be desirable for the sake of eating quality, to act as a preservative of what foreign matter is inevitable. If an undue quantity of the foreign matter be left in the butter, more salt would be required than would be good for the taste, or eating quality, of the butter. Moreover, while butter, even without salt, is slow to take injury from the air or become rancid, the foreign matter in butter is quick to spoil or become putrid, and salt in any quantity will only keep back the spoiling for a time. From this it will be seen that if the butter is made to contain an undue proportion of foreign matter, it will require, in order to preserve it, so much salt that the taste will be injured, and even then its time of keeping will be limited, because of the presence of the foreign matter. Its life will be shorter, indeed, than that of other and purer butter, less salted or not salted at all. —Chicago Times.

Agates.

Scotland is famed for its agates, better known as "Scotch pebbles," which, although small compared with those found elsewhere, are yet unequaled in the variety and beauty of their colors. Scottish pebbles are found chiefly at Kianoul Hill, near Perth, on the shore near Montrose, at Dunglass, and at Burn Anne, near Galston, Ayrshire, but whether they occur on the shore or in river gravels, they have been all previously washed out of trap rocks. The pebbles, cut by Edinburgh lapidaries, are used in the manufacture of Scottish jewelry. The chief seat of the agate industry of the world, however, is at Oberstein, in Rhenish Bavaria, where it has been carried on for centuries. It arose there naturally enough, owing to the presence in the volcanic rocks of the neighborhood of an abundance of fine agates, but it has continued and extended long after those rocks have ceased to yield, or at least to be mined for, the raw material of the industry. The agate quarries of Oberstein were abandoned owing to the discovery, fully a half century ago, of a rich supply of these stones in the river gravels of Uruguay. Some German workers in agate, who had emigrated to that region, noticed the courtyard of a farm-house paved with pebbles that reminded them of the agates of their native Oberstein. Specimens were accordingly sent home and cut, and the surmise proved correct. Since that time there has been a regular export of agate nodules from Uruguay to Oberstein, where they have long formed the staple material used in the agate mills. These "Brazilian agates," as they are called, when brought to Germany, are arranged in lots and sold by auction, stones of ordinary quality bringing, it is said, not more, usually, than fifteen shillings per hundredweight. "German agates" are thus, for the most part, American stones cut and polished at Oberstein. The extent of the industry has greatly increased with this accession of fresh material, and a few years ago there were no fewer than 153 agate mills, working 724 grindstones, and giving employment altogether to about three thousand persons. Cheapness of labor and a plentiful supply of water-power had much to do with the continuance of this industry at Oberstein. The labor is both ill-paid and severe. "The agate worker, says Professor Rudler, who some years ago visited the mines and mills, "lies upon a low wooden grinding-stool, specially constructed to fit the chest and abdomen, leaving the limbs free; the hands are engaged in holding and grinding the agate, while the feet are firmly pressed against short stakes or blocks of wood screwed into the floor, the reaction enabling the grinder to press the agate with much force against the moving millstone. The friction thus produced causes the agate to glow with a beautiful phosphorescent light, and red carnelians under this treatment look, it is said, as if they were red-hot. The millstones are of red sandstone, measure five feet in diameter, and generally make three revolutions per second. The finer agates are sliced by means of steel wheels and diamond or emery powder, but the coarser stones are simply chipped into shape and ground. Afterward they are polished on rotating cylinders of wood or lead covered with moistened tripoli."

The ingenuity of the agate worker is not confined merely to cutting, carving and polishing his material into all manner of shapes. He has also succeeded in varying its color by artificial means. The layers composing an agate differ considerably in porosity, those that are transparent, for example, being less porous than opaque layers. Some, indeed, seem to be altogether impervious at ordinary temperature and pressure; and agate workers both at Oberstein and in India have availed themselves of this peculiarity in applying their staining processes. A suitable agate, after being thoroughly dried, is immersed in a mixture of honey and water, or in olive oil, and is kept thus for at least three days, exposed to a moderate heat. It is then washed, dried, and put into a vessel containing enough sulphuric acid to cover it. The vessel is thereafter exposed to a gentle heat for a varying number of hours, when the porous layers are found to have become much darker in color. The reason of this is that these layers, having become saturated with the syrup or oil, are acted upon by the sulphuric acid, which decomposes the sugary or oily constituent and forms in its place a deposit of carbon. It is in this way that banded agate is converted into the onyx, with its black and white layers, used in the productions of cameos and intaglios. Exposure to strong sunlight was long ago found to give a reddish tint to gray-colored agates, and this suggested the burning of such stones so as to convert them into carnelians. At Oberstein, likely stones for this purpose are first dried thoroughly, then saturated in sulphuric acid, and afterward exposed in an earthenware crucible to a red heat. They are allowed to cool slowly, and are then seen to be of a bright, red color. Not content with imitating the rarer natural varieties of agate, such as onyx and carnelian, German manufacturers have taken to staining agates blue and all sorts of colors unknown in the natural stones. Aniline dyes, as unnatural as they are fugitive, have also been lately used for agate staining. It is possible that the stones themselves may yet be artificially produced. —Exchange.

Lily and the Coachman.

A wealthy Chicago aristocrat catered his magnificent Prairie avenue palace last evening, looked around the richly furnished parlor, and asked of his wife:

"Where is Lily."

"I don't know. She went out a little while ago," was the reply.

"Where's John?"

"At the stable, I suppose. Have you looked?"

"He isn't at the stable and Lily isn't in the house," observed the father, wiping great beads of perspiration from his brow. "They've gone, that's certain, and probably they are together. Now, I can't run the business and the house, too. You've got to help, old woman. Suppose you hitch up and begin the hunt right away. You are responsible for this thing."

Just as the old lady was making some remarks about her husband being a butcher when she first knew him the young couple returned.

"Where have you been?" inquired the father sternly, hoping against hope.

"Oh, we've just had a little ice cream. It was scrumptious, too magnif. Nothing like it anywhere else in town."

"Saved!" gasped the father. "John, here's a dollar for the cream. Now don't let this thing happen again this summer."—Chicago Herald.

$65,000 WORTH OF THE FOLLWING GOODS NOW IN OUR MAMMOTH HOUSE. $65,000

Bought at Rock Bottom Prices, and will be sold at a Small Profit to insure our Big Fall Sales.

The following goods are kept in the Boot and Shoe, Ready-made Clothing, Millinery & Cloak Departments. The style of this firm is as formerly, Wm. Colter. We havwhat you want in our Ready-made Clothing, Department.

And in many lines of Goods you will find they will be sold far below the regular price, as they are bargains that have been bought at Snaps during the dull Summer months, and we want to say to all our old customers and friends that we think we can give you better satisfaction this Fall than we have ever done before, from the fact that we are now associated in the Dry Goods Depart ment with Messrs. Ira Powell and Wm. Ownby, making this Department a firm by itself, for the Sale of Dry Goods, Notions, Carpets, &c., under the style of COLTER, POWELL & OWNBY, and the Ready-made Clothing, Boots and Shoes, Millinery and Cloak Departments the same as formerly, WM. COLTER. Many of our friends ask us why we have associated with partners in the Dry Goods department. In answer to this would say, anyone aware of the amount of attention a stock like this requires, saying nothing about seeing that customer have proper attention from the clerks; that our goods are kept properly, and many other reasons, wouldn't wonder if we were to have partners in all departments. It is one man's work to buy the goods right for a house like this, without giving attention to the other matters mentioned above. Of course we could do like the Old Fogy merchant, stay at home and ... for samples to be brought to him, and give them their price. But we don't do business that way. We are always awake in the cash market, and buy goods at our own price, and not a drummers' price.

The following goods are kept iu the Dry Goods, Notion, and Carper Departments, the style of this firm is Colter, Powell & Ownby. We have what you want and have Rock bottom prices on all Dry Goods, Notions, Blanket, &c.

We positively have in stock over 800 Overcoats and over 1,200 full Suits of Men's and Boys' Ready-made Clothing. EDUCATIONAL.

[Communications for this column must be addressed to Prof. T. H. Stephenson, Burlington, Kentucky.]

The word Method of teaching Reading

Having read in the last issue of the RECORDER, the article on a new method of teaching reading, I feel called upon to try to defend what I consider the best method ever used in teaching beginners to read. Not from a natural feeling, which we all have, to defend an opinion because it is our own, rather than submit it to investigation, but from a deep interest which I feel in the education of our American people, especially the dear old State of Kentucky; but most of all that hallowed portion endeared to us by all the sacred ties of home, viz: Boone county.

To begin with the subject matter, the word method, which is described as being new and illogical, is not so new but has been thoroughly tried and found successful in all the leading States in education. There are many teachers who begin with this system, have graduated and are in active service as teachers, who will gladly bear witness to the happy result of this system over the spelling method. Then can it be claimed as new?

In answer to the objection that some words are so nearly alike that mistakes are made unless attention is paid to the spelling, I would ask—would you permit a child to stop, while reading, to pay attention to spelling? Would not this be sufficient proof that the child is not reading intelligently? Let us take, for illustration, two words which are exactly alike, as mow and mow, (Pronou), Now would any intelligent little reader say, I climbed up in the mow or the men will mow the grass? Most assuredly not.

Again it is affirmed that the simple nature of spelling seems to suggest its adaptation to the early career of the pupil. In answer to this, I would refer you to the spelling to be found in the manuscripts of any corps of county teachers, and see if spelling can be accounted of a simple nature, or if it is not so complicated that it cannot be learned before learning to read.

As to promoting them to the next higher of the series which is to hard for them to comprehend, and as a natural consequence the pupils will have to blunder through the lessons, I can testify that this will not be the case, if the teacher will still be the living spontaneous dictionary, which the word, or object method requires of him until the pupils are enabled to use the book dictionary for themselves. Another argument in favor of this method is, that in every lesson there is a plan begun and finished, which covers primary elocution, learning the alphabet, writing, spelling and sentence making, all of which can be learned in as short a time as spelling alone. Can any plan be claimed for the spelling system? Besides, when lessons have been learned by the object and word method, pupils will not have to read from memory, only as the sight of the words brings to the memory their names.

Our correspondent also says, that no one can read well what he does not understand and recommends that the pupil first be taught to spell well in order that his reading may not be a mummery of words. I do not clearly understand what is meant by the word mummery in this relation. Perhaps mumbling is meant. If so I can not see how spelling can remove this obstacle, since it is from the meaning of words, and not the spelling, that we learn the expression of ideas. In the word method the meaning of every word is taught, except, of course the few which have only local or temporary meaning.

Again our opponent says, in all studies there is a natural order of parts. Strongest of all arguments. We could not ask better logic. Let us analyze, as far as time and space will permit, the source of man's—knowledge. We all must admit that man's knowledge comes from the surrounding objects. Now is not his attention directed to the objects themselves before he attempts to enumerate, in detail, the parts of which they are composed? Go back to primative man and you will find that God brought the objects before Adam before he was requested to name them. Again, when you teach the little prattler the objects which surround it, you begin at once with the object and then the name. For instance you take the child to see the pig, you first show it the pig, and the name naturally follows. How illogical it would be, to begin somewhat after this fashion: Here is something that has two eyes, two ears, four feet, a snout, and is covered with a coat of bristles. This we call a pig. All this detail matter can be, and is, generally, learned with very little attention on the part of the teacher.

So, in the word method, teach the child the word, object concerning first, of course, and the spelling will be learned almost unconsciously as the different parts which compose the pig. That is, if the word method be carried out, this, it can be seen, will relieve both teacher and pupil of all those troubles arising from inflicting voluntary effort on the child, to memorize long lists of spelling, and what a relief to all parties concerned. Appealing to the teachers to give it a faithful trial, and earnestly requesting the patrons to favor their efforts, I respectfully subscribe myself a

FRIEND TO EDUCATION.

Probable Yield and Character of '84 Tobacco Crop.

In our correspondence column will be found a lengthy article from a well known and veteran Tobacco grower of Virginia, with reference to the Tobacco crop of 1884. It will be seen that our correspondent concludes that while there was an increase of about 20 per cent. in acreage this year, yet there is an unusually light yield—hardly 500,000,000 pounds. This estimate we are led to believe by all reports we have received, is far more reliable than those which place the yield anywhere between 600,000,000 and 800,000,000 pounds. These latter estimates are based upon the assumption that the average yield per acre this year is larger than usual, whereas it could not be in the face of the continued drought of two months that has prevailed in nearly every Leaf Tobacco growing States. The only States that are likely to give an acreage yield are the seed leaf States—with the exception of Ohio—where the crop takes less time to mature after being planted, and where the seasons were very favorable.

In all the great leaf States there has been little rain since June, and the plants, which had been unusually forward on account of the excellent weather at the beginning of the season, began to show the effects of the dry weather before July was ended, and when the time for cutting came the leaves were seen to be narrow and light, and considerable damage was entailed by plants fireing at the bottom, in many instances cempelling the cutting of tobacco before it was fully matured.

There can be no doubt about what the average yield under these circumstances will be lower than usual, and we doubt it more than 650 lbs. to the acre can be counted on. This from 800,000 acres—a liberal estimate of the total acreage—would give 520,000,000 pounds as the 1884 crop, hardly equaling last year's. One result of the dry weather, though, is a good yield of the light, flimsy colory kinds, and this is particularly the case in Virginia and North Carolina. The heavy bodied dark manufacturing and export kinds will be rather limited, and it is probable that a very good demand and firm prices will rule for these classes next year. White Burley will probably yield something larger than last year's crop, though no way as large as first anticipated, ann the proportions of the better kinds will be larger than last year. Yet there will be a large amount of Common Nondescript, and with the market and manufacturers glutted with these kinds the prospects as to prices is not very encouraging.

There is considerable complaint being made within the last two weeks of house burn and stem rot taking place in the barns, especially in the Ohio valley, where a days rain toward the end of last month were succeeded by hot, dry weather, with fogs and mists in the morning and night resulting in heating and fermenting the tobacco in many barns, especially those where the tobacco was hung very close. Many planters were compelled to take down their tobacco and rehang it in order to save total loss.

This is particularly the case in those sections where tobacco culture is a new industry and among those who are "green" hands, and who have planted large fields, and have comparatively small barn room. Possibly the loss resulting from bad cure may make the 1884 crop a very ordinary one as regards bulk.—Cincinnati Tobacco Journal.

THE candidates for State Senator in this district unite in a request to the chairman of the respective county committees to call a primary election to be held in this district on the day of the Presidential election to choose between them as to which shall be the candidate of the Democratic party for State Senator. We insist that that question should be submitted to the Democrats of Gallatin county alone, as neither Boone nor Owen are entitled to the candidate at this time. Let Gallatin present a candidate chosen solely by her people.

We the Grand Jury of Boone county, Kentucky, this October term, 1884, respectfully make the following report: Have been in session 6 days; examined 91 witnesses; reported 67 indictments; having examined public buildings and find them all in good order and condition, except the county jail which was condemned by a former grand jury.

WOODFORD CARPENTER, Foreman.

From Dr. S. S. Scott, of Florence, we learn that the first buggy ever brought to this county was brought by red head Ed Fowler, the father-in-law of Homer Hudson, of Covington, and was brought on his return from South Carolina in 1826. The first buggy ever driven upon the road called the Covington and Lexington pike was driven by Henry Sayers from Covington to his home in Kenton county in 1827.

Mr. J. C. Clore, who has been traveling through the western country for about ten weeks made this office a very pleasant call Monday. While in California he met W. W. Huron, formerly of this county, but now of Woodbridg, California, who sent us $8 for two years subscription to the RECORDER. Mr. C. says he stopped one day at the St. Louis Fair, and that Riddell & Norris were carrying off a great many blue ribbons on their fine horses.

Messrs. Smith & Campbell have purchased the grocery and provision stock of Mr. H. L. DeForest, and will succeed him in that branch of business. They have an excellent location in the elegant DeForest Block. Mr. A. W. Smith came to Sanford last October from Kentucky, and as prescription clerk for Mr. T. M. Melten, became quite well known in this community. Mr. C. H. Campbell has lived in Sanford near 3 years and occupied the position of salesman in H. L. DeForest's store.—Sanford (Fla) Journal.

We received the following letter from Everett Walton, of Butler, Mo.

In pursuance of notice the meeting of all those interested in an Agricultural Society of Northern Kentucky, convened at the Southern Hotel to compare books and discuss the pro's and con's of their ability to proceed in the enterprise. Only about one-third of the required capital being subscribed, and the interest in the affair seeming to be on the wane, it looked discouraging, and after many propositions and much levity, it was agreed to adjourn until after the election of Cleveland. Hon. Reuben Conner resigned his position as president of the meeting, the same to be perpetual, in an eloquent address.

GAS OMETER.

Beaver Lick.

The past week has been unusually favorable to cutting and housing tobacco, and the growers of the weed have generally taken advantage of it. Most every one is done with putting in the house and is now conjecturing as to the price he will for it. Old leaf is selling low on the breaks, but if the "boys" will hold to their good new leaf it will yet pay them; don't scare and let go too soon, but just soon enough, that is the "pointer" we present them.

Several large tobacco barns have been put up in this locality this fall, and there is scarcely one of them that will be filled full of the weed, hence, the inference a short crop.

Stock of all kinds seem to be a drug on the market. There is no demand whatever, here for anything of that kind. All are waiting to see how corn will husk out, and of course stock is no go without corn.

The grazing, however, at present is fine, but exports say there isn't much substance in grass that springs in the autumn.

Owing to the setting of the grand jury last week, several of our sporting fraternity left for over the line to be absent in case of a call from the Sheriff or some of his deputies. The g. j. do hustle the sports; now doesn't it? The g. j. and the sports are a pair that should be investigated and if possible a compromise effected between them. This semi-annual warfare business of their's fast becoming outrageously intolerable. It reflects discreditably upon the county's moral statutes you see, and that's a big thing you know.

There has long existed a dispute between the Baptist church and Mr. Houston relating to the line running between said church and Houston. The church has appointed the following gentlemen, Andy Ellis, Jno. Cleek and Am Hoard a committee to look into the matter and have it rightly adjusted as early as convenient. It is a matter that should be attended to as there are a great many persons particularly interested in the property in question, it being a portion of the Old Mupliek cemetery.

The Ohio Election.

The State election in Ohio is over and the Buckeye State was captured by the Republicans. The majority is large enough for the State purposes, but will not silence the fight for the November prize, and the fight will be continued into the last ditch. It takes thirty-eight States to elect a President, but that the result in Ohio will have some weight in the Presidential fight cannot be denied. The Enquirer says that Tuesday was a red day in that city. The Commercial Gazette claims 23,000 majority. The Democrats claim West Virginia from 5,000 to 8,000.

IT takes millions to get a "free vote and fair count" in Ohio.

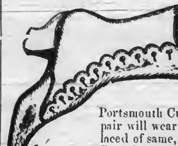
$65,000 WORTH OF THE FOLLWING GOODS NOW IN OUR MAMMOTH HOUSE. $65,000

Bought at Rock Bottom Prices, and will be sold at a Small Profit to insure our Big Fall Sales.

The following goods are kept in the Boot and Shoe, Ready-made Clothing, Millinery & Cloak Departments. The style of this firm is as formerly, Wm. Colter. We havwhat you want in our Ready-made Clothing, Department.

And in many lines of Goods you will find they will be sold far below the regular price, as they are bargains that bave been bought at Suaps during the dull Summer months, and we want to say to all our old customers and friends that we think we can give you better satisfaction this Fall than wo have ever done before, from the fact that we are now associated in the Dry Goods Depart ment with Messrs. Ira Powell and Wm. Ownby, making this Department a firm by itself, for the Sale of Dry Goods, Notions, Carpets, &c., under the style of COLTER, POWELL & OWNBY, and the Ready-made Clothing, Boots and Shoes, Millinery and Cloak Dopartmonts the same as formerly, WM. COLTER. Many of our friends ask us why we have associated with partners in the Dry Goods department. In answer to this would say, anyone aware of the amount of attention a stock like this requires, saying nothing about seeing that customer have proper attention from the clerks; that our goods are kept properly, and many other reasons, wouldn't wonder if we wero to have partners in all departments. It is one man's work to buy the goods right for a house like this, without giving attention to the other matters mentioned above. Of course we could do like the Old Fogy merchant, stay at home and wait for samples to to be brought to him, and give them their price. But we don't do business that way. We are always awake in the cash market, and buy goods at our own pricc, and not a drummers' priee.

The following goods are kept iu the Dry Goods, Notion, and Carper Departments, the style of this firm is Colter, Powell & Ownby. We have what you want and have Rock bottom prices on all Dry Goods, Notions, Blanket, &c.



We positively have in stock over 800 Overcoats and over 1,200 full Suits of Men's and Boys' Ready-made Clothing. Our Overcoats are bought at Rock Bottom Prices, and will be sold at a small profit, in order that we may sell the Overcoats of this section. Beaver Overcoats at 5, 7, 9 & $12. Chinchilla Overcoats at 2 50, 4, 5 and up to $8. Heavy Gray Overcoats at $2 50 to $3. Long Cheviot Ulsterets and Overcoats at 3 50, 4, 5 and $6. Best Cassimere Fancy Black Cheviot Overcoats at 7, 9, 10 and up to $14. Excellent Black Diagonal and Cassimere Overcoats at 10 to $16. We guarantee every coat to be one-third less than Cincinnati prices.

WM. COLTER,

Our line of Boys' Clothing is complete. Our line of Men's Suits at 3 to $5 are immense bargains. Our different grades of Suits at 6 to $20 are all bargains. If you want an Extra Good Suit, call and see our 11 to $13 suits, and instead of getting a suit made, come and see our 14 to $17 suits. We have the goods and we can please you. Give us a trial.

Don't Fail to visit OUR CLOAK Room. See our Newmarkets, Russian Circulars, Cloaks, Dolmans, Children's Wraps of every description. EDUCATIONAL.

[Communications for this column must be addressed to Prof. T. H. Stephenson, Burlington, Kentucky.]

The word Method of teaching Reading

Having read in the last issue of the RECORDER, the article on a new mothod of teaching reading, I feel called upon to try to defend what I consider tho best method ever used in teaching beginners to read. Not from a natural feeling, which we all have, to defend an opinion becauso it is our own, rather than submit it to investigation, but from a deep interest which I feel in the education of our American people, especially the dear old State of Kentucky; but most of all that hallowed portion endeared to us by all the sacred ties of home, viz: Boone county.

To begin with the subject matter, the word method, which is described as being new and illogical, is not so new but has been thoroughly tried and found successful in all the leading States in education. There are many teachers who begin with this system, have graduated and are in active service as teachers, who will gladly bear witness to the happy result of this system over the spelling method. Then can it be claimed as new?

In answer to the objection that some words are so nearly alike that mistakes are made unless attention is paid to the spelling, I would ask—would you permit a child to stop, while reading, to pay attention to spelling? Would not this be sufficient proof that the child is not reading intelligently? Let us take, for illustration, two words which are exactly alike, as mow and mow. (Pronou), Now would any intelligent little reader say, I climbed up in the mow or the men will mow the grass? Most assuredly not.

Again it is affirmed that the simple nature of spelling seems to suggest its adaptation to the early career of the pupil. In answer to this, I would refer you to the spelling to be found in the manuscripts of any corps of county teachers, and see if spelling can be accounted of a simple nature, or if it is not so complicated that it cannot be learned before learning to read.

As to promoting them to the next higher of the series which is to hard for them to comprehend, and as a natural consequence the pupils will have to blunder through tho lessons, I can testify that this will not be the case, if the teacher will still be the living spontaneous dictionary, which the word, or object method requires of him until tho pupils are enabled to use the book dictionary for themselves. Another argument in favor of this method is, that in every lesson there is a plan begun and finished, which covers primary elocution, learning the alphabet, writing, spelling and sentence making, all of which can be learned in as short a time as spelling alone. Can any plan be claimed for the spelling system? Besides, when lessons have been learned by the object and word method, pupils will not have to read from memory, only as the sight of the words brings to the memory their names.

Our correspondent also says, that no one can read well what ho does not understand and recommends that the pupil first be taught to spell well in order that his reading may not be a mummery of words. I do not clearly understand what is meant by the word mummery in this relation. Perhaps mumbling is meant. If so I can not see how spelling can remove this obstacle, since it is from the meaning of words, and not tho spelling, that we learn the expression of ideas. In the word method the meaning of every word is taught, except, of course the few which have only local or temporary meaning.

Again our opponent says, in all studies there is a natural order of parts. Strongest of all arguments. We could not ask better logic. Let us analyze, as far as time and space will permit, the source of man's—knowledge. We all must admit that man's knowledge comes from the surrounding objects. Now is not his attention directed to the objects themselves before he attempts to onumerate, in detail, the parts of which they are composed? Go back to primative man and you will find that God brought the objects before Adam before he was roquested to namo them. Again, when you teach the little prattler the objects which surround it, you begin at once with the object and then the namo. For instance you take the child to see the pig, you first show it the pig, and the name naturally follows. How illogical it would be, to begin somewhat after this fashion: Here is something that has two eyes, two ears, four feet, a snout, and is covered with a coat of bristles. This we call a pig. All this detail matter can be, and is, generally, learned with very little attention on the part of the teacher.

So, in the word method, teach the child the word, object concerning first, of course, and the spelling will be learned almost unconsciously as the different parts which compose the pig. That is, if the word method be carried out, this, it can be seen, will relievo both teacher and pupil of all those troubles arising from inflicting voluntary effort on the child, to memorize long lists of spelling, and what a relief to all parties concerned. Appealing to the teachers to give it a faithful trial, and earnestly requesting the patrons to favor their efforts, I respectfully subscribe myself a

FRIEND TO EDUCATION.

Probable Yield and Character of '84 Tobacco Crop.

In our correspondence column, will be found a lengthy article from a well known and veteran Tobacco grower of Virginia, with reference to the Tobacco crop of 1884. It will be seen that our correspondent concludes that while there was an increase of about 20 per cent. in acreage this year, yet there is an unusnally light yield—hardly 500,000,000 pounds. This estimate we are led to believe by all reports we have received, is far more reliable than those which place the yield anywhere between 600,000,000 and 800,000,000 pounds. These latter estimates are based npon the assumption that the average yield per acre this year is larger than usual. whereas it could not bo in the face of the continued drought of two months that has prevailed in nearly every Leaf Tobacco growing States. The only States that are likely to give an acreage yield aro the seed leaf States—with the exception of Ohio—where the crop takes less time to maturo after being planted. and where the seasons were very favorable.

In all the great leaf States there has been little rain since June, and the plants, which had been unusually forward on account ot the excellent weather at the beginning of the season, began to show the effects of the dry weather before July was ended, and when the timo for cutting came the leaves were seen to be narrow and light, and considerable damage was entailed by plants fireing at the bottom, in many instances cempelling the cutting of tobacco before it was fully matured.

There can be no doubt about what the averago yield under these circumstances will bo lower than usual, and we doubt it more than 650 lbs. to the acre can be counted on. This from 800,000 acres—a liberal estimate of the total acreage—would give 520,000,000 pounds as the 1884 crop, hardly equaling last year's. One result of the dry weather, though, is a good yield of the light, flimsy colory kinds, and this is particularly the caso in Virginia anc North Carolina. The heavy bodied dark manufacturing and export kinds will be rather limited, and it is probable that a very good demand and firm prices will rule for these classes next year. White Burley will probably yield something larger than last year's crop, though no way as large as first anticipated, ann the proportions of the better kinds will be larger than last year. Yet there will be a large amount of Common Nondescriot, and with the market and manufacturers glutted with these kinds the prospects as to prices is not very encouraging.

There is considerable complaint being made within the last two weeks of house burn and stem rot taking place in the barns, especially in the Ohio valley, where a days rain toward the end of last month were succeeded by hot, dry weather, with fogs and mists in the morning and night resulting in heating and fermenting the tobacco in many barns, especially those where the tobacco was hung very close. Many planters were compelled to take down their tobacco and rehang it in order to save total loss.

This is particularly the case in those sections where tobacco culture is a new industry and among those who are "green" hands, and who have planted large fields, and have comparatively small barn room. Possibly the loss resulting from bad cure may make the 1884 crop a very ordinary one as regards bulk.—Cincinnati Tobacco Journal.

THE candidates for State Senator in this district unite in a request to the chairman of the respective county committees to call a primary election to be held in this district on the day of the Presidential election to choose between them as to which shall be the candidate of the Democratic party for State Senator. We insist that that question should be submitted to the Democrats of Gallatin county [illegible] neithor Boone nor Owen are entitled to the candidate at this time. Let Gallatin present a candidate chosen solely by her people.

We the Grand Jury of Boone county Kentucky, this October term, 1883, respectfully make the following report:

Have been in session 6 days; examined 91 witnesses; reported 67 indictments; having examined public buildings and find them all in good order and condition, except the county jail which was condemned by a former grand jury.

WOODFORD CARPENTER, Foreman.

From Dr. S. S. Scott, of Florence, we learn that the first beef ever brought to this county was brought by red head Ed Fowler, the father-in-law of Homer Hudson, of Covington, and was brought on his return from South Carolina in 1826. The first buggy ever driven upon the road called the Covington and Lexington pike was driven by Henry Sayers from Covington to his home in Kenton county in 1827.

Mr. J. C. Clore, who has been traveling through the western country for about ten weeks made this office a very pleasant call Monday. While in California he met W. W. Huron, formerly of this county, but now of Woodbridg, California, who sent us $3 for two years subscription to the RECORDER. Mr. C. says he stopped one day at the St. Louis Fair, and that Riddell & Norris were carrying off a great many blue ribbons on their fine horses.

Messrs. Smith & Campbell have purchased the grocery and provision stock of Mr. H. L. DeForest, and will succeed him in that branch of business. They have an excellent location in the elegant DeForest Block. Mr. A. W. Smith came to Sanford last October from Kentucky, and as prescription clerk for Mr. T. M. McKee, became quite well known in this community. Mr. C. H. Campbell has lived in Sanford near 3 years and occupied the position of salesman in H. L. DeForest's store.—Sanford (Fla) Journal.

We received the following letter from Everett Walton, of Butler, Mo.

Dear Sir:—I suppose my time is out for the RECORDER—but enclosed you will find $1 50 for another year. Week before last we did not receive any paper and it made me hunt up a $1 50, right lively.

Dickie Stephens is getting along extremely well with his foot that he tried to shoot off last Sunday week.

Mrs. Mamie Gleason, dead, of the late Clarence Gleason, died, is very sick with typhoid fever. Dr. Cowen is the attending physician.

Mr. H. Crisler, of Ashbyfork, called at our burg one day last week, looking for his watch and the thief. We learn that the watch was purchased by Henry Ecberman, who is working for A. G. McConnell, of East Bend. It is hard for an honest and hard working boy like Henry to have to lose his money.

Aunt Betsy Holmes is reported very feeble—she is in her 90 year.

Florence.

The boys that took special trips to parts unknown, previous to the first Monday in October, in the interest of their partners, the hotel keepers of Florence, have returned to their respective beats, and if they have left any unsettled bills owing to the protracted term of court, we hope they will be speedily adjusted, by the interested parties.

In pursuance of notice the meeting of all those interested in an Agricultural Society of Northern Kentucky, convened at the Southern Hotel to compare books and discuss the pro's and con's of their ability to proceed in the enterprise. Only about one-third of the required capital being subscribed, and the interest in the affair seeming to be on the wane, it looked discouraging, and after many propositions and much levity, it was agreed to adjourn until after the election of Cleveland. Hon. Reuben Conner resigned his position as president of the meeting, the same to be perpetual, in an eloquent address.

The infant daughter of Theodore and Fanny Chambers "little Emily" was buried in Florence cemetery Sunday afternoon, having died at their home in Walton some days ago.

Rev. Skillman, of Georgetown, Ky., has been employed as pastor of the Baptist church at this place, also at Dry Creek, Kenton county. He preached here Sunday morning and evening to a large and appreciative audience. The Dr. is a pure gentlemnu, a fine speaker and will be a great addition to this church.

Dr. C. R. Slater was so unfortunate as to lose a fine horse on Saturday. The Dr. was out on a professional visit and the animal died on the road. We understand that he had just got this horse from his father in order to rest up his own, which was suffering from over work.

L. Conner Yager enters the senior class of the Cincinnati Law School, Oct. 16th, for a term of eight months.

GAS OMETER.

Beaver Lick.

The past week has been unusually favorable to cutting and housing tobacco, and the growers of the weed have generally taken advantage of it. Most every one is done with putting in the house and is now coujecturings as to the price he will for it. Old leaf is selling low on the breaks, but if the "boys" will hold to their good new leaf it will yet pay them; don't scare and let go too soon, but just soon enough, that is the "pointer" we present them.

Several large tobacco barns have been put up in this locality this fall, and there is scarcely one of them that will be filled full of the weed, hence the inference a short crop.

Stock of all kinds seem to be a drug on the market. There is no demand whatever, here for anything of that kind. All are waiting to see how corn will husk out, and of course stock is no go without corn.

The grazing, however, at present is fine, but exports say there isn't much substance in grass that springs in the autumn.

Owing to the setting of the grand jury last week, several of our sporting fraternity left for over the line to be absent in case of a call from the Sheriff or some of his deputies. The g. j. do hustle the sports, now dosen't it? The g. j. and the sports are a pair that should be investigated and if possible a compromise effected between them. This semi-annual warfare business of theirs fast becoming outrageously intolerable. It reflects discreditably upon the county's moral statutes you see, and that's a big thing you know.

There has long existed a dispute between the Baptist church and Mr. Houston relating to the line running between said church and Houston. The church has appointed the following gentlemen, Amly Ellis, Jno. Check and Ann Hoard a committee to look into the matter and have it rightly adjusted as early as convenient. It is a matter that should be attended to as there are a great many persons particularly interested in the property in question, it being a portion of the Old Mupliek cemetery. BILL LLOYD.

The other day Judge Major and other parties burgooed at that romantic place, Rocky Spring, where a kettle of delicious soup satisfied their appetites.

Wm. Clore had his shoulder dislocated by a horse jirking him Monday. Dr. Grant adjusted the joint.

Mr. Jim Cowen and wife, of Gallatin county is visiting his father at this place.

A big portion of the citizens of Constance were before Esq. Gaines to-day.

The Ohio Election.

The State election in Ohio is over and the Buckeye State was captured by the Republicans. The majority is large enough for the State purposes, but will not silence the fight for the November prize, and the fight will be continued into the last ditch. It takes thirty-eight States to elect a President, but that the result in Ohio will have some weight in the Presidential fight cannot be denied. The Enquirer says that Tuesday was a red day in that city. The Commercial Gazette claims 23,000 majority. The Democrats claim West Virginia from 5,000 to 8,000.

It takes millions to get a "free vote and fair count" in Ohio.

THE COACHMAN'S CAROL.

I'm a coachman grand and gay,
So they say!
And I'm beautiful and bold,
So I'm told,
And I drive a pair of nags
For my boss, who proudly brags
Of his gold
Every day.

Oh, he has a daughter fair,
Debonair;
She has liquid, languid eyes
And she's wise.
When she glances up at me
In a manner coy, yet free,
Then she sighs,
While I stare.

All alone, we daily drive,
And I strive
Opportunities to seize
Her to please.
Oft I gaze at her with smiles,
And I practice artful wiles
With great ease,
For I'd thrive.

Yet her father never thinks
That she winks,
When I look at her and leer,
Oh, so queer!
Still she simply sweetly sighs
When I praise her pretty eyes,
Or pink ear,
Oh, the minx!

Though I really have no "soap,"
Yet I hope
Pretty soon her lips to kiss—
Oh, what bliss!
Won't her parents howl and kick
When, in short at double-quick,
I and Miss
Both elope?

Though her parents proud may grieve,
I believe
That my love, so strong and tough,
Is enough.
Why should they in anger start,
'Cause a coachman wears his heart,
Like a cuff,
On his sleeve?

—Kays, in N. Y. Journal.

HOW I GOT RID OF MY MOTHER-IN-LAW.

I was young, very young, and walking the hospital as a medical student, when I first became acquainted with Mrs Dimply. She was a widow with five daughters, all of them charming, but the third, Rosa Matilda by name, quickly destroyed all my power of appreciating the attractions of her sisters. I was introduced to the family by a mutual friend, and from that time became a constant, too constant, visitor at their house. Once a fortnight merged into once a week, and once a week insensibly increased to twice, or even oftener. It was a pleasant house to visit, and we had remarkably jolly evenings. I was rather a favorite with the whole family, but the kindness of Mrs. Dimply was simply overwhelming. If I chanced to be a little late she would shake her ringlets at me, and remark in her deep voice (she had a rich, mellow voice, which always reminded me somehow of fruity port,) "Late again, doctor; you naughty, naughty man. I suppose they couldn't spare you at the hospital. What a thing it is to be so clever." Of course I wasn't a doctor, and the hospital could have done perfectly well without me, but the whole thing was very soothing. Then again if I sang a song, Mrs. D. (who did so pity anybody who hadn't a soul for music) would sit enraptured, frowning fiercely and holding up a warning finger if any one ventured to interrupt. And when I had finished—"Dear me, Dr. Smithers, what a sweet song, and you sing it so charmingly! You must really give it us over again. It's your own fault for singing it so nicely." And if the subject gave her the ghost of a chance she would make a little gulp in her throat, as if swallowing down a spasm of uncontrollable emotion, and wipe her eyes with the corner of her lace pocket handkerchief. After supper, too, the way that she mixed my toddy was quite touching. She never put in less than four lumps of sugar (I like it sweet,) and always took a sip herself with the spoon to make sure it was all right. On one or two occasions, when the water hadn't quite boiled, her self-reproach was really painful. But these were halcyon days. I must proceed to the more prosaic portion of my narrative.

Time went on. I succeeded in passing my final examination, and became entitled to write myself M. R. C. S. Of course I rushed off at once to the Dimplys with the joyful intelligence. Mrs. D. shed tears and blessed me, and incited me to kiss the girls all round in honor of the occasion. I need hardly say I availed myself of the suggestion, Rosa Matilda getting (if I may be allowed the expression) a Benjamin's portion. I think that evening brought matters to a crisis; at any rate, I found myself, about a week later, asking a private interview with Mrs. D., and pleading for the hand of Rosa Matilda She was so very fond of the dear girl that I was terribly afraid (I was very young, you will remember,) that I shouldn't be able to influence her to part with her, but, to my surprise and relief, she gave her consent without the slightest pressing, and, taking me into the drawing-room, introduced me to the girls (with much emotion) as their future brother. Of course I kissed them all round once more; Mrs D. kissed me, remarking that I reminded her so much of dear Dimply. The departed D. (unless his portrait was a libel) had been a podgy little man, with a snub nose and much marked with the small-pox; but I felt that the observation was intended as a compliment, and accepted it accordingly.

Fortunately for myself, I was not entirely dependent on my profession, and after a brief engagement we were married. I pass over the wedding, which was pretty much like any other wedding. I think perhaps I got rather more than the average quantity of rice down my back, and we drove away with two white satin slippers (odd ones unfortunately) on the roof of the carriage. Mrs. D. was much affected at parting, entreating me to love and cherish her dear, dear girl, and was scarcely pacified even by my fervent assurance that I had every intention of doing so.

We spent three delicious weeks in the Isle of Wight and then took possession of our new home, a pretty little villa in St. John's Wood. We had been installed about ten days when an affectionate letter arrived from mamma-in-law, announcing her intention of coming to stay a week with us and see how we were getting on. It struck me that it was a little early for such a visit, but it would have been ungracious to make any objection. She arrived the same evening. Rosie and I were sitting together (she was sitting on my knee, in point of fact,) when we heard mamma-in-law's cab stop at the door, and we ran out into the hall to welcome her. There she was, smiling and shaking her ringlets as playfully as ever, while the cabman was bringing in three trunks, two bandboxes, and a huge brown paper parcel. My heart sank within me, but I was aroused by being deputed to pay the cabman, for which purpose the dear creature handed me eighteenpence. Cabby demanded half a crown, and after a violent altercation, which made me very hot and uncomfortable, and brought out two cooks and a housemaid from adjoining houses to see the fun, I compounded with him for two shillings, which was his proper fare, paying the extra sixpence out of my own pocket. I got inside just in time to see the servants knock out two of the balusters with the biggest of the boxes. I implored them to be more careful, and they accordingly avoided the balusters, and their efforts confined themselves to knocking holes in the wall and tearing jagged pieces out of the paper as far as the second floor. With this exception, nothing particularly distressing occurred that evening, but the very next morning mamma-in-law made her appearance at breakfast (rather late) in a flannel dressing gown and curl papers. Now, if there is anything I hate more than a flannel dressing gown, it is curl papers, and if there is anything I hate more than curl papers, it is a flannel dressing gown. "I make myself quite at home my dears, you see," was her first greeting, shaking her curl papers as she was wont to do her curls, though by no means with the same effect. I thought she did, confound her, but I swallowed my annoyance and ventured to hope she slept well. No, if she must tell the truth, (which she needn't have done on my account, I'm sure,) not very well. She never did like those new-fangled spring mattresses. Nothing like her old-fashioned feather-bed at home for her. (The retort was obvious, but, of course, I didn't make it.) And then again, she couldn't help thinking that the sheets were not quite aired, and there was certainly a draught from the left hand window. I promised that all these little matters should be seen to, and asked if I might help her to an egg or a rasher of bacon. "Thank you, no: I'm really afraid—eggs make me bilious, and bacon always disagrees with me but if you happen to have such a thing as a bloater in the house now—" Of course we didn't happen to have such a thing in the house, but I promised that our establishment should be kept permanently provided with bloaters for the future, and the dear woman kindly accepted three pork sausages as a temporary substitute. (I may mention incidentally that I ordered a quarter of a hundred of real Yarmouth for her the very same day. She ate two of them, and then discovered that bloaters made her so dreadfully thirsty. No other member of our household cared for them, and the remaining twenty-three, after giving a sort of an air to the establishment for a fortnight, were ultimately given to the milkman.) The first thing after breakfast the dear creature said sweetly: "Now, Rosie, my love, give me your keys and I'll set your store cupboard to rights for you. I don't intend you to be bothered with any housekeeping during the week or two I am with you." Mark the delicate crescendo—she only said one week at first, but now it had got to a week or two. My poor little wife looked rather crestfallen, for she enjoyed the discharge of her new duties as mistress, but the habit of obedience was still strong, and she was about to hand over the insignia of authority when I came to the rescue. "No, no, mamma! that won't do. Rosie makes a capital little housekeeper, and I want her to have as much practice as possible. She must bustle about more than ever during the short time that you are here (I thought that was rather neatly put) so that she may have the full benefit of your experience." Rosie gave me a grateful look, and pocketed the keys again, while Mrs. D. tried to look as if she didn't mind in the least, and wagged her curl papers more playfully than ever.

I started on my daily round, to look in at the hospital and call on my few patients, and did not return until dinner time. My little wife came out to meet me in the hall with by no means her usual smiling face; indeed, it struck me that her eyes were a little red. I did not make any remark until we were left alone. Then I inquired the cause. The poor little woman tried hard to maintain her composure, but it was not until after she had had a good cry on my shoulder that I extracted from her, by degrees, that mamma had been "going on" at her so, telling her that she did pretty nearly everything wrong, that she felt quite discouraged and miserable. I comforted her as best I could. The dinner, for the first time since our marriage, was a failure; and Mrs. D. did not improve matters by remarking, in her sweetest manner, that she feared all along it would be so. If dear Rosie had only taken her advice, and hadn't done this, and had been a leetle more particular about something else, all would have been as it should be. Of course, I took my wife's part, and testified with some warmth that up to that day the cookery had always been perfection. Mrs. D. drew herself up, and for the remainder of the meal retired within herself, from which dignified but constrained position it took three glasses of my best Madeira to extricate her.

We had hitherto been accustomed to have a little music every evening, but we were debarred from that pleasure by Mrs. D. taking possession of the sofa in the drawing-room and going to sleep immediately after dinner. It struck me that if she objected to the sound of the piano she might as well betake herself to some other room, and I tried a few chords, to see if she would take the hint and retire, but she merely opened her eyes with the air of a saint in the act of martyrdom, and faintly remarked that she feared one of her dreadful headaches was coming on again. Of course, under such circumstances, music was out of the question, and my reading aloud to my wife, which was another of our enjoyments, was equally tabooed. In desperation I hinted to Rosie that we had better return to the dining room, but the sleeping beauty on the sofa languidly opened her eyes and said, "Pray keep me company, my dears; I assure you you don't disturb me in the least," which, snoring is a sign of undisturbed repose, we certainly didn't. She continued to doze for the remainder of the evening, but if by any chance I pressed my wife's hand, or ventured on any other conjugal endearment, one eye of the sleeper would slowly open, and gaze at me with an expression—I really hardly know what expression, but the effect was awful. Nobody who hasn't tried it can imagine the nameless horror, the uncanny and witch-like fascination, that is contained in the steadfast gaze of a single eye, particularly if that eye belongs to a mother-in-law.

The evening came to an end at last, and was followed by several others, as like it as possible. My wife and I, who had been accustomed to make sweet music together, or to sit, side by side, and hand in hand, on the sofa, enjoying the last new magazine, now sat in grim propriety on opposite sides of the fire place, hardly venturing to talk above our breath for fear of disturbing mamma-in-law whose nasal ophicleide kept up a smooth droning burr, occasionally interspersed by rapid snorts, like corks drawn in quick succession. As we could no longer enjoy our evenings at home, I determined to make an effort to enjoy them abroad, and accordingly announced to Rosie at dinner time one day that I intended to treat her to the Ballad Concert at St. James' Hall that evening. Mamma-in-law, who no longer cared for music when it could be had gratis on the premises, was immediately seized with an intense desire to hear that dear Signor somebody or other, and accordingly I had to take her, too. I must own that she offered to pay for herself, but on my saying politely that I could not possibly allow her to do so, she yielded without a murmur. An evening at the opera had a similar result, and I found that she would sit out a lecture on the driest subject in the whole range of science, say protoplasm or cataplasm, or even go down in the diving-bell with us, rather than let us go alone. In the daytime matters were little better. I myself was generally out all the morning, but poor Rosie was so lectured, and instructed, and advised, all in the sweetest and most aggravating manner, that she began to look quite haggard and worried. Our cook, a really valuable person, with whom we had been much pleased, had given warning four days after Mrs. Dimply's arrival, stating unreservedly that two "missuses" in one house were one too many for her. And I cordially sympathized with her.

The "week or two" had expanded into three, and the three into four, and still there was no sign of mamma-in-law's departure. Indeed she had begun to talk of "her) room," and to make little alterations in the furniture, which betokened a very lengthened visit. I now began to understand why she had taken such a warm interest in the upholstering of the spare room. I remember her telling Rosie that a tastefully furnished spare room gave such a "style" to a house. I began to wish the spare room at Jericho, or even further. But relief was at hand and it came from a most unexpected quarter indeed, in a shape which at first sight seemed to threaten an aggravation of our grievance. I have no doubt a disciple of Hahnemann would claim it as a grand exemplification of homeopathic principles. It certainly was a case of similia similibus curantur. But the reader shall judge for himself.

I don't think I have yet mentioned that I myself have a mother living, a good old soul, without any of Mrs. Dimply's town-bred graces, but withal a remarkably keen old lady, and Yorkshire to the backbone. Mrs. Dimply had been with us just four weeks, when one morning I received a telegram, as follows:

From Mrs. Smithers, Hunsle, Leeds. To H. A. Smithers, M.R.C.S., 17 Jessamine Villas, St. John's Wood, N. W.

Letter just to hand from Brodby and Grigg, saying I must come up to town at once. Shall rely on you to give me a bed. Meet me at station at seven.

I should here explain that my mother was interested in a chancery suit, under which she was entitled to a share of some considerable property, and that Messrs. Brodby & Grigg were her lawyers. For the moment I did not know what to do. It would never do to send the dear old lady to a hotel, and yet our only spare room was occupied. What on earth was to be done? After a little reflection I decided to do nothing at all, but to let our two visitors settle the matter between themselves. They were both self-invited guests. We had only one room to give them, and they must share it. We, at any rate, should be doing all in our power, and they must make the best of the arrangement. Mrs. Dimpley was out when the telegram arrived; but at dinner time I broke to her, as gently as I could, that my mother was coming to town unexpectedly, and would have to share her room.

"Dear me," she said: "I'm afraid that will be very inconvenient for both parties. And I am such a very light sleeper! Couldn't it be arranged for Mrs. Smithers to sleep at a hotel? I don't mind on my own account in the least, but I should think it would be so much more comfortable for her." I explained that my mother, being country bred and unused to London ways, would feel nervous in a strange house; but if Mrs. Dimply thought it necessary I would secure a room for her at a hotel. This suggestion did not meet her views at all. "Oh dear no, don't think of such a thing on my account," she said. "I suppose your mother won't stay very long, and we must make the best of it. I dare say we shan't quarrel," she added, with her accustomed sweetness.

Seven o'clock came, and I met my mother at the Great Northern Station. On our way homeward I told her that she must excuse our only being able to give her half a bed, as Rosa's mother was staying with us.

"What's that for?" she said, in surprise. "Rosa isn't ill, is she?"

"Oh dear no," I said. "She never was better, I am happy to say."

"Then is she so weak or so foolish that she must always be tied to her mother's apron-strings? I suppose it's her doing?"

"Oh dear no," I said. "Mrs. Dimply invited herself, and between you and me I think poor Rosa is as tired of her company as I am, but of course she doesn't like to be undutiful."

"Ca-liddle-tick!" said my mother. "That's how the land lies, is it? And how long has she been with you?"

"Four weeks," I said.

"My poor, dear boy! why, she must have taken possession the very first week after you got home."

"Not quite that," I said, "but very soon after."

"Hum!" said my mother, "and she and I are to occupy the same room, are we? Very good. If I don't make things lively for her my name's not Betsy Smithers! You leave it to me."

"But what do you intend to do?" I said.

"Never you mind; you just leave it to me." And not another word could I get out of her.

On reaching home my mother kissed Rosa with great affection, and the two mothers-in-law saluted each other with ceremonious politeness. I hardly know why, but they reminded me somehow of pugilists at a sparring match, shaking hands before they begin to punch one another's heads.

"It is a curious coincidence, Mrs. Dimply," said my mother, beaming amiably through her spectacles, "that you and I should have hit on the very same day to come and visit these young people."

This was a gentle facer, but Mrs. Dimply came up smiling. "Oh, I have been here—some days," she replied.

"Mamma came on the 20th of last month," interjected Rosa, who wasn't going to have any mistake upon that subject.

"Dear me, so long as that!" said my mother, lifting her eyebrows. "Don't your other daughters miss you very much, Mrs. Dimply?"

"Well, they are beginning to complain a little. In fact, I was only saying this morning that as soon as dear Rosa can spare me I really must take my departure." (If she had said anything of the kind I'm a Dutchman, but of course we didn't contradict her.)

"No doubt it is very nice for Rosa to have you," (Rosa made a little face at me, privately, over her mamma's shoulder), "but I think myself that the sooner young people get out of leading strings the better. Nothing teaches housekeeping like a few mistakes to begin with."

"Yes, perhaps so," said Mrs. Dimply; "but dear Rosa is so very inexperienced."

"No doubt," said my mother still more sweetly. "I suppose all young wives are at first starting. But the inexperience soon rubs off when they are left to their own devices. Never fear, Rosa, my dear, you'll soon learn your business if you are let alone."

Mrs. Dimply looked uncomfortable and changed the subject, rather to my own relief. We had supper that evening, my mother being in the habit of dining at midday, and soon after the cloth was removed Mrs. Dimply, complaining that she felt tired, went to bed. My mother sat chatting for an hour or so longer, and then she, too, wished us good night, and retired.

I felt a little anxious as to how the old and new tenants of the spare room would get on together, their habits being as unlike as well could be. Mrs. Dimply was, if I may be permitted the expression, rather "stuffy" in her ways. She liked a fire in her bedroom and warm water to wash with, and was dreadfully afraid of draughts. My mother affected cold baths, slept with her window open summer and winter, and always declared that she could not breathe in a close room. Mrs. Dimply liked to lie in bed in the morning, and found it hard work to get down stairs in time for a nine o'clock breakfast. My mother set her alarm for five in the summer and six in the winter, and did a couple of hours' work of some kind or other before breakfast. I did not know how far she would transplant her country habits to London, but the next morning, punctually at six, Rosa and I were awakened by a sound like a sky rocket of the largest size suddenly going off in the adjoining room.

"God gracious! what's that dreadful noise?" said Rosa.

"That's mother's pet alarm," I said, laughing. "She would never forgive herself if she didn't get up at her usual time."

"But what about my poor mother?" said Rosa, laughing in her turn. "She'll be frightened out of her senses."

"Oh, she'll get used to it after a day or two, and perhaps we shall have her down in proper time for breakfast, which is more than she has been for the last three mornings."

"Ah—um!" said Rosa.

"What did you say?" I inquired, but I found she had gone to sleep again.

When we went down to breakfast, my mother was already in the dining-room. Rosa asked her how she had slept. "Capitally, my dear," she said, "thank you. I can always sleep well. But I'm afraid your mamma did not have a very good night. Between ourselves, she was a little injudicious at supper, and she has suffered for it."

As she spoke, Mrs. Dimply appeared, fully dressed, but with a Shetland shawl tied round her head, and looking the picture of misery. "I am sorry to hear you are not very well, Mrs Dimply," I said. "What is the matter?"

"The matter! Why, that dreadful open window, to be sure," with an injured glance at my mother. "It has given me one of my worst neuralgic headaches."

It appeared that my mother on going to bed found Mrs. Dimply already asleep. The ventilation being, according to her notions, insufficient, she had opened one of the windows about six inches at the top, and kept it so all night.

"You don't really think it was the window?" said my mother sweetly. "Let me assure you that you are mistaken. I must show you some day what the celebrated Dr. Dillwater says in his book 'Ventilation and Vitality.' Dr. Dillwater says it's absolutely idiotic, not to say criminal, to sleep with one's windows shut. Why, I sleep with my bedroom window open every night of my life, and look at Me!"

"Perhaps you have an exceptionally strong constitution," suggested poor Mrs. Dimply.

"Oh, dear, no, not at all! rather the reverse. I am naturally delicate, but I study the laws of health If you speak the laws of health you must pay the fine, you know. Now, if I might venture, Mrs. Dimply, I could tell you exactly the cause of your headache. Of course it was not for me to interfere, but I was quite sure last night that you would have a headache this morning."

"Indeed!" said Mrs. Dimply, faintly.

"Yes, indeed. It was—you're sure you'll forgive me for speaking plainly?—it was those pickled onions at supper. Pickled onions, and hot whisky and water to follow! They're both very nice, I admit; but at our time of life" (Mrs. Dimply was quite as old as my mother, but wouldn't have owned to it by ten years) "we are compelled to be careful. If not, as I said before, we have to pay the penalty. Now, will you let me prescribe for you? I am a capital doctor, I assure you. Just one Cockle's pill (I can give you one if you like), and it'll put you to rights directly. But you must really get in the way of sleeping with your window open, if you wish to enjoy good health."

"Your remedies are too heroic for me," said poor Mrs. Dimply, shaking her head. "And that dreadful alarm! I declare I haven't got over the fright it gave me yet."

"Did it really startle you?" said my mother. "Now, do you know I am so used to it that I hardly notice it. It does just wake me, and that's all."

"Startle me! The horrid thing frightened me so that I am shaking still. I thought the house was falling down at the very least, and as to getting to sleep again after that, it was out of the question."

"I assure you you won't mind it in the least after a few days," said my mother, amiably. "I believe it does strike strangers as a little loud, but it's really nothing when you're used to it. You'll find it won't sound half so loud to-morrow morning."

"I trust I shan't be within hearing of it to-morrow morning. The girls are wanting me dreadfully at home, and if Rosa will excuse me I think I shall go to-day. Now that Rosa has got you to advise her, Mrs. Smithers, I am really not needed."

"Rosa will rub along, I dare say, though I shan't trouble her with any advice, unless it's specially asked for. But I am very sorry you are obliged to go so soon, Mrs. Dimply, just as we were beginning to know one another. I am sure we should have got on so nicely together. But I do hope it's only a pleasure deferred."

"I hope so, I'm sure," said Mrs. Dimply, politely, though I am sadly afraid she didn't.

"I'll tell you what," said my mother, her face brightening as if one of Mr. Burnand's "happy thoughts" had just struck her. "The very next time, Mrs. Dimply, you come to stay with Rosa for a few days, Adolphus shall let me know, and I'll come and keep you company. You promise, Adolphus, don't you?"

"I do, mother," I said with fervor.

"That's right, it's an understood thing. I'll be with you the very same day after at latest. And we'll sleep with the window open every night, Mrs. Dimply, and get up at six in the morning, and in less than a fortnight you shall be as fat and rosy as I am. But you really mustn't eat any more pickled onions for supper."

* * * * * * *

Mrs. Dimply packed up her three boxes, and was out of the house before luncheon. The parting between her and my mother was quite affecting, the regret of the latter at losing her so soon being only tempered by the prospect (on which she laid continual stress) of a nice long visit, to be enjoyed together at an early date. The cab drove from the door, my mother waving her last adieus from the doorstep. I could almost have imagined that there was a twinkle in her eye as she returned to the hall. She then descended to the kitchen, and after a brief absence returned with the intelligence that the cook had thought better of it and consented to stay. Her next proceeding was to produce an A B C Guide and to begin to calculate trains.

"But you are not leaving us, surely?" began Rosa. "I do hope, now you are here, you will stay a week or two with us."

"You're very kind to say so, my dear, but I'd rather not, all the same! The business on which I came up to town will be completed this afternoon, and to-morrow morning I shall start homeward again."

Rosa began a little complimentary pressing, but the old lady stopped her: "No, my dear, there's an old-fashioned proverb 'two are company and three are none,' and I've a notion that the saying is never truer than about husband and wife. I have a great respect for mothers-in-law, (naturally so, being a mother-in-law myself,) but it's possible to have two much even of a good thing. I'll pay you a flying visit once in a way, never fear, but I won't stay at present. Besides, now your dear mother is gone, (here her eyes twinkled again,) I have really no inducement to stay. It's a pity; we should have been such nice companions to each other. But don't forget our agreement. I'm a woman of my word—the very next time she comes to pay you a staying visit let me know, and I'll come too."

* * * * * * *

Five years have passed away, and a young family is springing up around us. My mother frequently writes to us, and never fails to send an affectionate message to Mrs. Dimply, inquiring when she will be ready to pay the long promised joint visit. But she isn't ready yet.—Temple Bar.

How to Treat Sandy and Clay Soils.

The feature that most distinguishes sandy and clay soils is the capacity of retaining or passing off water. In a drought sandy soil suffers more than clay soil; in a moist season it is more favored, especially where clay soil is lacking in drainage. With good drainings, the difference is less, and disappears entirely in a moderately moist or showery season. All is dependent upon the amount of the rainfall. In land where sand and clay are in balance, or nearly so, there is less danger to be feared from drought or the excess of moisture, and this constitutes our best soil. The great bulk of our land, however, is not of this character, but has either more clay or more sand, and often much more. It is this land, having a large proportionate amount of clay or sand, that more particularly requires our attention.

To restore the proper balance by applying either clay or sand is considered, in our present state of farming too expensive, except in small plats, or where the material is adjoining and convenient of access. Other means therefore, have to be resorted to. They are, in clay soil, first of all, draining This changes at once and largely the character of the soil, not unfrequently doubling its productiveness, the soil continuing to improve for years. There is much land that needs draining, much more than farmers are usually aware. The post hole is a good test. If this retains water it is evidence that the land needs underdraining. To accomplish this the drains for an orchard should be not less than four feet in depth; for general farming three feet will do, and the drains should be not more than two rods apart, care being taken to make good work, as a clogged drain is no drain at all. If the work is well done the increase of the crops grown upon the ground for two or three years will cover the expense of underdraining leaving the land in good condition to an unlimited time.

Next, clay land requires more care in working it than other soil, as it is more readily affected by the weather. Ploughed when wet in the spring it will bake and become more or less hard and when worked afterward will break up in lumps, and all the effort to reduce it to a soft, mellow condition will be of little avail. Crops are grown on such soil with lose, and it requires the frost of one or two winters to correct its harshness. But it is less susceptible to injury and more easily worked after it is drained. It will then admit of earlier plowing and putting in in the spring and quicker working after a rain. It also favors fall plowing which is certain to be followed in the spring by a mellower surface and a less compact undersoil, which, now that its drainage is improved, favors the more ready discharge of surplus water. But in all cases care must be taken not to plow the land or work it in any way when wet. Besides the aid of the frosts and the free use of implements in reducing the soil to a mellow condition, barn yard manure, highly charged with fine vegetable material, is another and important aid, this helps to further divide the particles that compose the soil and bring them into new contact. Sod and green crops turned down have a similar effect.

The processes thus far suggested have been mainly to dry and mellow the land, with the object in view of passing off surplus water in a rainy time, and retaining moisture in a drought—two properties which occur only in a good soil, and which are so much needed in our clay land. We now have a valuable soil. It is our business to see that we keep it so by continuing the care in working it and keeping it enriched and well-charged with vegetable matter, which will keep it soft and mellow. It will then last No soil wears better.

Sandy soil requires less time and much less expense than clay soil to bring it into good condition. No underdraining is necessary, and less care and effort are required in working it What it needs is to be put in condition to retain moisture and prevent waste of manure by washing and evaporation as its hold upon manure is very slight in the absence of clay. To supply the necessary clay would be too expensive The most successful treatment is to charge the surface soil with fine vegetable matter, to be thoroughly mixed and incorporated with the tillable soil For this purpose nothing is better than muck. This not only improves the texture of the soil, but deepens its color which favors the absorption of heat so much needed early in the season. It also contains some plant food, but not enough to realize much profit, if any, on the cost. It is the manure that is to be used after the application of the muck, or, what is better, combined with the muck before it is applied on the land, that is to realize the profit, the muck being the medium to convey and hold the manure for the use of the plant as it requires it. And it answers this purpose well, having, like clay, an attraction for the fertilizing elements particularly nitrogen, which in the main it holds till taken up by the plant. It also absorbs and retains moisture.

The best way to combine manure and vegetable matter is to use the latter as an absorbent in the stables. Where muck is lacking other material may be employed, such as chaff leaf mould, or sawdust from hard wood, to be used in a dry state, when they readily absorb the fluids of the stables, which are by far the best portion of the droppings, and are ready at once to be taken up by vegetation when applied to the land. Farmers who have adopted this method are realizing its benefit as applied both to sandy and clay soils. On the former it is more a necessity, and hence it is more employed on light soil. Where an entire farm, or most of it, is composed largely of sand, some farmers, in addition to their other stock, keep a large number of hogs expressly to manufacture manure, the hogs paying for their cost to fit them for market, while the manure combined with the muck which is used freely in the pens, costs only the labor of securing the muck obtained on the farm; and when it is considered that the removal of the muck changes a bog into good tillable land, the benefit of the operation becomes evident. The manure is rich and quick in its effect, the muck forming the necessary vegetable material for the mechanical improvement of the land, and the longer retention of the manurial elements in the soil.

To undertake to treat sandy soil, especially if light and leachy, without the aid of some substance to improve its texture so as to prevent leaching and hold the manure is to fail. And after the land is put in condition for successful cropping it requires continued endeavor to keep it so, otherwise it will speedily go back to its former barren condition. Properly managed it can be made a continued success with less labor and expense than were employed in its improvement. —N. Y. Sun.

New Feed for Stock.

The English farmer raises mangolds for cattle and turnips for sheep, whereas the American farmer raises neither only in a very limited sense. It is understood in all lands that roots are healthy food, which should be a sufficient inducement to raise them. The English farmer, from sheer necessity of making the most off from the land he tills, learned the lesson of economy that root feeding taught him. He found that ten tons of roots were worth more to him in the health and growth of his stock than hay or grain that could be raised on the same ground, and he practically applied the lesson. Now mangolds and turnips are not equal in value as food to carrots and sugar beets. Why, then, does he not raise these instead? We suppose because mangolds and turnips yield more to the acre and with less work, and then the turnips are eaten by the sheep in the field without pulling at all. Movable fences are used to inclose the ground according to the number of sheep and they are kept there till the turnips are consumed without much attention. This ground grows enormous amounts of mangolds to the acre—a cheap and abundant supply from little land. As our country grows older, land higher and economy more urgent, we shall follow in their footsteps, but we expect our roots will be more carrots than sugar beets, because there is considerable more nutriment in them than in the other, and besides, we shall have to keep them from freezing. But if it be more profitable to feed roots, why do not farmers raise more now? Roots are raised to some extent where land is worth $100 or more per acre, but it is far more general, even there. It takes labor to raise roots, and so it does everything else grown on the farm. But the Western farmers laugh at us when we talk of raising roots for stock. The truth is, his land is yet comparatively cheap and the great mass of farmers own from 160 to 640 acres. They have plenty of pasture, have corn and oats. What need have they of fussing among the weeds to clean out acres of roots, so that a respectable crop may be obtained? They deem it of vastly more consequence to devote their time and energies to the raising of wheat, corn and oats, and as long as land is not worth more than $50 per acre they will not condescend to stoop to pull up weeds from about tiny carrot roots—not they. They have not yet learned the value of money in that way. Plenty of hay and grain—what more do they need. But Western farmers are sadly deficient in matters of economy, as any one may see by the great number of agricultural tools turned up against the fence to winter. This is a fast end of farming in the West which would cause an Eastern man to wonder how they live at all and come out with a clean balance-sheet at the end of the year. But time and experience are the great healing ointments for these unsightly sores. They will heal in time, and a more rational economy will supervene, new methods be introduced and thousands saved which are now annually lost. Roots should come into more general use, because they promote the health of most animals. A less area is required to feed a given number of animals, which is so much gained for other crops, and the surplus grain raised is a clear gain from raising the roots. Then we believe young stock will gain more pounds of bone and muscle than if fed in the usual manner, because, being healthy, their appetites are kept good. The roots answer another good purpose, that of stuffing.—Practical Farmer.

Careful Training for Horses.

All farmers, and a great many who are not, are used from childhood to handling colts and horses, and yet it is very rare that you see any of them handling animals, especially colts and young horses, with judgment. The first that the colt should learn is that you will not hurt him (that is, he must learn not to be afraid of you), and the next lesson should be to teach him that you are his master. When these two requisites are accomplished the whole business of training is in your hands, and if good management is used after this any ordinary colt can be made just what you wish him to be. Horses with high mettle are a little more troublesome in the commencement than those with dull spirits, but when properly subdued and handled they are more easily educated than those of dull spirits, and they are also more susceptible to ill-training, and this is the reason that there are so many vicious and dangerous horses. Never allow a colt to get the advantage of you, and then it will never know that it possesses a power that man can not control, and if made familiar with strange objects it will not be skittish and nervous. The fact is the horse will be what you make it, and with colts, as with the human family, early impressions are the most lasting and are made for good or ill, according to your management.—San Francisco Chronicle.

Another Mystery of the Arctics.

The Greely party sailed July 7, 1881, a few days after President Garfield was shot. The last news they received at St. Johns was encouraging, and they believed he had recovered. More than two years elapsed, during which they were utterly cut off from communication with their fellow men, so that some meager scraps which had been used as wrapping paper, were treasured like gold. They were spread out, put together and eagerly scanned. President Arthur was alluded to, and they then knew the fatal issue of the assassin's shot. The loss of the Jeannette was mentioned, and they supposed the entire crew had perished. The word "dude" appeared in the print. This was a stunner. They had never heard it before, and many and sharp were the controversies regarding its signification. One of the first interrogations uttered from the throats of the feeble survivors as they saw approaching the rescuing party was: "What is a dude?"—Cleveland Leader.

—The use of the word "right" in the sense of "very" is apt to be considered by New Englanders as peculiar to the Western and Southern States, but the London Truth speaks of "right pleasant arrangements."

Mr. Edward L. Green, Sheriff, Auckland, New Zealand, writes: "I received an injury to my shoulder in June, 1882, and from that date until July, 1883, I could not use my arm. I applied to medical men and used all sorts of liniment, without any benefit. I have great pleasure in stating I had occasion to use St. Jacobs Oil for it, and I had not used it more than ten minutes before I felt the beneficial effect, and I can work with my saw or spade as well as ever I did, and recommend it to any one suffering pain."

EXPENSES: for paper and press work, 1,000,000 copies, 52 issues, $600,000; editorial work, office, repairs, etc., $60,000; premium engravings, $1,000,000; incidentals, commissions, etc., $100,000;—total $1,760,000; leaving a net profit of $3,880,000. This enormous profit from sale of advertising space, Ocean to Ocean will owe directly to its subscribers, for advertisers will pay $10 a line simply because the paper will have 1,000,000 circulation. In order to secure such a circulation and such profits, the publishers will loan back to subscribers in $100 to $500 amounts, the profits thus secured, and also furnish the most attractive and valuable Premium ever offered.

The GRANDEST PREMIUM and a Long Loan AT 4 per cent

"Waiting for the Verdict."—This grand engraving was never sold for less than $12 a copy. We will pay $1,000 for any copy purchased at retail for a less amount. Our order is for 1,000,000 copies, we paying cost of American plate. Every future subscriber to Ocean to Ocean can secure a copy of this, the most valuable work of art ever issued in the form of an engraving, by sending 42c. in addition to the subscription price, to prepay cost, express and properly packing, or postage, if sent by mail. Also, any subscriber who desires to borrow from $100 to $500 at 4 per cent., the principal to stand if desired as long as borrower remains a subscriber, should so state when he orders the premium. In such case—

The Subscription Price, $2.00, need not be sent, as it can be deducted when Loan is made

And subscription begins. Your individual note is all the security asked; provided you will send the names of several of your neighbors to whom we can refer, not as to the amount of property you are worth, but as to good character. First year's interest at 4 per cent., and subscription price will be deducted from amount borrowed.

CONDITIONS. Loans made pro rata; not less than $100 nor more than $500. First year's interest at 4 per cent., and the subscription price to be deducted from amount loaned. If the subscriber does not apply for a loan, the subscription price must be sent in advance. If a loan is desired, no money need be sent for subscription, the charges for the Premium, 42c., only being required, as the subscription and first year's interest can be deducted from the loan. Every subscriber must accept as a condition of receiving the Premium, that he will display it in a conspicuous place in his house or office, and inform those who call how and where he secured it. Positively this must be done. Every Premium sent out secures additional subscribers, and no application will be entered unless the charges on the Premium are sent. These charges, 42c., have nothing to do with the subscription price, and barely cover cost, delivery, and properly packing or postage. The subscription price, $2 (which represents a profit and not a direct expense) can remain unpaid until loan is made and subscription begins. Postage stamps will not be received for Premium charges except from places where a postal note can not be obtained. When a loan is made the adjoining form of note will be sent, with the money, to the subscriber's nearest bank or express office, and the note need be signed until the money is paid over. Send the names of several of references, and immediate inquiry will be made. If no loan is desired, no references need be sent. The Premium will be sent at once. Address, Ocean to Ocean, 25 Bradford Block, CINCINNATI, O.

One year after date, for value received, I promise to pay to the order of the publishers of Ocean to Ocean the sum of ______ Dollars, with interest at 4 per cent. per annum after maturity. It is understood and agreed that no part of the principal of this note will be demanded or become payable, (except at my pleasure,) as long as I remain a paid-up subscriber to the above named paper. (Signed.)

TOPICS OF THE DAY.

SITTING BULL'S head is larger than was Daniel Webster's. So much for civilization.

WHILE General Wolseley is reviewing the troops, Chinese Gordon is doing the fighting.

"EMPLOY married coachmen, and put their wives on the box with them," advises a shrewd Philadelphian.

A FINE sight for the Arabs will be Wolseley's infantry bumping across the sand-hills on the backs of camels.

MR. NEEDLES is running for Congress in Illinois, and just across the river, in Missouri, Mr. Pins is a candidate.

BY actual count 210 omnibuses an hour pass the Astor House, New York City, in the busy part of the day.

MRS. MARY MAPLES DODGE, the editor of St. Nicholas, gets $5,000 a year, and has ever since the magazine was started.

DR. ALFRED TAYLOR says that every girl ought to know how to make good coffee, for bad coffee has made many bad men.

MR. LEGG ran for Congress in the recent Ohio election. As Mr. Legg was on the Prohibition ticket, he did not have a walk-over.

TWO BELGIAN editors fought a duel the other day without hitting each other. They would have been greatly surprised if they had.

MICHAEL ANGELO is a favorite name for Italian sculptors. Three are now recorded on the municipal list of Florence under that name.

THERE are twenty American girls studying at the University of Zurich. They are admitted upon equal terms with the male students.

AN American who went into business in Paris, and advertised on the fences, was fined $50 by the courts "for annoying the vision of the public."

BOSTON proper originally covered 783 acres, which area has increased to 1,829 acres by encroachments upon the sea, reclamation of marshes, etc.

DURING the twelve years occupied in the translation of the new version of the Old Testament, twelve of the twenty-seven translators are said to have died.

MR. BERGH has in his possession wills giving half a million of dollars to the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, which is now self-sustaining.

THE English have begun to make casks and barrels of steel. What the youngsters of England are to do for bonfires, the boys of America would like to know.

MARY GARRETT gets the grand family mansion along with several millions of her father's money. She will find lots of people willing to take the Garrett in that house.

A YEAR ago seven or eight prominent citizens of Chicago formed a class and hired an athlete to teach them how to gain strength. Three of the number are nearly dead and two more crippled.

RUM-FILLED walking sticks are the latest wrinkle for the New York bloods. They are of bamboo, porcelain lined, and are said to be very convenient for young men who leave the theatre between acts.

MANY of the Italian girls in New York are married when they are only twelve years old, and the infant population of the Italian quarter is said to be enormous. Policemen in the locality get no sleep while on duty.

PROF. HUXLEY, in the addresses which he delivered at the International Fisheries Exhibition, said: "An acre of good ocean fishing ground will yield more food in a week than an acre of the best land will in a year."

VICTORIA MOROSINI-SCHELLING had $1,552 to her credit in a New York bank, but when she and her coachman-husband called to draw it, the cashier informed her that her father had served the bank with a notice not to pay it to her.

SECRETARY FOLGER as the last official act of his life signed a contract for introducing into the Treasury Department a new system by which the steel engraved postal notes and government securities will be executed upon a rotary press.

MRS. HALEY ROGERS, a Boston widow lady, after bequeathing her modest fortune to a few surviving relatives, adds to her will: "And I hereby give and bequeath to the Home for Aged Colored Women in Boston my cloak and red flannel gown."

THE pretty custom of leaving a bunch of flowers with a card when calling is common with cottagers at the most fashionable summer resorts, and will undoubtedly be followed next winter in New York. The bunch is small, and the flowers contain some suitable sentiment.

AN Illinois milkman has just committed suicide. Instead of seeking a watery grave, he took laudanum.

A BROOKLYN girl writes to the papers that in her opinion "strict fathers are at the bottom of these elopements." She says her papa finds some fault with all her young gentlemen friends, and orders her to "give them their walking papers," without either rhyme or reason. And when "the right one" comes along she declares she will elope with him, if she can't get him in any other way. And her father, of course, like a kind, careful parent that his actions prove him, will forgive her.

CARELESS ENGINEER.

Two Men Killed Instantly—A Number of Others Dangerously Wounded.

SISTERVILLE, W. VA., October 19.—A terrible explosion took place on Friday evening at Ten-mile Creek, Tyler County, by which two men were instantly killed and five more dangerously wounded. A gang of twelve men were at work at Isaac Wehrman's saw-mill, when, without a moment's notice, the large boiler exploded. It was almost beneath the men, and the effect was terrific. The building was filled with scalding steam, which completed the work the explosion had begun. Three of the men were blown clear out of the building, one being dismembered and the others badly hurt. Five of the men escaped without injury. But four of those unhurt by the explosion were frightfully scalded. The list of killed and wounded is as follows: John Fox, killed by the explosion; William Worden, scalded to death; Geo. Kotzehne, seriously scalded; Henry Johnson, crushed by falling; Michael Anderson, burned about the head; Jacob Stuert, blown out of the building, both legs broken. A Pole named Golotski, was seriously burned. The engineer had neglected his boiler and the water went down causing the explosion.

Dead in a Hog-Pen.

BOWLING GREEN, MO., October 19.—News reached this place this morning of the death of Samuel Hayden, living at New Hartford, a small village in the southern part of the county. Hayden left his house yesterday morning about 10 o'clock, and as he failed to return for dinner his wife became alarmed, and at once commenced a search for him. His body was found in a hog-pen not far from the house, a bullet from a thirty-eight caliber revolver having entered his left temple. Some seem to think he committed suicide, while others claim he was climbing a fence, when his foot caught, causing him to fall and discharge the pistol accidentally. If it is a case of suicide no cause can be assigned for his committing the rash act. Deceased was about thirty years old. He leaves a wife and two small children.

A Terrible Runaway Casualty.

HAGERSTOWN, IND., October 19.—This morning Wm. Shields, an elderly gentleman residing at Montpelier, Ind., and here on a visit, was out driving, accompanied by his wife, daughter and his granddaughter and a young man named Hunt. As the team was descending a steep hill a line broke, and they ran away. The vehicle was overturned, and the occupants were thrown to the ground. The old man was instantly killed, his neck being broken. The wife's face was frightfully maugled, her jaw-bone being broken, and a portion of her nose torn away. The daughter had five ribs broken. The woman will recover. The young man had a leg broken. The little grand-daughter escaped uninjured, but is almost wild with grief.

Prohibition and Greenback Vote.

COLUMBUS, O., October 18.—Unexpectedly the Prohibition and Greenback-Butler votes increase proportionately with those of the Democrats and Republicans. The Prohibition vote last year was 8,362; this year 9,510. Greenback vote last year 2,937; this year 3,700, showing no coalition, but party lines closely followed. Total Prohibition and Greenback vote 12,447, or 1,126 more than Robinson's plurality. The rest of the Republican State ticket has an average majority over all of over 5,000. Total vote, 780,363. Last year it was 718,168; October, 1880, it was 716,186; November, 1880, it was 724,967.

Czar Talking of Being Liberal.

LONDON, October 19.—It is said that the Czar has notified his ministers that he intends to pursue a liberal course hereafter in his home Government, and hopes of reform are built thereon, but no signs of them have yet reached the outer world. On the contrary, the recent trials of Nihilists in St. Petersburg were conducted with a secrecy hitherto unheard of, and eight people were sentenced to death before the residents in the street where the court-house stands were aware of why the persons were being tried, or of what accused.

Striking Miners.

COLUMBUS, October 19.—The balance of the Ohio Central and Buckeye Creek regions have struck for an advance of rate of mining to eighty cents per ton. These include the miners of W. P. Rend, Sunday Creek Coal Company, and Columbus and Eastern Railway Company. The operators have refused to accede to the demand, and the miners will not resume work to-morrow morning. This action will cut off heavy contributions from the Ohio Central which have been made to the striking miners of Hocking Valley.

Miner Crushed.

SPRINGFIELD, O., October 18.—John Daughan, a minor from Jackson, was crushed to death to-day in this city, by the caving of a street under which he was tunneling for a sewer.

Colored Convict Killed.

CARLISLE, KY., October 19.—Marshall French a colored convict, sent up from Louisville, working on the turnpike near the city, was killed yesterday while blasting rock. He was ordered away by the overseer, but refused to go, and was struck by falling rock and killed.

Diphtheria Epidemic.

KINGSTON, ONT., October 18.—The public schools of Portsmouth, Ont., have been closed to prevent the spread of the diphtheria.

Russian Officers Executed.

ST. PETERSBURG, October 18.—Six officers of the army, who were sentenced to death early in the week, for political offenses, were executed to-day at the St. Petersburg Citadel. Besides these were two women who paid the death penalty, one, Madame Wolkenstein, the other Mary Figner, the daughter of a priest. The only persons who witnessed the execution were the Ministers of Justice and the Interior and prison officials.

Singular Accident.

INDEPENDENCE, MO., October 19.—Mrs. John Oliver, wife of a wealthy farmer living near Union Point school-house, ten miles south of this city, entered a clothes-closet last night smoking a pipe. In the closet were two pounds of blasting powder. A spark from the pipe exploded the powder, throwing the lady against the top of the closet and inflicting injuries which will prove fatal.

Killed by a Desperado.

CALDWELL, KAN., October 19.—C. M. Hollister, Deputy Sheriff of this county and United States Marshal, was shot and instantly killed about daylight this morning, near Hunnawell, by Bob Cross, a noted desperado, while attempting to arrest him. A large party is in pursuit of Cross, and if caught he will be lynched.

THE OCTOBER ELECTIONS.

The Democrats Secure Eleven Congressmen to the Republicans' Ten.

COLUMBUS, O., October 16.—Official returns were received at Republican headquarters to-night from Ashtabula and Wood Counties, these being the last to report, and complete the list. Revised figures give Robinson a plurality of 11,421. This shows a Republican gain of 26,063, and a Democratic gain of 2,163. In sixty-six counties the Republicans made all their gains and Democrats the rest. The Republican gains in the rural districts are equal to their plurality. The delegation to Congress will stand 11 Democrats and 10 Republicans.

WRECKED AND BURNED.

The Entire Train Consumed by Fire—A Number of Persons Seriously Injured.

LOUISVILLE, KY., October 18.—Meagre particulars of a disastrous accident at Putnamville, on the Louisville, New Albany, and Chicago Railroad reached this city this morning. Putnamville is a way station, with no telegraph office, located 134 miles from this city. The Courier-Journal's special says: "The Louisville Express, No. 4, going south on the Louisville New Albany and Chicago road, at 2:30 o'clock, was thrown from the track at Putnamville, going down an embankment seven feet. The engine was badly wrecked, the baggage car rolled over one and a half times, and the passenger coaches went on one side. The front trucks of the sleeper left the track. Engineer James Church had three ribs broken. Express messenger Charley Cutler had his right hand mashed. The baggage-man was buried under baggage and bruised. One hundred passengers were bruised and scratched, but not otherwise injured. Conductor Frazee and the brakeman escaped injury. The baggage car took fire at once, and in half an hour the entire train, including the engine was burned. The loss is $75,000. The messenger saved some of the valuables from the safe, and the bedding and cushions were saved from the coaches. People of the town extended hospitality to the passengers. The accident is thought to have been caused by a tramp drawing a bolt out of a switch and throwing it open.

Died From His Injuries.

CINCINNATI, October 19.—Lewis Lissett, of Napoleon, Indiana, who fell from a third story window on Wade street, the other day, died this afternoon from injuries received.

Prominent Hotel Man Dead.

BOSTON, October 18.—James Wormly, the celebrated hotel proprietor, of Washington, D. C., died at the Massachusetts General Hospital this afternoon, of calculus. He had been ill for sometime, and yesterday an operation was performed, since when he sank rapidly.

Accidentally Shot His Brother.

CARLINVILLE, ILL., October 19.—William Burke, a young man seventeen years of age, while hunting east of this city to-day, was accidentally shot by his brother, a lad fourteen years old. His wounds are pronounced fatal by the attending physician.

Russian Nihilists Mining.

ST. PETERSBURG, October 19.—A mine has been discovered opening from a cellar adjoining the Fortress of St. Peter and St. Paul. It was evidently the intention to undermine and blow up the fortress. Seven men have been arrested on suspicion of being implicated in the attempt.

Scarlet Fever Epidemic.

MILWAUKEE, October 18.—Fifty new cases of scarlet fever are reported in the Girls' Industrial School, a State institution, this morning, making a total of sixty cases. The disease is of a mild type and no fatalities as yet.

Badly Scalded.

COLUMBUS, IND., October 19.—Geo. Kinsey, an employe of Reed's tank-house, fell into a vat of waste slush to-day, and was so badly scalded as to leave scarcely any hope of his recovery.

The Nile Expedition.

CAIRO, October 19.—The Nile boats are delayed on account of head winds, and unless a north wind comes it is feared the expedition will be a failure.

Duke of Brunswick Dead.

BERLIN, October 18.—Wilhelm, First Duke of Brunswick, died this morning.

CHINESE WAR.

An Attack on the French in Tonquin Repulsed.

The Celestials Suffer Heavy Loss, but the French not a Man.

PARIS, October 20.—General Briere de Lisle telegraphs from Hai-pheng, under date of to-day, that large masses of the enemy appeared in the Red River region on the 13th inst., and made an attack on Tuyee-Kweng. They were defeated with great loss. No French were killed. The wounded are doing well. General De Lisle advises the Government that an effective force of twenty thousand is necessary to continue offensive operations and repel the invasion of Tonquin. The Figaro says the plan of campaign of General De Lisle, as presented to the Government, provides for the formation of two columns, of ten thousand men each, the first column to oppose the coming Chinese from Kwang-Si. The base of operations of this column will be Phulang, and the objective points Bacle and Lang-Son. The second column is to operate against the Chinese from Yun-Nan, having Hong-Hoa as a base, and Lao-Kai and Caobang as objective points. The Republique Francaise demands that the Chamber of Deputies consent to the necessary sacrifices in view of the situation in Tonquin, that the army may strike quickly and effectively. The Siecle says the valiant little army of General De Lisle can not long face the dangers menacing it; that it is the duty of the Government to send reinforcements without delay.

Governor Cleveland Assaulted.

ALBANY, October 20.—Governor Cleveland was assaulted in front of the Medical College this morning by Samuel Boone, of Chemung County, who was ejected from the Executive Chamber last week for creating a disturbance while seeking a pardon. Boone struck the Governor with his right hand. The blow was warded off and the men repeated the blows several times without hitting the Governor's face. He then darted toward a pile of cobble-stones, but was intercepted by Dr. George H. Houghton before he obtained a missile. Boone returned to the attack on the Governor, when Houghton seized and held him and the Governor deliberately resumed his walk. Boone was released and went quietly to his boarding house on Lancaster street, where he was arrested shortly afterward. Boone has been seeking a pardon for his brother-in-law, Byron B. Fairbanks, sentenced to two years at Auburn for shooting into a crowd assembled near his house on Halloween and seriously wounding a boy. Boone and wife called on the Governor at Elmira during his recent visit to the State Fair and asked for the pardon of Fairbanks. The Governor said he would look it over when he returned to Albany. He mentioned the matter to District Attorney Stanchfield, who expressed himself as strongly opposed to granting the application, as he did not think there were any grounds of clemency.

CARTHAGE IN RUINS.

All the Industries and Two Hundred Dwellings Burned—Loss, $1,000,000.

WATERTOWN, N. Y., October 20.—A destructive conflagration visited Carthage to-day. The fire commenced at one end of a quarter of a mile of manufacturing institutions which were consumed. The flames then jumped the river. The fire spread so rapidly that the firemen could not keep up with it. It is estimated that two hundred houses were destroyed, and that the loss will reach $1,000,000. There are not sufficient dwellings left in town to shelter the inhabitants. Carthage was extensively engaged in manufacturing, and all its industries are in ruins.

Explosion in a Bank Vault.

ELMIRA, N. Y., October 20.—An explosion occurred this morning at the Chemung Canal Bank, creating great excitement. The gas had evidently been turned on in the vault since Saturday night, and smothered itself out. John Arnot, Cashier of the bank, attempted to enter the vault carrying a lighted candle. There was an explosion, which threw him across the room against the counter, burning his face and hands. Every window in the bank was blown out, the office door shattered and the lock torn off. A great crowd was attracted by the explosion. Arnot's injuries, while painful, are not serious.

Hanged Himself Accidentally.

CHICAGO, October 20.—Yesterday Charles Riley, thirteen years of age, was discovered hanging from a beam in the coal shed in the rear of his home, 514 West Indiana street. He was dead. He and several other boys were playing in the shed, doing circus acts. Young Riley's neck got caught in a rope in a manner from which he could not extricate himself. His companions in play, not knowing how to assist him, became frightened and ran away.

Fatal Result of a Family Spree.

QUEBEC, October 20.—A family named Parent, consisting of the husband, wife and son, got drunk last night, and it is supposed in their maneuvers knocked over a lamp, which set fire to Mrs. Parent's clothing. The police were attracted to the house by the cries for assistance, and found the woman lying in the back yard, her entire clothing on fire. She was conveyed to the hospital, but died shortly afterwards.

A Child's Terrible Use of Powder.

QUEBEC, October 20.—A farmer at St. Jacobin left four children in the house while he went to the field this morning. The eldest, aged eleven, placed a flask of powder on the stove, and a quantity inside. The stove was blown to fragments, and the house set on fire. Three children were rescued dying. The fourth may recover.

Ansonia (Conn.) Flooded.

NEW HAVEN, CONN., October 20.—By the breaking of a dam to-night the streets of Ansonia were flooded, and all movable articles were swept into the Naugatuck River. At one time the water was four feet deep on the main street. No life was lost. The mills will have to shut down.

—A leading woman of fashion is represented as announcing that she has taken a census of one summer resort, and can count sixty girls who will never marry. The cause of this destined celibacy is explained to be that "they are brought up to spend money, and must marry it or remain single. But the men of their own set will not marry except for some great advantage, and they know to a dot that the sixty girls I have counted will not only be poor themselves, but will have poor sisters." —Boston Globe.

—The Workingwomen's Protective Union of New York, it is said, has spent in its twenty years' existence $65,000 to conduct 7,000 prosecutions for frauds upon working girls. In this way $25,000 of wages have been collected that never would have been paid otherwise. These expenses are borne by the voluntary donations of those who approve of helping women who help themselves in a hard fight for life and against the temptations which beset them.—N. Y. Times.

—A lady recently purchased from a large Japanese establishment in New York $10,000 worth of rare articles and rich ornaments in one day.

THE COMMONWEALTH.

Louisville Leaf Tobacco Market.

The market has been strong for dark and heavy tobaccos, especially for Green River fillers, which have formed the principal test. Stripping styles have been scarce and firm. Low grades of Burley tobacco have been rather soft, and mediums have been quiet at the previous decline, while the latter grades have been relatively firm. On the whole there has been no snap in the market, but, except for low-grade Burleys, prices have been generally supported. We quote the full-weight packages new-crop sound tobacco as follows:

	Dark and Heavy.	Burley.

A FATAL accident happened at Henderson, the other morning. Frank Russell, of Evansville, Ind., while engaged in hoisting some material lost his balance and fell to the ground, a distance of about seventy feet. His fellow-workmen who saw the accident rushed to his assistance, but when picked up life was extinct.

MRS. GEORGE A. MADISON was brutally murdered in the kitchen of the house in which she and her husband and adopted child lived, in Covington, the other morning, and her husband was arrested for the crime and is held for examination.

W. A. MOORE, ESQ., is dead. He was a prominent and wealthy citizen of Woodford County, was President of the Deposit Bank of Midway, and was extensively known in the State.

A DISASTROUS fire occurred at Carrollton, the other day. Some eight or ten buildings were destroyed.

A GOOD portion of the town of Lawrenceburg was destroyed by fire a few days ago.

It is stated that 300 tobacco barns have been erected in Clark County within the past four years.

THE "Kansas fever" has struck the people of Boyle County.

JAMES SHEAREN and Ben McGinniss, on trial at Perksville for killing George Rowsey, were acquitted by the examining Court at the conclusion of the testimony for the prosecution, the defense introducing no witnesses. There was no evidence whatever implicating the accused men.

A VERY narrow escape from death occurred at Butler, the other morning. Mr. F. T. Taylor, while driving a drove of cattle, was attacked by a vicious animal and thrown down an embankment about twenty-five feet high, breaking his arm, and he is thought to be injured internally.

THE end of the base-ball season finds the Louisvilles occupying third place. They failed to get the pennant, but it is consoling to know that the boys quit ahead of the Cincinnati team.

MAJOR JOHN WAKEFIELD a prominent business man of Bowling Green, died the other morning of a congestive chill. Up to the day before his death he was in fair health, and his sudden death was a surprise and a shock to his many friends. He was in his seventieth year.

AN interesting suit that promised many knotty points to be settled by the Courts was filed in Chancery, at Louisville, the other day by Mettie E. Wood, alias Mattie E. Sheid, a white woman, against William A. Sheid, a negro. Her petition alleges that on the 16th of September, 1880, she and the defendant, Sheid, were duly married on a license obtained of the Clerk of the Jefferson County Court, and that Rev. Caldwell (colored) performed the ceremony, to which there were several witnesses. It further appears that under chapter 52, section 19, of the General Statutes of Kentucky, the following passage occurs: "Marriage is prohibited between a white person and a negro in this Commonwealth." In consequence of this the solemnity of the clergy's sermon does not make the contract legal, and as there are doubts on her part as to the constitutionality of the clause cited, the suit is filed to ascertain whether or not her marriage to said defendant is valid, and if so, for all proper relief pertaining thereto. The belief has been expressed by some of the learned limbs of the law that under one of the amendments to the constitution the marriage can and must be recognized as legal in every respect. It is the first of the kind ever instituted there.

THE other morning about breakfast hour Miss Margaret Hamilton, who was the guest of Miss Isa White, of Mt. Sterling, excused herself, saying she did not wish to eat, and that a gentleman was at the door waiting for her. Nothing was thought of her going with Mr. Hoyt Goodpestner until in the afternoon, when a courier came with the intelligence that they were married about 12 o'clock in Bath County. Miss Hamilton is the daughter of the renowned short-horn breeder, George Hamilton, of Flat Creek, and was one of the belles in society.

GEORGE ROWSEY, while hauling lumber a few days ago, was shot in the wagon and instantly killed near Parksville. James Shruen, Rowsey's brother-in-law, is suspected of the crime. Rowsey killed Shruen's son last February. In July, 1882, Rowsey's father killed Shruen's half brother, out of which the after killings grew. They are nearly related by blood, and their families have contributed much to Kentucky's criminal history in the past thirty years. Jasper Rowsey was hanged by a mob at Stanford, and his brother Smith killed by the militia while defying arrest. Cain and Archis Rowsey were killed in brawls, and the other members of the family were engaged in bloody encounters.

WHILE Mrs Amelia Mendel, aged eighty-seven, of Louisville, was descending a flight of stairs to attend a meal she suddenly plunged forward and fell with terrific force, striking the steps in rapid succession. She was picked up unconscious, and her right arm was broken. Concussion of the brain produced death some hours later.

THE Board of Trustees of Midway, have passed an ordinance providing for the punishment of those who loaf about the town and have no visible means of support.

CLAY BEAN, aged seventeen, and Miss Lillie Strew, aged fifteen, of Benton, Calloway County, eloped to Tennessee the other day and were married.

A CATFISH weighing forty pounds has been caught in Barren River near Bowling Green.

HON. W. F. PECK, of Bedford, is a candidate for the State Senate in the Trimble District.

THERE is another row among the managers of the Eastern Lunatic Asylum over some trival question of authority.

DANIEL STEWART, of Pike County, has just celebrated his one hundred and third birthday. His wife is ninety-three. They have been married seventy years.

MATTHIAS DOOLEY, clerk in a grocery a Louisville, while working in a warehouse at the rear of the store the other afternoon, made a misstep, and was hurled through a hatchway a distance of twenty-four feet, and, striking a brick pavement, broke his back and an arm. He is internally hurt, and will die from his injuries.

THE DAIRY.

—It is not always necessary to taste butter in order to judge it. The smooth, unctuous feel in rubbing a little between the finger and thumb expresses at once its rich quality.

—Glazed earthenware milk pans, holding about six quarts, and with a half-inch rim projecting around the top, are used with satisfaction in some of the dairy districts of Ohio.

—There is so great difference in the feed of cows in various milk tests that the result is quite often as much a test of the different kinds of feed and the skill of the feeder as of the capacity of the cow. If all milk and butter tests were made on grass as feed, their value to most cow buyers would be greater. —Western Rural.

—Bitter milk is a matter of frequent occurrence every fall and winter, or soon after the cows are off grazing. It is caused first by bitter herbs in the hay, such as Mayweed, Johnsworth, etc., and also by the use of too much over-ripe food such as straw, corn stover, or late cut hay. It never occurs when cows are fed on good food, and thriving, or even holding their own, and are kept comfortably warm.

—Prof. L. B. Arnold says a dairy farm costs ten per cent. less to operate than grain growing or mixed agriculture; second, the mean returns average a little more than other branches; third, prices are nearer uniform and more reliable; fourth, dairying exhausts the soil less; fifth, it is more secure against changes in the season, since the dairyman does not suffer so much from the wet and frost and varying seasons, and he can, if prudent, provide against drought.

—The public taste is changing so rapidly towards newly-made butter that many farmers who make butter in summer to sell in the fall or winter, we think would do better to lime their dairy products so as to make less in summer and more at other seasons of the year when prices are higher. Many are learning that they can make milk or butter about as cheaply in winter as in summer. It is not an easy matter to make butter in hot weather that will keep in any kind of a tub till cold weather, and then be fully equal to the best fresh-made sold at a week old.—New England Farmer.

The Private Dairy.

If the making of butter was simply a matter of setting the milk, collecting the cream and using the churn, there would be no difficulty in making good butter on every farm, but the truth is the making of butter depends upon the temperature, manner of setting the milk, food of the cow, her health, her character as a producer, quality of the milk and mode of churning. It is the many qualifications necessary that makes the matter so important. In a paper read before the Iowa Butter and Cheese Association this matter was very freely discussed, and the matter of cleanliness was considered the first desideratum in the private dairy. In relation to setting the milk, there are two methods—the deep and the shallow. With both there is the rapid and the slow cooling—cream rises principally while the temperature of the milk is falling, and but slowly while it remains at a fixed temperature. Rapid cooling will rise the cream in the shortest time, but slow cooling gives a denser cream, containing less cheesey matter. Quick cooling gives a thinner, frothy cream, full of cheesey matter, requiring a greater bulk to make a pound of butter than that obtained by the slower method, while the product will be inferior in quality. Usually shallow setting and slow cooling and deep setting and rapid cooling go together. When the same temperature, deep setting will require a longer time to obtain all the cream than shallow, and one strong claim for shallow setting is that in order to the development of the genuine butter flavor the cream must be exposed to the atmosphere for oxygenation. Without such exposure, butter made from it is flat and insipid. With shallow setting, fine flavored butter can be make from perfectly sweet cream, while cream from deep setting must be exposed till it sours before churning and will still lack the fine flavor of that from shallow setting, where the cream absorbed oxygen from the atmosphere during the whole time it was rising.

A lower temperature than fifty degrees would injure the keeping quality of the butter if it did not hurt the flavor, though some good butter makers run the temperature much lower. It is a fallacy to think all the cream can not be obtained except at low temperatures, and to make the finest flavored and longest keeping butter the cream must undergo a ripening process by exposure to the oxygen of the air while it is sweet. This is best done while it is rising. The ripening is very tardy when the temperature is low. After cream becomes sour the more ripening the more it depreciates. The sooner then skimmed and churned the better; but it should not be skimmed and churned too new. The best time for skimming and churning is just before acidity becomes apparent. Cream makes better butter to rise in cold air than to rise in cold water, but will rise sooner in cold water, and the milk will keep sweet longer. The deeper milk is set the less air the cream gets in rising. The depth of setting should vary with the temperature. The lower it is the deeper milk may be set. The higher the shallower it should be. Milk should never be set shallow in a low temperature nor deep in a high one. While milk is setting for cream to rise, the purity of the cream and quality of the butter will be injured if the surface of the cream is exposed freely to air much warmer than the cream. When cream is colder than the surrounding air, it takes up moisture and impurities from the air. When the air is colder than the cream, it takes up moisture and whatever escapes from the cream. In one case the cream purifies the air; in the other the air helps to purify the cream.

Washing the butter in the granular form is a great improvement over other methods. By washing in the churn before the butter is gathered, nearly all working is obviated. Water should be poured into the churn, agitated and drawn off until the water is clear, after which the butter can be salted, pressed together and packed for market. Much working, and especially a second working, is injurious, destroying, as it does, the natural grain of the butter, giving it a greasy, salvy consistency. The aim in packing is to exclude air and light. Covering with brine is the only sure method of excluding air. Store in a sweet, cool place, where an even temperature can be maintained somewhat below eighty degrees.—Farm, Field and Fireside.

Running Rat River Falls

Well, when old Sawlogs first located in Oshkosh, he took a job getting out some logs up on the headwaters of Rat River, and rafting them down to Wolf River. He got some boys around Oshkosh, who were familiar with Rat River, to go and help them, and they tramped from Oshkosh up through the woods to the timber. Rat River is a little stream about thirty feet wide, that runs through the woods and marshes, and has hardly current enough to float a feather down stream, except in the spring, when the snow melts, and then it runs about three miles an hour, but it is as quiet and modest a stream as ever was, without a riffle on it. While the boys were getting out the timber and rafting it they kept talking about the Falls, and wondering if any of the party would be drowned running the raft over, until Sawlogs became interested, and the boys told him Rat River Falls were the most dangerous falls on any of the logging streams of the State, except the Dells of the Wisconsin, and it stood a man in hand to make his peace with his Maker before the raft struck the rushing, foaming water, as the raft was liable to go twenty feet under water, and then take a shoot up into the tree tops. Sawlogs became much interested, and his jollyways forsook him. The last night before the raft started the boys would not play cards, as was their usual custom, but seemed serious, and two of them hunted testaments out of their camp outfit, and read passages from them, until Sawlogs got nervous and went out into the woods and thought over his past life, and wished the danger was past. If he then had any ambitions to a United States Senatorship in the future, that sleepless night of agony, thinking of the perils of the morrow in running the falls, knocked the ambition out of him. He arose in the morning pale and nervous, and when the raft was turned loose and the start was made, he acted as though he would give all he expected to be worth if he had not taken the job. He could have returned to Oshkosh by land, and let the boys run the raft, but he would not flinch from any danger. Though new to logging and rafting he was willing to learn, and he wanted to stand by and do all that any honorable man could do, but he told the boys that he would be thankful for any suggestions they would make as to safety in running the Falls. He said life was perhaps as dear to him as anybody, and while he was always prepared for anything that might happen, and hoped he had led such a life as to be ready at any time to meet the Great Judge, and he was not a coward, he felt that it was the duty of any man to take all the precautions that were possible to save life. The boys had all they could do to keep from laughing, but they kept straight faces, and told him that the only thing to do was to lash themselves to the raft before entering the falls, and trust in Providence. If the raft was destroyed and they were lost, their friends could find a body easier if it was lashed to a saw log than they could by dragging for it in fifty feet of rushing water. They said they would tell him long enough before reaching the falls so he could get himself fixed, and he thanked them, and looked up at the blue sky as though it might be his last look at it. About four o'clock that afternoon, as the raft was nearing the mouth, where the Rat River empties into the Wolf, the boys put a little flour on their faces, to make them look pale, and began to prepare to run the falls. Each had some request to make of the others, in case he should be lost, such as giving some trinket, a pipe, or something, to some friend, and messages were given to be delivered to friends in Oshkosh. It was a trying time, and when the raft pilot said they were only a half a mile from the falls, and that it was time to lash themselves to the raft, Sawlogs felt as though it was the last act of his life. The boys helped him to lash himself to a log, told him to stay there, whatever happened, and then they retired to the rear of the raft to lash themselves, they said, but really to have a good laugh. All was still for half an hour, and the raft moved along like a snail, but every minute the man who was lashed to a log, felt that the next moment the falls would be reached. But the Falls were never reached, because there were none. Half an hour more passed, when the man began to look around from his position, flat on the log. He was looking for the falls. Then he looked at the boys, who were jumping up and laughing, and then it dawned upon him that he had been sold. One of the boys came along to unlash him, and he asked what all this meant, and he was told that the falls had been passed in safety, and not a man had been lost. He was untied, and probably a madder man never lived. He began to talk sassy, but the boys told him he must have fallen asleep and passed the falls in that condition, but he knew better. Well, the boys made it all right with the old man, who was a boy then, and he did not kill any of them, but it was a long time before he could think of Rat River without pain. Since then he has got rich, and the boys who played it on him are now some of the most successful on the Wolf," and the story teller knocked the ashes out of his pipe and prepared to turn in, while the rest prepared to explore Rat River for ducks the next day, and perhaps go over the very falls where Sawlogs was lashed to raft.—Peck's Sun.

Lime Kiln Club Meteorology.

The Committee on Meteorology reported that Prof. Y. J. Clark's predictions for the remainder of the year had been received in good shape, and they were sent to the Secretary's desk to be read:

October—If this month don't pan out thirty-one days tax-payers ought to kick for their rights. Frosts can be looked for any time after the 10th. Flies will begin to lie abed longer in the morning, and the man who sold you a patent churn in the spring will drop in just as you begin to feel sanguine he is dead. Straw hats will hang on, but in a sheepish sort of way.

November—First blood for fall. Man who leaves the door open will have his attention attracted to the fact that the saw-mill is two squares further up the street. Good time to hunt up sore-throat remedies and decide whether to buy an overcoat or move South. Begin to see what an idiot you were to wish for winter.

December—Considerable weather during this month. Man who wrote "Beautiful Snow" will show up by the 20th. Sun umbrellas and bare-armed women retire for the season. Winds might be colder, but are doing fairly well for December. The second-hand cutter offered you in July for $3.75 is now marked $14. Any boys in your neighborhood who ought to be in Heaven should be coaxed into trying the ice on the river.—Detroit Free Press.

SCIENCE AND INDUSTRY.

—It is computed that the Mississippi River carries every year to the Gulf of Mexico 500,000,000,000 tons of sediment.

The colors include black, white, red, green, yellow and brown, and can hardly be distinguished from moss agate or onyx.—Chicago Journal.

—Georgia is not through yet with her wonders. A gentleman of Gainesville, a young man still in his teens, comes to the front with an invention for which, it is said, he refused $12,000. It is a money-drawer so ingeniously arranged that by the simple pulling of a spring any piece of money, from a nickel to a dollar, can be secured at once, and also any amount of change one might wish. If desired to get change for any bill, in any possible way, embracing any number of coins of different denominations, it can be obtained in a second of time, and there is not a need of glancing at it to see if correct, for it can't be wrong. He has just established a factory at Cincinnati for the manufacture of these drawers.—Chicago Times.

—"The greater my experience becomes," writes Dr. Clouston, in the annual report of the Royal Edinburgh Asylum for the Insane, "I tend more to substitute milk for stimulants. In very acute cases, both of depression and maniacal exaltations, where the disordered working of the brain tends rapidly to exhaust the strength, I rely more and more on milk and eggs made into liquid custards. One such case this year got eight pints of milk and sixteen eggs daily for three months, and recovered under this treatment. I question if he would have done so under any other. He was almost dead on admission, acutely delirious, absolutely sleepless and very nearly pulseless. The cup of tea, so much in demand by many women when tired, should be exchanged for milk, eggs and rest.

$65,000 WORTH OF THE FOLLOWING GOODS NOW IN OUR MAMMOTH HOUSE. $65,000

Bought at Rock Bottom Prices, and will be sold at a Small Profit to insure our Big Fall Sales.

The following goods are kept in the Boot and Shoe, Ready-made Clothing, Millinery & Cloak Departments. The style of this firm is as formerly, Wm. Colter. We have what you want in our Ready-made Clothing, Department.

And in many lines of Goods you will find they will be sold far below the regular price, as they are bargains that have been bought at Snaps during the dull Summer months, and we want to say to all our old customers and friends that we think we can give you better satisfaction this Fall than we have ever done before, from the fact that we are now associated in the Dry Good's Department with Messrs. Ira Powell and Wm. Ownby, making this Department a firm by itself, for the Sale of Dry Goods, Notions, Carpets, &c., under the style of COLTER, POWELL & OWNBY, and the Ready-made Clothing, Boots and Shoes, Millinery and Cloak Departments the same as formerly, WM. COLTER. Many of our friends ask us why we have associated with partners in the Dry Goods department. In answer to this would say, anyone aware of the amount of attention a stock like this requires, saying nothing about seeing that customer have proper attention from the clerks; that our goods are kept properly, and many other reasons, wouldn't wonder if we were to have partners in all departments. It is one man's work to buy the goods right for a house like this, without giving attention to the other matters mentioned above. Of course we could do like the Old Fogy merchant, stay at home and wait for samples to be brought to him, and give them their price. But we don't do business that way. We are always awake in the cash market, and buy goods at our own price, and not a drummers' price.

The following goods are kept in the Dry Goods, Notion, and Carpet Departments, the style of this firm is Colter, Powell & Ownby. We have what you want and have Rock bottom prices on all Dry Goods, Notions, Blanket, &c.

That institution is now providing for 580 patients which taxes it to its full capacity, but when the addition now under way is completed it will furnish room for as many more.

FOR the last twenty years at the October election preceding the Presidential election before the one now on, Ohio has come up with a Republican majority that has averaged over 20,000, so we don't see where the Republicans have achieved a great victory by holding that State in line by 11,000 majority.

As yet the Chairman of the Democratic Executive Committee of this Senatorial district, has not called a meeting of that committee to take in to consideration the propriety of having a primary election on the day of the Presidential election, to nominate a candidate for State Senator. So far as we have been able to ascertain the desire of the people of this county, it is that Gallatin county make the nomination as between Captain McDanell and Judge Brown, either of which gentlemen is eminently qualified to discharge the duties of the office he is seeking, and Boone cares not which gets the nomination, and which is equivalent to an election. Let Gallatin make the nomination. We are satisfied that neither of the gentlemen want it without the endorsement of his county.

THE Congressional fight in the Second District has been settled by the nomination of Hon. Polk Laffoon, by a majority of about 250. The district is composed of eight counties. At a convention held sometime since the strength was equally divided between Laffoon and Hon. Jas. Clay, present incumbent, and after taking two hundred ballots without a nomination, the committee decided to hold a primary, which was done with the above result.

The last grand jury was not infatuated with the jail, but took no steps because the committee appointed by the County Court and which has the jail "under advisement," has not had an opportunity to make a report. If something is not done with that building before the meeting of another grand jury, it doubtless will be a subject for the consideration of that body next April.

The Constance delegation were before Esquire Oscar Gaines and a jury last Wednesday, one of the number being defending a warrant sworn out under the "Provoke Act." County Attorney Tolin being engaged in the Grant-Gaines slander suit, the interest of the Commonwealth was ably looked after by H. C. White, of Williamstown, as special prosecutor. The defendant, Charles Castinetta, was found guilty and fined $8. These Constance troubles generally present some dramatic features that are enjoyable to the spectators in the court-room.

The ball at this place last Friday night was well attended by the belles and beaux, many of whom came from quite a distance. It was an occasion second to none heretofore enjoyed in the Morgan Academy Hall, and the excellent music furnished by the celebrated Bross band, made "tripping the light fantastic such a pleasure that the hours glided by unheeded, and the approaching dawn warned the participants to disperse before they scarcely realized that midnight had come and gone. Good order prevailed and nothing occurred to detract from the pleasures of the occasion in the least.

CLORE-HUEY.

The marriage of Miss Belle Huey, daughter of J. S. Huey, and Mr. Robt. Clore, of Bellevue, attended by Miss Rogers and Mr. Will Brown, took place at the Baptist church at Bellevue, on the evening of the 15th inst., at 6 o'clock. The ceremony was performed by Rev. J. A. Kirtley in the presence of a large concourse of relatives and friends, after which the bride and groom accompanied by their immediate friends and relatives, some sixty in number, repaired to the residence of the brides' parents, where an elegant supper was prepared for the occasion. The next day the bride and groom with their numerous friends and relatives were entertained by Mr. and Mrs. Clore, parents of the groom. The bridal presents were numerous, elegant and useful. The following are some of the presents received: Chamber set and pickle castor, Mrs. J. S. Huey; Silver tablespoons, Mr. J. S. Huey; Lamp, Mr. Huey; Silver butter knife and work basket; Misses Mary and Viola Huey; Silver cream pitcher, Bob Huey; Twenty dollar gold piece, bride's grand-mother; Handsome bed room set, groom; Silver water set Mrs. M. Clore; Silver butter dish, Mrs. Conner; Lamp, Mrs. Thos. Clore; Silver pickle castor, Mrs. S. P. Brady; Silver butter dish, J. Frank Grant; White slippers, John Q. Davis; Gloves set, Mrs. J. Frank Grant. The happy couple have the best wishes of the RECORDER for their future prosperity.

All last week did the Court toil with the Grant-Gaines slander suit. The evidence was concluded late Friday afternoon after which the jury was adjourned until Saturday morning. The instructions were prepared in the interim, and shortly after the jury was seated in the box Saturday morning, the arguments commenced, and the jury was the prey of a legal cyclone until supper time that evening. In the arguments, clients, witnesses and attorneys alike came in for ridicule, and very uncalled for demonstrations followed the closing of some of the speeches, but probably those indulging therein did not recognize the impropriety of applause in a Court-room during the progress of the argument of a case. As the trial progressed the interest in the proceedings increased and on Saturday the Court-room was filled throughout the day, there being quite a large number of ladies present. The jury retired to its room after supper, and quite a crowd lingered about the Court-house and patiently awaited the return of a verdict, but hour after hour passed and no tidings came. About ten o'clock a deputy Sheriff was sent to see what progress they were making. The information obtained satisfied those to whom it was communicated that no verdict would be made, but the Judge concluded to keep the jury a while longer, the term of Court expiring at midnight. By this time men were stretched out and asleep in the Court-room, but the heavy tread of the jury at 11:30 aroused them. The jury filed into the bar, looking weary, worn and determined, and reported that they had agreed to disagree. The Court being satisfied that they could not make a verdict discharged them and continued the cause. Everybody, and especially the officers of the Court were in hopes that a verdict would be made.

A THEOSOPHIC MARRIAGE.

She was a theosophic miss
Who sighed for sweet Nirvana;
She talked of esoteric this
And that, in mystic manner
She wore a wide and psychic smile,
Used diction transcendental.
Two suitors her besieged meanwhile—
Both softly sentimental.

The one, he was a drummer bland,
Who wore a lofty collar;
He knew not things were hollow, and
He chased the nimble dollar.
The other was a soulful youth,
Who talked of things symbolic;
Enamored quite of inner truth—
And predisposed to colic.

The one, he talked of common love,
In tones that made her shudder;
The other soared with her above
To misty realms of Buddha.
She sent the first upon his way
With snub unmitigated—
Upon the other smiled, and they
By Hymen were translated.

FOUR YEARS LATER.

Within a lofty Harlem flat
She found her sweet Nirvana;
She does not think of this and that
As marshy zephyrs fan her;
She dreamily wipes Buddha's nose
And spanketh Zoroaster,
And mends their transcendental clothes,
Torn by occult disaster.

Her adept husband still can solve
The mysteries eternal,
But for some reason can't evolve
A salary diurnal.
He still floats on bicycles new,
But fills his astral body
With—not the Cheelah's milky brew—
But Jersey apple toddy.

She eloquently mourns her life
And objurgates her fate,
To daily see the drummer's wife
Drive by her clad in satin.
She has been heard, in fact, to say,
When somewhat discontented:
"Though 'osophies' hold social sway,
Though 'ologies' enjoy their day,
I think, in love, the good old way
By far the best invented."
—Henry J. W. Dam, in Century.

A GATHERER OF SIMPLES.

A damp air was blowing up, and the frogs were beginning to peep. The sun was setting in a low red sky. On both sides of the road were rich green meadows intersected by little canal-like brooks. Beyond the meadows on the west was a distant stretch of pine woods, that showed dark against the clear sky. Aurelia Flower was going along the road toward her home, with a great sheaf of leaves and flowers in her arms. There were the rosy spikes of hardhack; the great white corymbs of thoroughwort, and the long blue racemes of lobelia. Then there were great bunches of the odorous tansy and pennyroyal in with the rest.

Aurelia was a tall, strongly-built woman; she was not much over thirty, but she looked older. Her complexion had a hard red tinge from exposure to sun and wind, and showed seams as unreservedly as granite. Her face was thin, and her cheek-bones high. She had a profusion of auburn hair, showing in a loose slipping coil beneath her limp black straw hat. Her dress, as a matter of fashion, was execrable: in point of harmony with her surroundings, very well, though she had not thought of it in that way. There was a green underskirt and a brown overskirt and a basque of an obsolete cut. She had worn it for a good many years just so, and never thought of altering it. It did not seem to occur to her that though her name was Flower, she was not really a flower in regard to apparel and had not its right of unchangeableness in the spring. When the trees hung out their catkins, she flaunted her poor greens and browns under them, rejoicing, and never dreamed but what they looked all right. As far as dress went, Aurelia was a happy woman. She went along the road to-night at a good pace, her armful of leaves and blossoms nodding; her spare muscular limbs bore her along easily. She had been over a good many miles since noon, but she never thought of being tired.

Presently she came in sight of her home, a square unpainted building, black with age. It stood back a little from the road on a gentle slope. There were three great maple-trees in front of the house; their branches rustled against the roof. On the left was a small garden; some tall poles thickly twined with hops were prominent in it.

Aurelia went round to the side door of the house with her armful of green things. The door opened directly into the great kitchen. One on entering would have started back as one would on seeing unexpected company in a room. The walls were as green as a lady's bower with bunches and festoons of all sorts of New England herbs. There they hung, their blossoms turning gray and black, giving out strange half-pleasant, half-disgusting odors. Aurela took them in like her native air. "It's good to get home." murmured she to herself, for there was no one else; she lived alone.

She took off her hat and disposed of her burden; then she got herself some supper. She did not build a fire in the cooking-stove, for she never drank tea in warm weather. Instead, she had a tumbler of root-beer which she had made herself. She set it out on one end of her kitchen table with a slice of coarse bread and a saucer of cold beans. She sat down to it and ate with a good appetite. She looked better with her hat off. Her forehead was an important part of her face: it was white and womanly, and reddish hair lay round it in pretty curves; then her brown eyes, under very strongly arched brows, showed to better advantage. Taken by herself, and not compared with other women, Aurelia was not so bad-looking; but she never was taken by herself in that way, and nobody had ever given her any credit for comeliness. It would have been like looking at a jack-in-the-pulpit and losing all the impression that had ever been made on one by roses and hyacinths, and seeing absolutely nothing else but that one flower's fine green and brown lines: it is doubtful if it could be done.

She had finished her supper, and was sorting her fresh herbs, when the door opened and a woman walked in. She had no bonnet on her head; she was a neighbor, and this was an unceremonious little country place.

"Good-evenin', 'Relia," said she. There was an important look on her plain face, as if there was more to follow.

"Good-evenin', Mis' Atwood. Take a chair."

"Been herbin' again?"

"Yes; I went out a little while this afternoon."

"Where'd you go?—up on Green Mountain?"

"No; I went over to White's Woods. There were some kinds there I wanted."

"You don't say so! That's a matter of six miles, ain't it? Ain't you tired?"

"Lor', no," said Aurelia. "I reckon I'm pretty strong, or mebbe the smell of the herbs keeps me up;" and she laughed.

So did the other. "Sure enough—well, mebbe it does. I never thought of that. But it seems like a pretty long tramp to me, though my being so fleshy may make a difference. I could have walked it easier once."

"I shouldn't wonder if it did make a difference. I ain't got much flesh to carry round to tire me out."

"You're always pretty well, too, ain't you, 'Relia?"

"Lor', yes; I never knew what 'twas to be sick. How's your folks, Mis' Atwood? Is Viny any better than she was?"

"I don't know as she is, much. She feels pretty poorly most of the time. I guess I'll hev you fix some more of that root-beer for her. I thought that seemed to 'liven her up a little."

"I've got a jug of it all made, down cellar, and you can take it when you go home, if you want to."

"So I will, if you've got it. I was in hopes you might hev it."

The important look had not vanished from Mrs. Atwood's face, but she was not the woman to tell important news in a hurry, and have the gusto of it so soon over. She was one of the natures who always dispose of bread before pie. Now she came to it, however.

"I heard some news to-night, 'Relia," said she.

Aurelia picked out another spray of hardhack. "What was it?"

"Thomas Rankin's dead."

Aurelia clutched the hardhack mechanically. "You don't mean it, Mis' Atwood! When did he die? I hadn't heard he was sick."

"He wasn't, long. Had a kind of a fit this noon, and died right off. The doctor—they sent for Dr. Smith from Alden—called it sunstroke. You know 'twas awful hot, and he'd been out in the field to work all the mornin'. I think 'twas heart trouble; it's in the Rankin family; his father died of it. Doctors don't know everything."

"Well, it's a dreadful thing," said Aurelia. "I can't realize it. There he's left four little children, and it ain't more'n a year since Mis' Rankin died. It ain't a year, is it?"

"It ain't a year into a month and sixteen days," said Mrs. Atwood, solemnly. "Viny and I was countin' of it up just before I come in here."

"Well, I guess 'tisn't, come to think of it. I couldn't have told exactly. The oldest of those children ain't more than eight, is she?"

"Ethelind is eight, coming next month; Viny and I was reckonin' it up. Then Edith is six, and Isadore is five, and Myrtie ain't but two, poor little thing."

"What do you s'pose will be done with 'em?"

"I don't know. Viny an' me was talking of it over, and got it settled that her sister, Mis' Loomis, over to Alden, would hev to hev 'em. It'll be considerable for her, too, for she's got two of her own, and I don't s'pose Sam Loomis has got much. But I don't see what else can be done. Of course strangers ain't goin' to take children when there is folks."

"Wouldn't his mother take 'em?"

"What, old lady Sears? Lor', no. You know she was dreadful put out 'bout Thomas marryin' where he did, and declared he shouldn't hev a cent of her money. It was all her second husband's, anyway. John Rankin wasn't worth anything. She won't do anything for 'em. She's livin' in great style down near the city, they say. Got a nice house and keeps help. She might have 'em just as well as not, but she won't. She's a hard woman to get along with, anyhow. She nagged both her husbands to death, an' Thomas never had no peace at home. Guess that was one reason why he was in such a hurry to get married. Mis' Rankin was a good-tempered soul, if she wasn't quite so drivin' as some."

"I do feel dreadfully to think of those children," said Aurelia.

"'Tis hard; but we must try an' believe it was ruled for the best. I 'spose I must go, for I left Viny all alone."

"Well, if you must. I'll get that root-beer for you, Mis' Atwood. I shall keep thinking 'bout those children all night."

A week or two after that Mrs. Atwood had some more news; but she didn't go to Aurelia with it, for Aurelia was the very sub essence of it herself. She unfolded it gingerly to her daughter Lavinia—a pale, peaked young woman, who looked as if it would take more than Aurelia's root-beer to make her robust. Aurelia had taken the youngest Rankin child for her own, and Mrs. Atwood had just heard of it. "It's true," said she; "I see her with it myself. Old lady Sears never so much as sent a letter, let alone not coming to the funeral, and Mis' Loomis was glad enough to get rid of it."

Viny drank in the story as if it had been so much nourishing jelly. Her too narrow life was killing her as much as anything else.

Meanwhile Aurelia had the child, and was actively happy, for the first time in her life, to her own naive astonishment, for she had never known that she was not so before. She had naturally strong affections, of an outward rather than an inward tendency. She was capable of much enjoyment from pure living, but she had never had anything to be so very fond of. She could only remember her father as a gloomy, hard-working man, who never noticed her much. He had a melancholy temperament, which resulted in a tragical end when Aurelia was a mere child. When she thought of him, the same horror which she had when they brought him home from the river crept over her now. They had never known certainly just how Martin Flower had come to die; but folks never spoke of him to Aurelia and her mother, and the two never talked of him together. They knew that everybody said Martin Flower had drowned myself; they felt shame and a Puritan shrinking from the sin.

Aurelia's mother had been a hard, silent woman before; she grew more hard and silent afterward. She worked hard, and taught Aurelia to. Their work was peculiar; they hardly knew themselves how they happened to drift into it: it had seemed to creep in with other work, till finally it usurped it altogether. At first, after her husband's death, Mrs. Flower had tried millinery: she had learned the trade in her youth. But she made no headway in sewing rose-buds and dainty bows onto bonnets; it did not suit with tragedy. The bonnets seemed infected with her own mood; the bows lay flat with stern resolve, and the rose-buds stood up fiercely; she did not please her customers, even among those uncritical country folk, and they dropped off. She had always made root-beer, and had quite a reputation in the neighborhood for it. How it happened she could not tell, but she found herself selling it; then she made hop yeast, and sold that. Then she was a woman of a fertile brain, and another project suggested itself to her.

She and Aurelia ransacked the woods thereabouts for medical herbs, and disposed of them to druggists in a neighboring town. They had a garden of some sorts too—the different mints, thyme, lavender, coriander, rosemary, and others. It was an unusual business for two women to engage in, but it increased, and they prospered, according to their small ideas. But Mrs. Flower grew more and more bitter with success. What regrets and longing that her husband could have lived and shared it, and been spared his final agony, she had in her heart, nobody but the woman herself knew; she never spoke of them. She died when Aurelia was twenty, and a woman far beyond her years. She moured for her mother, but although she never knew it, her warmest love had not been called out. It had been hardly possible. Mrs. Flower had not been a lovable mother; she had rarely spoken to Aurelia but with cold censure for the last few years. People whispered that it was a happy release for the poor girl when her mother died; they had begun to think she was growing like her husband, and perhaps was not "just right."

Aurelia went on with the business with calm equanimity, and made even profits every year. They were small, but more than enough for her to live on, and she paid the last dollar of the mortgage which had so fretted her father, and owned the old house clear. She led a peaceful, innocent life, with her green herbs for companions; she associated little with the people around, except in a business way. They came to see her, but she rarely entered their houses. Every room in her house was festooned with herbs; she knew every kind that grew in the New England woods, and hunted them out in their season and brought them home; she was a simple, sweet soul, with none of the morbid melancholy of her parents about her. She loved her work, and the greenwood things were to her as friends, and the healing qualities of sarsaparilla and thoroughwort, and the sweetness of thyme and lavender, seemed to have entered into her nature, till she almost could talk with them in that way. She had never thought of being unhappy; but now she wondered at herself over this child. It was a darling of a child; as dainty and winsome a girl baby as ever was. Her poor young mother had had a fondness for romantic names, which she had bestowed, as the only heritage within her power, on all her children. The one was Myrtilla—Myrtie for short. The little thing clung to Aurelia from the first, and Aurelia found that she had another way of loving besides the way in which she loved lavender and thoroughwort. The comfort she took with the child through the next winter was unspeakable. The herbs were banished from the south room, which was turned into a nursery, and a warm carpet was put on the floor that the baby might not take cold. She learned to cook for the baby—her own diet had been chiefly vegetarian. She became a charming nursing mother. People wondered. "It does beat all how handy 'Relia is with that baby," Mrs. Atwood told Viny.

Aurelia took even more comfort with the little thing when Spring came, and she could take her out with her; then she bought a little straw carriage, and the two went after herbs together. Home they would come in the tender Spring twilight, the baby asleep in her carriage, with a great sheaf of flowers beside her, and Aurelia with another over her shoulder.

She felt all through that Summer as if she was too happy to last. Once she said so to one of the neighbors. "I feel as if it wa'n't right for me to be so perfetly happy," said she. "I feel some days as if I was walkin' an' walkin' an' walkin' through a garden of sweet-smellin' herbs, an' nothin' else; an' as for Myrtie, she's a bundle of myrtle an' camphor out of King Solomon's garden. I'm so afraid it can't last."

Happiness had seemed to awake in Aurelia a taint of her father's foreboding melancholy. But she apparently had no reason for it until early fall. Then, returning with Myrtie one night from a trip to the woods, she found an old lady seated on her door-step, grimly waiting for her. She was an old woman and tremulous, but still undaunted and unshaken as to her spirit. Her tall, shrunken form was loaded with silk and jet. She stood up as Aurelia approached wondering, and her dim old eyes peered at her aggressively through the gold spectacles, which lent an additional glare to them.

"I suppose you are Miss Flower?" began the old lady, with no prefaratory parley.

"Yes," said Aurelia, trembling.

"Well, my name's Mrs. Matthew Sears, an' I've come for my grandchild there."

Aurelia turned very white. She let her herbs slide to the ground. "I—hardly understand—I guess?"—faltered she. "Can't you let me keep her?"

"Well, I guess I won't have one of my grandchildren brought up by an old yarb woman—not if I know it."

The old lady sniffed. Aurelia stood looking at her. She felt as if she had fallen down from Heaven, and the hard reality of the earth had jarred the voice out of her. Then the old lady made a step toward the carriage and caught up Myrtie in her trembling arms. The child screamed with fright. She had been asleep. She turned her little frightened face toward Aurelia and held out her arms, and cried, "Mamma! mamma! mamma!" in a perfect frenzy of terror. The old lady tried to hush her in vain. Aurelia found her voice then. "You'd better let me take her and give her her supper," she said, "and when she is asleep again I will bring her over to you."

"Well," said the lady, doubtfully. She was glad to get the frantic little thing out of her arms, though.

Aurelia held her close and hushed her, and she subsided into occasional convulsive sobs, and furtive frightened glances at her grandmother.

"I s'pose you are stopping at the hotel?" said Aurelia.

"Yes, I am," said the old lady, stoutly. "You kin bring her over as soon as she's asleep." Then she marched off with uncertain majesty.

Some women would have argued the case longer, but Aurelia felt that there was simply no use in it. The old lady was the child's grandmother; if she wanted her, she saw no way but to give her up. She never thought of pleading, she was so convinced of the old lady's determination.

She carried Myrtie into the house, gave her her supper, washed her, and dressed her in her little best dress. Then she took her up in her lap and tried to explain to her childish mind the change that was to be made in her life. She told her she was going to live with her grandmother, and she must be a good little girl, and love her, and do just as she told her to. Myrtie sobbed with unreasoning grief, and clung to Aurelia; but she wholly failed to take the full meaning of it all in.

She was still fretful and bewildered by her rude wakening from her nap. Presently she fell asleep again, and Aurelia laid her down while she got together her little wardrobe. There was a hop pillow in a little linen case, which Myrtie had always slept on; she packed that up with the other things.

Then she rolled the little sleeping girl up in a blanket, laid her in her carriage, and went over to the hotel. It was not much of a hotel—merely an ordinary two-story house, where two or three spare rooms were ample accommodation for the few straggling guests who came to this rural place. It was only a few steps from Aurelia's house. The old lady had the Chamber of Honor, a large, square room on the first floor, opening directly on the piazza. In spite of all Aurelia's care, Myrtie woke up and began to cry when she was carried in. She had to go off and leave her screaming piteously after her. Out on the piazza, she uttered the first complaint, almost, of her life, to the hostess, Mrs. Simonds, who had followed her there.

"Don't feel bad, 'Relia," said the woman, who was almost crying herself. "I know it's awful hard, when you was taking so much comfort. We all feel for you."

Aurelia looked straight ahead. She had the bundle of little clothes and the hop pillow in her arms. the old lady had said, in a way that would have been funny if it had not been for the poor heart that listened, that she didn't want any yarb pillows, nor any clothes scented with yarbs nuther.

"I don't mean to be wicked," said Aurelia, "but I can't help thinking that Providence ought to provide for women. I wish Myrtie was mine."

The other woman wiped her eyes at the hungry way in which she said "mine."

"Well, I can't do anything, but I'm sorry for you, if that's all. You'd make enough sight better mother for Myrtie than that cross old woman. I don't b'lieve she more'n half wants her, only she's sot. She doesn't care anything about having the other children, she's going to leave them with Mis' Lomis; but she says her grandchildren ain't going to be living with strangers, an' she ought to hev been consulted. After all you've done for the child, to treat you as she has to-night, she's the most ungrateful— I know one thing; I'd charge her for Myrtie's board—a good price, too."

"Oh, I don't want anything of that sort," said poor Aurelia, dejectedly, listening to her darling's sobs. "You go in and try to hush her, Mis' Simonds. Oh!"

"So I will! her grandmother can't do anything with her, poor little thing! I've got some peppermints. I do believe she's spankin' her—the——"

Aurelia did not run in with Mrs. Simonds; she listened outside till the pitiful cries hushed a little; then she went desolately home.

She sat down in the kitchen, with the little clothes in her lap. She did not think of going to bed; she did not cry or moan to herself; she just sat there still. It was not very late when she came home—between eight and nine. In about half an hour, perhaps, she heard a sound outside that made her leap—a little voice crying pitifully, and saying, between the sobs, "Mamma, mamma!"

Aurelia made one spring to the door. There was the tiny creature in her little nightgown, shaking all over with cold and sobs.

Aurelia caught her up, and all her calm was over. "Oh, you darling! you darling! you darling!" she cried, covering her little cold body all over with kisses. "You shan't leave me—you shan't! you shan't! Little sweetheart—all I've got in the world. I guess they shan't take you away when you don't want to go. Did you cry, and mamma go off and leave you? Did they whip you? They never shall again—never! never! There, there, blessed, don't cry; mamma'll get you all warm, and you shall go to sleep on your own little pillow. Oh, you darling! darling! darling."

Aurelia busied herself about the child, rubbing the little numb limbs, and getting some milk heated. She never asked how she came to get away; she never thought of anything except that she had her. She stopped every other minute to kiss her and croon to her; she laughed and cried. Now she gave way to her feelings; she was almost beside herself. She had the child all warm and fed and comforted by the kitchen fire, when she heard steps outside, and she knew at once what was coming, and a fierce resolve sprang up in her heart; they should not have that child again to-night. She cast a hurried glance around; there was hardly a second's time. In the corner of the kitchen was a great heap of herbs which she had taken down from the walls where they had been drying; the next day she had intended to pack them and send them off. She caught up Myrtie and covered her with them. "Lie still, darling!" she whispered. "Don't make a bit of noise, or your grandmother will get you again." Myrtie crouched under them, trembling.

Then the door opened; Mr. Simonds stood there with a lantern. "That little girl's run away," he began—"slipped out while the old lady was out of the room a minute. Beats all how such a little thing knew enough. She's here, ain't she?"

"No," said Aurelia, "she ain't."

"You don't mean it?"

"Yes."

"Ain't you seen her, though?"

"No."

Mr. Simonds, who was fat and placid, began to look grave. "Then, all there is about it, we've got to have a hunt," said he. "Twon't do to have that little tot out in her night-gown long. We hain't a thought but she was here. Must have lost her way."

Aurelia watched him stride down the yard. Then she ran after him. "Mr. Simonds!" He turned. "I told you a lie." Myrtie's in the corner of the kitchen under a heap of herbs."

"Why, what on earth—"

"I wanted to keep her so to-night." Aurelia burst right out in loud sobs.

"There, there, 'Relia! It's a shame. You shall keep her. I'll make it all right with the old lady somehow. I reckon, as long as the child's safe, she'll be glad to get rid of her to-night. She wouldn't have slept much. Go right into the house, 'Relia, and don't worry."

Aurelia obeyed. She hung over the little creature all night, asleep in her little crib. She watched her every breath. She never thought of sleeping herself—her last night with Myrtie. The seconds were so many grains of gold-dust. Her heart failed her when day broke. She washed and dressed Myrtie at the usual time, and gave her her breakfast. Then she sat down with her and waited. The child's sorrow was soon forgotten, and she played about as usual. Aurelia watched her despairingly. She began to wonder at length why they did not come for her. It grew later and later. She would not carry her back herself, she was resolved on that.

It was ten o'clock before any one came, then it was Mrs. Simonds. She had a strange look on her face.

"Relia," she said, standing in the door and looking at her and Myrtie, "you 'ain't heard what's happened to our house this mornin', hev you?"

"No," said Aurelia, awed.

"Old Mis' Sears is dead. Had her third shock; she's had two in the last three years. She was took soon after Mr. Simonds got home. We had a doctor right off, but she died 'bout an hour ago."

"Oh," said Aurelia, "I have been a wicked woman."

"No, you 'ain't, Aurelia; don't you go to feeling so. There's no call for the living to be unjust to themselves because folks are dead. You did the best you could. An' now you're glad you can help the child; you can't help it. I thought of it myself the first thing."

"Oh, I was such a wicked woman to think of it myself," said Aurelia. If I could only have done something for the poor old soul! Why didn't you call me?"

"I told Mr. Simonds I wouldn't; you'd had enough."

There was one thing which Aurelia found to do, though—a simple and touching thing, though it probably meant more to her than to most of those who knew of it.

On the day of the funeral the poor old woman's grave was found lined with fragrant herbs from Aurelia's garden thyme and lavender and rosemary. She had cried when she picked them, because she could not help being glad, and they were all she could give for atonement.—Mary E. Welkins, in Harper's Magazine.

A Tight Squeeze.

"William Broker," she said to her husband, very earnestly, as they sat at the breakfast table, "look me in the eye and tell me the truth; are you losing all your money in a fruit speculation?"

He was scared to death when she began, but conscious innocence gave him strength and courage as she concluded her question. "No," he said, firmly, "I am not."

"I believe you are," she said, shaking her head, "for last night you cried in your sleep, and said that you had lost every chip you had in the world on one little pear."

And then he gasped and admitted that he had dropped a few cases in a little deal in perishable fruits. But it was the narrowest escape he ever had in his life.—Burlington Hawkeye.

Horses Travelling Unshod.

Whether shoeing is necessary or not remains to be tested to the satisfaction of the majority. Some believe that shoes can not be dispensed with on the cobble-stones of the cities, but are inclined to the opinion that shoes are not altogether necessary on soft, sandy or light, gravelly roads. In Chicago a gentleman neglected to shoe his horse and allowed it to work on the cobble-stones. At first the feet became somewhat sore and the hoofs cracked and seemed very brittle. In time, however the hoofs began to harden in texture, became callous to the hard usage, until now the owner declares he would not use shoes again under any circumstances. Just here we desire to call attention to the subject. If the feet, by direct contact with the earth, improve and the tenderness and brittleness of the hoof is changed, it may be possible that those who have attempted to work their horses unshod have become alarmed at what they supposed lameness, when a little patience would have demonstrated the method as feasible. Any one who is accustomed to wearing shoes finds it very inconvenient to walk barfooted for a few days, but after a short time the feet become insensible to substances with which they come in contact, and one then easily manages to walk on the stones, gravel, in the sand, water, or even upon sharp substances, without the least difficulty. Thus it may be with horses when the shoes are removed. They will find walking awkward and the feet may become sore, but after a lapse of time they will be able to pull over the worst kind of roads. So far as our own opinions are concerned, we have not given the matter a test; but the experience of those who have tried working horses without shoes can not be ignored. It will be hard to convince most persons that shoeless horses are able to endure the hard cobble-stones, but that horses may work upon good country roads is within the limit of possibility. It would not be a troublesome experiment if farmers should put the matter to a test by leaving the shoes off one or two for comparison. If we could work our horses anywhere without shoes it would be a great saving in the course of a year, not only financially but from the inconveniences so often experienced when horses are to be shod during a busy time.—Field and Fireside.

Dryness in the Fruit House.

After a low and even temperature is secured, the other essentials in preserving fruit are: darkness: an air-tight room, to retain the carbonic acid given off the fruit, and a dry atmosphere. As stated elsewhere (p. 423), fruit in ripening gives off both carbonic and acid water, or moisture. The carbonic acid, by excluding the oxygen of the air, aids in preserving the fruit. Moisture is undesirable, as it hastens decay. The only effective method of removing it is by exposing in the room some substance that will absorb it. The French use Chloride of Calcium, which is a very different substance from Chloride of Lime. This salt has such an avidity for moisture, that it takes it from the air of the room and becomes liquified. The objection to this is its expense. An American experimenter has found a substitute in the "bittern," or waste material of the salt works, which is thrown away. This is mainly a very impure chloride of calcium, and answers the purpose. The bittern, in a large iron pan, is exposed in the fruit room. When it has become liquified by the moisture absorbed, the pan is set over a fire and the salt dried, by driving off the water it has absorbed, when it is again ready for use. This process may be repeated indefinitely.—American Agriculturist.

Bears.

Not long since I was riding toward Cloud Peak, and had gone only three miles when I discovered two enormous grizzlies down in a horse-shoe canon. I left my pony, went to the canon wall and opened fire on the enemies. The bears were 500 yards away. My first shot wounded one of the monsters, and the wounded one immediately attacked the other bear. They fought desperately for fifteen minutes. It was a terrible encounter. The wounded bear was beaten by its antagonist, after which I shot the victor. They were both ferocious looking animals, and the two would weigh over 3,000 pounds. Their tusks measured three inches, claws four inches, feet fourteen inches, and the bears twelve feet long.

Leaving the two bears, I walked over a ridge not more than a mile away and came on to four more, two black and two silver-tip bears. They did not see me, and my position was a good one, on the lee and near a nice smooth crag of granite. Slipping on a pair of moccasins, I was soon on top of the granite knob, 150 feet above ground. I opened fire immediately, only two hundred yards, killed two at the first shot, and soon had them rolling down the mountain together.

It was an exciting time; the four bears made a terrible noise. After seeing a large eagle swoop down among the pines, catching a grouse, I descended from my rocky knob and ventured up to the bears. There they all lay in a heap, all dead and in the gulch together. Those six bears would weigh over 7,000 pounds.—Salt Lake Tribune.

How far Conductors Ride.

Much has been said regarding the long runs of conductors and brakemen on trains in the South. The following is the mileage which conductors and brakemen make out of New Orleans as given in the Picayune: On the Illinois Central Railroad, from New Orleans to Canton, Miss., 206 miles. On the Morgan's Louisiana and Texas Railroad, from New Orleans to Vermillionville, 144 miles. On the Louisville and Nashville Railroad, from New Orleans to Montgomery, Ala., 321 miles. On the Texas and Pacific Railroad, from New Orleans to Melville, 130 miles. On the New Orleans and Northeastern (Queen and Cresent Route), from New Orleans to Meridian, Miss., 195 miles. On the Mississippi Valley (Louisville, New Orleans and Texas Pacific), from New Orleans to Vicksburg, Miss., 235 miles. This list only has reference to passenger conductors on through trains. The engineers are changed about every 100 miles.

Mutual Toleration.

"My dear," said a wife to her husband, "I know that I am dreadfully cross with you at times, that I am not as patient as I should be, and I think the same can be said of you."

"Yes, certainly," he frankly acknowledged, "I am almost as bad as you are."

"What's that?"

"I—I say that I am just as much to blame as you are."

"I think," went on the lady, "that we ought to cultivate a mutual toleration of each other's faults," and she bent over him fondly and kissed him.

"You are not looking well to-night, my dear," he said stroking her hair.

"No," she replied, "my feet pain me dreadfully."

"That's because you wear shoes two sizes too small for you."

Then the trouble began once more.—Detroit Post.

—One of the crew of the schooner Francis W. Homans, of this port, informs us that on the recent trip to Georges they caught a large shark and cut his head off, which they left on board and threw the body overboard. Ten minutes afterward, to the great surprise of all hands, the shark was seen swimming alongside without his head and remained in sight three-quarters of an hour. This seems incredible, but several of the crew substantiate it. Captain John Hawson informs us that he has witnessed the same feat on the west coast of Africa—when the crew would catch sharks and cut their heads off the fish would swim off as if nothing had occurred.—*Gloucester (Mass.) —A singular spectacle was presented at the port of Mazatlan, Mexico, recently. There was no wind moving over the waters of the ocean and a calm prevailed, under which influence the surface of the waters was smooth as a mirror. Suddenly and without any visible atmospheric agency the ocean began to roll in great waves toward the shore and the streets nearest to the beach were soon under water. No wind was moving during the few seconds that the phenomenon lasted, and the only explanation that can be given is that some submarine earthquake was shaking up things.

MR. D. H. BARNABY, of Owego, N.Y., says his daughter was taken with a violent cold which terminated in Pneumonia; the best physicians said she could live but a few hours, when a friend recommended DR. WM. HALL'S BALSAM FOR THE LUNGS. She accepted it and was surprised to find that it produced a marked change for the better, and by persevering a permanent cure was effected.

A CURE FOR GRAVEL.
A Common and Painful Complaint—A Statement You May Confide In.
It seems to have been reserved for Dr. David Kennedy, of Rondout, N. Y., to accomplish, through his preparation widely known as KENNEDY'S FAVORITE REMEDY, what others have failed to compass. The subjoined letter will be found of vital interest to sufferers from gravel and to the general public:
ALBANY, March 20, 1884.
Dr. D. Kennedy, Rondout, N. Y.:
DEAR SIR: Let me tell you frankly that I have never been partial to proprietary medicines, as I believe the majority of them to be nothing better than methods of obtaining money from people whom suffering makes ready to catch at any hope of relief. They are mean cheats and delusions. But your FAVORITE REMEDY I know by happy experience to be a totally different thing. I had been a sufferer from gravel for years, and had resorted to many eminent physicians for relief, but no permanent good came of it. About three years ago your FAVORITE REMEDY was recommended to me. I can give you the result in a sentence: I tried it and it cured me completely. I am confident it saved my life. You can use this letter if you think best. Yours, etc.,
NATHAN ACKLEY.
Captain Nathan Ackley was for a long time connected with the Canal Appraiser's office in Albany. He is well known and writes for no purpose but to do good to others.
As a medicine for all diseases of the Blood, Liver, Kidneys and digestive organs, KENNEDY'S FAVORITE REMEDY has fairly won its high reputation. Write, if desirable, to Dr. David Kennedy, Rondout, N. Y.

Loss and Gain.

CHAPTER I.

"I was taken sick a year ago
With bilious fever"

"My doctor pronounced me cured, but I got sick again, with terrible pains in my back and sides, and I got so bad I Could not move!
I shrunk!
From 228 lbs. to 120! I had been doctoring for my liver, but it did me no good. I did not expect to live more than three months. I began to use Hop Bitters. Directly my appetite returned, my pains left me, my entire system seemed renewed as if by magic, and after using several bottles, I am not only as sound as a sovereign, but weigh more than I did before. To Hop Bitters I owe my life." R. FITZPATRICK.
Dublin, June 6, '81.

CHAPTER II.

"Malden, Mass., Feb. 1, 1880. Gentlemen—I suffered with attacks of sick headache."

Neuralgia, female trouble, for years in the most terrible and excruciating manner.
No medicine or doctor could give me relief or cure, until I used Hop Bitters.
"The first bottle
Nearly cured me;"
The second made me as well and strong as when a child.
"And I have been so to this day."
My husband was an invalid for twenty years with a serious
"Kidney, liver and urinary complaint,
"Pronounced by Boston's best physicians—
"Incurable!"
Seven bottles of your Bitters cured him and I know of the "Lives of eight persons"
In my neighborhood that have been saved by your bitters,
And many more are using them with great benefit.
"They almost Do miracles?" —Mrs. E. D. Slack.

HOW TO GET SICK.—Expose yourself day and night; eat too much without exercise; work too hard without rest; doctor all the time; take all the vile nostrums advertised, and then you will want to know how to get well, which is answered in three words—Take Hop Bitters!

None genuine without a bunch of green Hops on the white label. Shun all the vile, poisonous stuff with "Hop" or "Hops" in their name.

"THE BATTLE OF BULL RUN,"
BY GEN. G. T. BEAUREGARD, graphically illustrated with more than twenty pictures, is a leading feature of the November number of THE CENTURY MAGAZINE. This article is the beginning of a series of separate papers, to appear in THE CENTURY, on the great battles of the War for the Union, written by general officers high in command on both sides, including Generals GRANT, LONGSTREET, McCLELLAN, BEAUREGARD, HILL, POPE, ROSECRANS, Admiral PORTER, and others. The aim is to present interesting personal experiences—the officers' own stories of their plans and operations. The illustrations will be full and accurate; and accompanying papers on "Recollections of a Private," also begun in November, will add value to a series which the conductors of THE CENTURY believe to be the most important ever undertaken by them. The November CENTURY also contains first chapters of a new novel, the story of an American business man, by W. D. Howells; a timely paper on "How Shall we Elect Our Presidents?" short stories by "Uncle Remus" and others, and a number of striking illustrations. This issue begins a new volume. Yearly subscriptions, $4.00; single numbers, 35 cts. VOLUME IX. — BURLINGTON, KY., WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 29, 1884. — NUMBER 52.

TOPICS OF THE DAY.

WM. SHAKESPEARE is running for office at Kalamazoo, Mich.

THE new reading is "bride and coachman," instead of bride and groom.

ONE of the Rothschilds is about to write a history of that famous family.

JOHN HABBERTON, author of "Helen's Babies," it is said, has lost all his earnings by signing a note for a friend.

THE growth of the population of the city of Washington is more rapid than is commonly known. Thus the Pilgrim Press states that over 5,000 new scholars have entered the schools this fall.

A WONDERFUL chasm has recently been discovered in San Luis, Obispo County, Cal. An adventurous explorer was lowered into it to the depth of four thousand feet without finding any bottom.

SOMEBODY has noticed that many girls are remaining single because they cannot marry money. Poverty with pa and ma is preferable to poverty with a husband and six children.

MISS LUCKEY, a Texas girl, followed her lover three thousand miles, and married him. He should have married her in the first place and saved traveling expenses. Texas girls are not to be fooled with.

JUDGE LAWRENSON, who recently administered the oath of office to Postmaster-General Hatton, has been in the Postoffice Department for fifty years, and has sworn in twenty-two Postmaster Generals.

SYRIA, with 1,500,000 souls, and an area of 70,000 square miles, has no school fund or tax of its own; its schools, like those of Turkish provinces, being supported by the mosques or religious establishment.

AT Kidderminster, England, the sewerage outlet was made within five feet of the town well, and yet after five hundred cases of typhoid fever they had to get a doctor down from London to tell them what the trouble was.

LITTLE or no jewelry will be worn by fashionable men, and even watch-chains are to be discarded. The nearest thing in the shape of a watch-chain is a plain gold thread, which goes around the neck and comes out through one of the button-holes.

PRESIDENT ARTHUR'S frequent absence from the capital has led somebody to look up what his predecessors did in this way. John Adams scored 385 days; Jefferson (two terms), 796; Madison (two terms), 637; Monroe (two terms), 708; John Q. Adams, 222, and Jackson (two terms), 508.

THE latest remedy for sea-sickness is to rub the skin behind the ears until slightly excoriated. The theory is that as the semicircular canals of the internal ear are organs of equilibrium, when overexcited they give rise to vertigo and nausea. "Counter-irritation," it is held, will, therefore, prevent nausea.

THERE is a small tree growing in a gulch near Tuscarora, Nev., the foliage of which at certain seasons is said to be so luminous that it can be distinguished a mile away in the darkest night. In its immediate vicinity it emits sufficient light to enable a person to read the finest print. Its luminosity is said to be due to parasites.

ONE-FIFTH of the habitable globe is under the sway of Queen Victoria. Her subjects number 315,000,000, and Australia and Canada have room for two hundred million more. The annual revenue of the empire amounts to $1,018,000,000. Local taxes swell this sum $305,000,000 more, so that the entire cost of government is about $7.50 per capita annually.

AN interesting fact in connection with the recent appointment of Frank Hatton as Postmaster General is, that it is the first instance in the history of the Government when two heads of the same department are Cabinet officers. Secretary of the Treasury Gresham, moreover, is holding his second Cabinet position under the same administration.

THE recent sale of the Duke of Hamilton's library, England, is said to be the largest book sale on record. It continued forty days, and the total amount realized was eight hundred and fifty thousand dollars. The famed Sunderland collection brought but a little more than one-fourth as much, and the Gosford collection only forty-five thousand dollars.

ALTHOUGH the United States will not profit by the opening of the Congo to commerce, it is some salve to our national vanity to know that it was an American, Henry M. Stanley, who first discovered the possibilities of the Congo, and who announced its importance to the outside world. But his great work has been done under the auspices of the Belgian government.

THE greatest foundry in the world is that of Herr Krupp, at Essen, Germany. In 1860 that establishment employed 1,764 workmen. To-day 65,381 people, counting, of course, the women and children, make a living out of this vast gun foundry. It is divided into eight sections, and there are eleven blast furnaces, 1,542 other furnaces, 439 steam-boilers, 82 steam-hammers, and 450 steam-engines representing 185,000 horse-power.

ON THE WAR PATH.

A Revolt in Ontario, and Massacre of Whites Threatened.

Hostilities Brought About by an Unfortunate Affair.

OTTAWA, ONT., October 26.—The Indians at the village of Matlakalian are in revolt, and a massacre of the white settlers is threatened if their comrade, who is held for the murder of a white trader named Ysemens, is hanged. It is feared hostilities have been precipitated by an unfortunate occurrence. Four young Germans started some time ago from Victoria, B. C., on a hunting expedition. They landed near the Indian reserve, and were immediately surrounded by the curious Indians. The rifle of one of the party was accidentally discharged, the bullet entering the leg of one of the Indians. Believing that an attack was intended, the savages disarmed the hunters, who ran for their boat and were soon out of reach of the bullets. On landing at Metlakalian, the Indian Agent was informed that the Germans had gone to the reserve to create trouble, and he had the young man whose rifle was discharged arrested and taken to Fort Simpson. The arrest is considered an outrage, and will undoubtedly be avenged.

A Priest's Trip to Ireland.

NEW YORK, October 26.—Father John J. Riordon returned to New York to-day on the steamer Germanic, after a prolonged tour in Ireland for the purpose of informing the Irish people of the general condition of affairs in this country, thus preventing to some extent assisted and reckless emigration, and perfecting a system rec... agnrated by himself whereby emigrants to America shall bring with them letters of recommendation from their parish priests or other certificates of character. Father Riordan is highly enthusiastic over the success of his journey. He took special pains to impress upon his many audiences abroad that the idea of the United States being a land flowing with free milk and honey was a mistaken one. Speaking of the condition of the Irish people at home, the priest said that in no part of Ireland did he see such utter wretchedness as existed among some of the same nationality in this city. The crops during the past year had been large, and but little affected by the drought which prevailed. Generally the people were happy, although the dreams of their lives were to emigrate to America or Australia.

Death of Colonel Halstead.

CINCINNATI, October 26.—Colonel Griffin Halstead, the aged father of Murat Halstead, of the Commercial Gazette, met his death sometime last night. He had been to a meeting at New London, about a mile from his home on Paddy's Run. He was delayed until after dark, but his family felt no uneasiness about him, thinking he had gone elsewhere to stay all night. This morning an intelligent shepherd dog belonging to the family, attracted the attention of one of the grandsons by running back and forth between the farm buildings and a bridge crossing a ravine about two hundred yards from the house, and plainly manifesting a desire to have some one accompany him. The grandson went to the bridge, and discovered his grandfather lying just over the side of the bridge against the bank of the ravine. He had stumbled over a pile of dirt, and missing the bridge, fell into the ravine. It was so narrow that when he fell his head struck the opposite bank, bending his head upon his neck, which was instantly broken. When found his cane was still in his hand, and everything indicated that he had scarcely moved a muscle after his fall, death being instantaneous.

Annual Treasury Report.

WASHINGTON, October 26.—O. Ferriss, Second Auditor of the Treasury, in his annual report says that the 37,187 claims pending in the pay and bounty division include 1,224 claims of Indians who served in the war of the rebellion. He recommended that an appropriation be placed at the disposal of his office to defray the expenses of investigating these and other claims of a like character. The Auditor renews his recommendation of last year for the passage of an act which will bar and preclude from settlement all claims growing out of the late war not presented for payment within one or two years after the enactment of such a law. He says: "Another year's experience has strengthened my conviction that a law of this kind is absolutely necessary for the protection of the Government, and that it would not operate to the prejudice of honest claimants."

A Mail Robber Captured.

WASHINGTON, October 25.—Chief Inspector Sharp has been informed of the arrest in Rocky Mount, Va., by Inspector Henderson, of John V. Brown, husband of the Postmistress, for rifling registered letters. Brown made a confession. The amounts stolen are large and have extended over the past three months.

Fatally Stabbed at a Ball.

PITTSBURG, PA., October 26.—A Martin's Ferry, O., special says: Early Sunday morning a ball wound up with a bloody row, in which Ben Frazer, a well known character, fatally stabbed George Bienbach. Frazer disappeared shortly after the affray and has not yet been arrested.

Accidental Poisoning.

EAST LIBERTY, O., October 25.—Mrs. Taylor, of this place, mixed rat poison in a pie-pan, and afterward baked a pie in the same pan. She is badly poisoned, but may recover.

A Lucky Woman.

HOLYOKE, MASS., October 26.—A hard-working woman living here named Mrs. Flanegan, has been notified by a New York Savings Bank that a fortune of $10,000 awaits her there. It is from the estate of an eccentric and only sister who died two years ago. Mrs Flanegan did not know her sister was dead, although well aware of her place of residence, and the bank has been searching for her twenty-three months.

A New River Explored.

WASHINGTON, October 26.—Lieutenant George M. Stoney, commanding the surveying ship Ounalaska, reports to the Navy Department his arrival at San Francisco to-day. All on board are said to be well. Lieutenant Stoney succeeded in exploring for four hundred miles a new river which he discovered a year ago in the northeastern portion of Alaska. The river is not yet named. On account of scarcity of time the Lieutenant did not reach the head-waters of the river.

National Hod-Carriers' Union.

PITTSBURG, October 25.—The National Hod-Carriers' Union was organized here to-night, the object being mutual benefit and protection to laborers. Application will be made for a charter.

ATLANTIC CABLEGRAMS.

China Making Large Purchases of Munitions of War—Attempted Murder of King Leopold.

BRUNSWICK, October 25.—A delegate from the Bundesrath presented to the Brunswick Diet to-day a letter from Emperor William rejecting the claim of the Duke of Cumberland to the grand ducal throne, and approving the measures of the Council of Regency against the pretender. The North German Gazette this morning published the text of the Duke of Cumberland's manifesto, and reprinted the document in which the Duke of Cumberland informed Emperor William of the death of the ex-King of Hanover, and declared that he (Cumberland) would fully maintain the right and titles which he had inherited. The late Duke of Brunswick was buried in the cathedral to-day. The streets were thronged with people, and emblems of mourning were universal.

PESTH, October 25.—It is stated that the Court at Vienna has declined to intercede with Emperor William in behalf of the Duke of Cumberland's claim to the Brunswick succession.

LONDON, October 25.—The report that England was about to mediate between France and China, with the view to an amicable settlement of the present difficulties, was altogether without foundation. The Chinese Government has given immense orders for munitions of war in London, Berlin and other cities. Arrangements have been made for a consignment of heavy guns and small arms. Among the purchases already made by China are five hundred thousand cartridges, which were made during the Franco-German war. These are now being shipped from London. Experts say the powder in these cartridges would at this late day be unable to eject a bullet from the muzzle of a rifle.

PARIS, October 25.—The Cri du Peuple states that on Tuesday, at Laeken, an attempt was made to shoot King Leopold. One shot was fired at him by a radical student. The would-be regicide was arrested. News of the incident was suppressed.

Wrecked by a Gas Explosion.

MONTREAL, October 25.—A terrible gas explosion occurred this morning in the residence of J. R. Hutchins, on Fort street, completely wrecking the house, blowing out all the windows and carrying away the gable end. Furniture, beds, bedding and household effects were thrown into the street in all directions. Windows of adjoining residences were shattered. Bricks and debris were carried a great distance. Servants who were sleeping in the basement when the explosion occurred suffered most severely, two of them being terribly scorched and receiving serious, and in one case, fatal injuries. Miss Hutchins was also badly scorched about the face. Her bed was against the gable, which was blown out. She had a narrow escape. Investigation proves that a hole nearly an inch in circumference existed in the pipe below the meter, but how this flaw occurred is a mystery, unless caused by plumbers, who wore at work in the house yesterday.

Gives Himself Away While Drunk.

LLOYDSVILLE, O., October 26.—Emmott Mitchell, the man who shot Chas. Griffith, September 2, was arrested at Black River Falls, Wisconsin, by the local authorities of that place, on last Thursday evening. Mitchell, who is very intemperate, became grossly intoxicated, and began to brag of his feat, swearing that he killed a man in Belmont County, Ohio, and that his name was Emmett Mitchell. For sometime no notice was taken of his talk, it being merely supposed that it was drunken braggadocio, but upon his reiterating his statement more emphatically, he was arrested by the police and lodged in jail, and a telegram sent to the Sheriff of this county inquiring if a man of Mitchell's description was wanted. Sheriff Sedgewick replied immediately to hold the man till his arrival, and last evening a dispatch was received from Sedgewick that they had caught the right man.

Boy Killed by a Street Car.

BALTIMORE, October 26.—This afternoon Michael, age seven years, son of Policeman Croghan, was instantly killed by a street car. He was crossing the street, when he was knocked down by the horses. The wheels of the car passed over his neck, completely severing the head from the body. The driver had left charge of the horses to collect fares. He is held for hearing.

The English Franchise Bill.

LONDON, October 26.—It is announced that the Franchise bill will easily pass the House of Commons. It will receive determined opposition in the House of Lords, however. A monster mass-meeting was held at London yesterday, at which resolutions were adopted denouncing the Houses of Lords and insisting upon its abolishment.

A Ghastly Find.

SCRANTON, PA., October 26.—This afternoon boys playing in the woods near Minooka discovered the badly decomposed body of a man lying face downward in a ravine. It proved to be that of John J. Jordan, aged twenty-two, who disappeared on the 18th of last month. His watch and other property were found undisturbed. It is thought he died of heart disease.

Died for Love.

OSCEOLA, O., October 25.—Miss Ella Whitacre, living near this place, committed suicide because her lover forsook her at the command of his father.

Death of Prof. Louis K. Packard.

NEW HAVEN, CONN., October 26.—Prof. Louis K. Packard died to-day, aged forty-eight years.

Ella Watson's Murderer Sentenced.

SALEM, N. J., October 25.—Howard Sullivan, convicted of the murder of Ella Watson, was sentenced to-day to be hanged December 3.

Hypothecating Pay Accounts.

WASHINGTON, October 25.—The Secretary of War is bent upon breaking up the abuses that have grown out of officers hypothecating their pay account in advance of maturity, and on Friday last announced to a member of a firm that has been largely engaged in the business of cashing officers' pay accounts before maturity, that he was determined to break up the whole system, as ruinous to the service. He stated that he was now engaged in getting up a form of voucher for the pay department, with such a certificate on it that would absolutely preclude any officer from executing such voucher a single day before his pay was due.

Strung Up.

BLOOMINGTON, ILL., October 26.—During a political procession last night, a rough hurled a stone and struck a man in the cavalry division. He was chased and captured by other members of the cavalry division, and strung up to a tree. Police cut him down in time to save his life.

Massacred.

CAIRO, October 26.—It is officially stated that no doubts exist that Colonel Stewart and his party were massacred by Arabs near Merwai. The Canadian contingent for the Nile expedition has arrived at Wady Halfa.

FATAL FIRE DAMP.

Terrific Explosion in a Pennsylvania Coal Mine.

Forty-Five Men Imprisoned, With the Probability That Most Were Killed—Two Dead and Three Wounded Taken Out so Far.

UNIONTOWN, PA., October 27.—An explosion of fire-damp, with results probably as fatal as attended the terrible disaster at West Leisenring last January, when nineteen lives were lost, occurred at the mines of the Youngstown Coke Company, four miles from here, between four and five o'clock this evening. The explosion took place in the sixth right band flat, where about twenty-five men were at work. The fire boss made his rounds as usual this morning, and discovered no signs of gas. The day force went to work, and at 4 this afternoon were relieved by the night turn. Twenty minutes later, and just after the pit boss, James Cole, and Superintendent Reis had come up from the mine and gone to the office, an explosion occurred, which shattered windows for a mile around. Five minutes later there was a second report, and immediately after flames burst forth from the openings, blocking up the avenues of entrance. News of the disaster spread quickly, and friends and relatives of the doomed miners soon gathered around the mouth of the mine, but the flames prevented any attempt at rescue. After hours of work, however, the flames were subdued sufficiently to allow descent by way of the air shaft. The volunteers have only been able to reach part of the mine, owing to the after-damp, and it is feared that the entire roof of the sixth flat has fallen in. If this is the case, none of the miners at work there can be saved. Men in other parts of the mine, who escaped after the explosion occurred, made an attempt to rescue their companions, but were unable to reach them. The killed and injured thus far discovered are: Joseph Zebley, night pumper, single, aged twenty-two, killed; Jack Lanes, roperider, aged thirty, single, killed; Jack Cole and David Cole, his son, seriously, and it is thought, fatally injured; Chauncey Wilson, slightly injured. Washington Kebber has just been rescued. He is not much hurt, as he had presence of mind to lie down in a pool of water, and avoid inhaling the gas. This makes six that have been taken out, two dead and four injured. Jacob Cole and son probably fatally. Every effort is being made to rescue the others, but up to a late hour to-night all in vain. There is scarcely a chance for any of them to be taken out alive, as it is thought all have perished from deadly after-damp before this. The air in the vicinity of the mines is filled with the cries of wives and children of the imprisoned men.

A FEARFUL TYPHOON.

Several Hundred Lives Lost and Over Fifty Vessels Destroyed on the Japanese Coast.

SAN FRANCISCO, October 27.—The steamer Arabic, which arrived yesterday from China and Japan, brings the following further details of the great typhoon which, on September 15, caused such destruction of life and property at Yokohama and Tokio. The storm came up so rapidly and with such tremendous fury that no precautions could be taken. In Yokohama the entire lower part of the city, called "The Settlement," was completely wrecked, not a house left standing. The inhabitants made no attempt to save their property, but fled for their lives to escape drowning from the rushing waters driven on land by the fury of the wind. Higher portions of the city, being more exposed, were equally unfortunate. Several of the largest and most substantial buildings were swept away as if built with pasteboard. In that section alone 128 houses were destroyed and 390 damaged. The loss of life on shore was less great than at sea. Out of eighty sailing vessels fifty-three were lost, with 223 persons aboard. Twelve vessels, with 120 persons, are missing. Of five life-boats that went to the rescue of the drowning crews, four were swamped, and ten of their crew drowned. The typhoon was the severest experienced since 1870.

Wilbur F. Storey Dead.

CHICAGO, February 27.—Wilbur F. Storey, proprietor of the Chicago Times, died at his residence, this city, to-night, at a quarter of 10 o'clock. He had been incapacitated for business for the past two years, the result of a stroke of paralysis received while in Europe four or five years ago. Though feeble, his demise was not immediately expected till two days ago, when he began sinking rapidly. He was unconscious to-day and to-night, and sank peacefully to rest at the hour named.

Suicide of a Merchant.

CHICAGO, October 27.—George W. Stoutenburg, a wealthy and prominent citizen of Chicago, and until recently a partner in the large wholesale drug house of Lord, Stoutenberg & Co., committed suicide at his residence, in the suburb of Lakeside, yesterday morning, by shooting himself in the right temple with a 32-caliber revolver. He had been very much depressed in spirit since the death of his daughter which occurred two years ago.

Rally Fatalities.

TROY, N. Y., October 27.—At Plattsburg, Saturday, after the Democratic mass meeting, Ole Anderson, of Farone, Clinton County, was killed by the cars. Edward Fountain was struck by a train and so badly injured that he cannot live, and a man named Record fell while marching and had a leg broken.

Ella Watson's Murderer Starving Himself.

SALEM, N. J., October 27.—Sullivan, the colored youth who murdered Ella Watson, refuses food, and officials fear that unless force is used he will starve himself to death. He sits all day long in his cell, his face in his hands, refusing to talk to any one.

—Fruit packers have adopted glass jars for putting up fruit. They claim that owing to the habit of unscrupulous dealers of putting up decayed and inferior fruit in tin, it became necessary for their own protection that they should use a transparent vessel, through which the contents can be seen. The glass jars are about 100 per cent. more costly than the tin cans, but are used by any number of times.—N. Y. Times.

—The white missionaries among the Fijis have succeeded in introducing some very peculiar usages of civilization among the natives. They have taken to cricket and play with great energy. The rival clubs challenge each other, and the games are desperately contested. Each game is opened and closed with prayer, and their challenges are imbued with a religious spirit always ending "with great love, Amen."

THE COMMONWEALTH.

Louisville Leaf Tobacco Market.

The market has developed a better action for medium and good Burley leaf, which is partly due to a more attractive class of offerings, but also in part to the presence of a larger demand. On full samples prices have shown a rise of 50c@$1.00 per 100 lbs. Common leaf is steady, but lugs are dull and rather favorable to buyers. Of dark and heavy styles there has not been much on offer to test the market, except Greenriver fillers, which have sold at strong prices. Other styles are without new features. We quote full-weight packages new-crop sound tobacco as follows:

	Dark and Heavy.	Burley.
Trash	$6 00@6 75	$5 00@5 75
Common lugs	7 00@7 25	6 00@7 00
Medium lugs	7 50@7 75	7 50@8 00
Good lugs	8 00@8 50	9 00@10 00
Common leaf	8 75@9 00	10 00@11 00
Medium leaf	9 50@9 75	11 00@12 50
Good leaf	10 50@12 00	13 00@16 50
Fine and fancy leaf	13 00@16 00	18 00@23 00

Taking the Starch Out of 'Em.

A knot of idlers stood upon the end of a pier which ran out into the Hudson River, in one of the small towns near Albany, amusing themselves with hurling stones into the broad stream, each vieing with his neighbor in the endeavor to pitch the missile at the farthest distance from the shore, when a tall, rugged-built Vermonter, direct from the green hills, suddenly made his appearance in their midst, and for awhile remained a quiet observer of their movements.

He was a very brawny, strong-looking Yankee, and was very decently clad. The efforts of the little party had been exhibited over and over again, when the stranger picked up half a brick which lay near him, and giving it a jerk, it fell into the water a long way beyond the line which had as yet been reached by the foremost of the crowd. At the conclusion of this feat, a loud "bravo" went up from half a dozen voices around him.

It was a cold clear day in October, and the men determined not to be outdone, renewed their attempts, but the Vermonter, without saying a syllable to any one, continued to pitch the pebbles far out into the stream, when it seemed to annoy one in a green jacket, the apparent leader of the gang, who declared he wouldn't be beaten by a yellow right straight out of the woods, nohow; and sliding up to the stranger, he determined to make his acquaintance.

"Where do you come from, neighbor?" he asked.

"Me! Wal, I hails from Vermont, es' now, friend."

"Ain't been in these parts long, I reckon?"

"Wal—no. Not edzactly yere—but up and daown, sorter."

"Yas, so I 'sp sed."

"Yaas," continued the green'un, carelessly, and seizing a large billet of wood, twirled it over 50 and several rods from the shore in the water.

"You've a little strength in your arms, neighbor."

"Some pumpkins' with them flippers, stranger; up in our taown a munth ago, I driv them knuckles right strait thur a board more'n a ninch'n ha' thick."

"Haw, haw," shouted the hearers, the man in the green jacket laughing the loudest.

"May be you don't believe it?"

"Not much," answered the crowd.

"We ain't very green down here in York we ain't," said the fellow in the green jacket; "we've been about, you bet."

"Wal, jes' look here, friend," continued the Vermonter, in the most plausible manner, "we, in our country, we've got a purty big river, considerin' Injun River, it's called, and may-be you've heern on it. Wal, I hove a man clean across that river t'other day, and he came down fair and square on t'other side."

"Ha, ha, ha," yelled his auditors.

"Wal, naow, you may laff, but I kin do it agin."

"Do what?" said the green jacket, quickly.

"I ken take and hove you across that river yonder, jes' like open and shet."

"Bet you ten dollars of it."

"Done," said the Yankee, and drawing forth a bill (upon a broken down-east bank) he covered the shin-plaster.

"Ken ye swim, feller?"

"Like a duck," said the green jacket—and without further parley the Vermonter seized the knowing Yorker stoutly by the nape of the neck and seat of the pants, jerked him from his foothold, and with an almost superhuman effort dashed him heels over head, from the end of the docks, some ten yards in the Hudson.

A terrific shout rang through the crowd, as he floundered in the water, and amidst the cheers and screams of his companions. The dicked loafer put back to the shore and scratched up the bank, half frozen by this sudden and involuntary cold bath.

"I'll take that ten-spot, if you please," said he, shivering rapidly, to the stake-holder. "Look out for greenhorns, eh? We'll show you how we do things here in New York, and the fellow claimed the twenty dollars.

"Wal, I reckon you won't take no ten-spot jes yet, Cap'n."

"Why? You lost the bet."

"Not edzactly. I didn't calkilate on den it the us time—but I tell yo't I en dea it," and again, in spite of the loafer's utmost efforts to escape him, he seized him by the neck and the seat of his overalls and pitched him three yards further into the river than upon the first trial.

Again green jacket returned amid the shouts of his mates, who enjoyed the sport immensely.

"Third time never fails," said the Yankee, stripping off his coat; "I ken den it I tell ye."

"Hold on," said the almost petrified victim.

"And I will den it—ef I try till tomorrow mornin'."

"I give it up," shouted the sufferer, between his teeth, which now chattered like a mad badger's—"take the money."

The Vermonter very coolly pocketed the stakes, and as he turned away remarked—

"We ain't much acquainted with you smart folks daown here in York, but we sometimes take the starch out of 'em up our way—and p'raps you want try it on strangers agin. I reckon you wunt," he continued, and grinning upon a broad grin of good humor, he left the company to their reflections.—Rare Bits.

Sensation of Drowning.

In conversation yesterday, Captain Alba told his experience in the following words:

"I was a great swimmer in my youth. In fact, I was expert in all athletic exercises and a swim of that sort I undertook at Point Clear was, in my mind, but an easy pastime. The waves were rolling moderately high, and I swam out to ride them. I was having quite an enjoyable experience when I noticed a little flotilla of jelly-fish, which sped toward me with great velocity. I knew they had a very little movement of their own and was surprised that I swept past them so rapidly. The thought occurred to me that perhaps I was in the current, and I concluded to turn around and swim back to shore. I turned, but at once saw that it was of no use, for I made no headway at all.

"'Ah,' said I, 'you are in for it, old man. You have got out here, and now you are going to have a struggle with the monster. At first I did not feel concerned, but I noticed that the clouds were gathering and the wind was becoming stronger, driving the waves up higher; and, moreover, the night was coming on. 'Surely I will be picked up,' I said, as I swam leisurely along, trying not to exert myself, but I thought, 'I am not what I used to be; I am older and more fleshy, and out of practice. True, I can swim a long time, but not very long in such a sea.' Then I looked all around, and there was not a boat to the seawall. I remembered that in such weather boats usually sought refuge, and I could not expect assistance out in the bay; besides, in these stormy hours sharks approached the shore in hope of securing something from wrecks, etc. 'I guess I am in for it this time,' I said, and I could hear the waters rattling the tune in my ears, saying, 'You have come, you have come. We have got you at last.'

"I looked back to the shore and could see that there was excitement at the hotel. I held up my hand every now and then. I noticed that the people were manning the boats, but I knew that only one boat, the large one near the pier, could help me in the chop-sea. Unfortunately, that boat seemed to be manned by people of little experience, and I confessed, with a sinking heart, that it would not get to me in time.

"I continued to paddle about, and once in a while was forced to gulp in some water. I felt exhausted, but continued my fight. I thought if I could reach the spot where the current and tide met I might get foothold long enough for the boat to reach me, and yet the water ran so fast I feared I could not make it. At length I sounded for bottom. As I felt my feet sink it seemed as if something grabbed them and pulled me down, slant-wise like a shot. Down I went and was pulled and tossed about under the surface. As I went down I struggled and the most horrible pain ran up in my nose and concentrated between my eyes, just as you feel when water goes the wrong way. I felt as if some blood-vessel would burst unless I got air. I was down there many seconds, and I tell you it was the most painful moment of my life. Had I lost my head at that moment I would have drowned without a doubt, but I resolved to let the heart break rather than open my lungs. Finally, just as my resolution was giving way, my head came again above the surface, and I filled my lungs with air.

"I was thoroughly worn out. I could not stretch my arms, and could keep up only a fluttering of the hands. I hung slanting in the water and could barely keep afloat. Just then I heard the sound of oars in the boat-locks and saw the brave fellow approaching in his skiff. He was rowing rapidly and skilfully, and managed to swing the stern of the boat around just in time for me to lay hold of it. I attempted to climb in, but he, Captain Jet Howard, said: 'Don't try that or you will swamp me. The boat can hardly keep alive as it is.' I replied that I could not hold on long enough to be towed in. I asked him to tie my wrist to the boat. He said he could not come to the stern, or the boat would lose its head and be swamped, and we would both drown. 'Then,' said I, 'get in the bow, and I will try to climb in. If I see she is swamping, I will give you my word of honor, I will let go.' With that he got on the bow and cleverly balanced the boat, and I slowly, clumsily crawled over the stern. I fell forward into the bottom of the boat; he seized the oars and pulled at once for the shore. It was a narrow escape. Captain Howard says I am the only man who has been in that sink and escaped alive."—Mobile (Ala.) Register.

A Humorist's Workshop.

"M. Quad," the well known humorist of the Detroit Free Press, does his work in a unique den. A correspondent of the Cleveland Leader, who took a look into it the other day, thus describes it: "It was a curious room, and it looked more like a museum than a literary office. One of the smallest rooms in the building, twelve feet long by about eight feet wide, I should think, its walls were covered with bracket shelves upon which were laid all sorts of relics which M. Quad had gathered from the southern battle fields. There were flattened bullets and bursted shells, rusty canteens and old cartridge boxes, brass buttons and big belt buckles, mixed indiscriminately with the ends of flag-staffs, rusty pocket-knives and a dozen other things of like nature. Hanging crosswise on the walls were numerous guns and swords of various makes and in various stages of decomposition. That blade there flashes as brightly now as it did when some hand swung it through the air and brought it down on the head of a Union man. But the old saber beside it is rusted with the dew of many summers, and that rapier labelled Fair Oaks has lost its point, broken perhaps in human flesh. On the electric light hangs an old tin canteen, its canvass cover now faded, and its mouth filled with rust, while just below it is a villainous-looking blade painted red to imitate blood, and labelled: 'Never draw me without reason, or sheath me without honor.' There two rusty bayonets cross each other, and near them hangs a pair of heavy handcuffs, a relic of the slave trade before the war. There are two pictures in this room of Quad's; his tastes seem to run rather to blood and thunder than to poetry and art."

Cooking Beefsteak.

The first requirement is not so much a tender and juicy steak, though this is always to be devoutly desired, but a glowing bed of coals, a wire gridiron—a stout one with good-sized wires; a double one, so that you can turn the steak without touching it. The steak should be pounded only in extreme cases—when it is cut too thick and is "stringy." Attempt nothing else when cooking the steak; have everything else ready for the table; the potatoes and vegetables all in their respective dishes in the warming-closet or oven, with the door left open a little way. From ten minutes onward is needed to cook the steak. The time must depend on the size, and you can easily tell by the color of the gravy which runs from the steak, when gently pressed with a knife, as to its condition. If the master of the house likes it "rare done," when there is a suspicion of brown gravy with the red it will be safe enough to infer that it done enough for him; if, as is generally the case, the next stage is the favorite one, remove the steak from the gridiron the instant the gravy is wholly of a light brown. Remove it to a hot platter, pepper and salt it to suit your taste, put on small lumps of butter, and then for two brief moments cover it with a hot plate, two moments being sufficient to carry it to the table. One absolutely essential factor in the preparation of good beefsteak is that it must be served at once. The steak should not be permitted to stand and steam while other work is being accomplished.—Coleman's Rural World.

—The cause of the powerful muscular contraction of the claw of the common crab after it has been severed from the body with the scalpel has engaged the attention of a New York physiologist summering on the New Jersey coast. The contraction, he finds, is in the nature of a death throe to the tissue, but the rigidity continues for about forty minutes, when the rigid muscle spontaneously relaxes.

—A dumb piano is the latest device for the enjoyment of the neighbors of a musical family. It is an instrument the sound of which is so far reduced by a strong felt border between hammers and strings that the music can only be sufficiently heard by the player to enable him to distinguish between the chords. It was invented in Dresden, where the "piano nuisance" is a serious matter.—Chicago Times.

—An Italian invention is a compass, in which the needle floats upon a pool of water, tinctured with spirits of wine to prevent freezing. The whole is inclosed in a sealed case. The advantage claimed for the compass is that, while the ordinary movements of the needle are free enough, those occasioned by sudden shocks are modified and softened. The effects of the discharge of a heavy cannon and of the pitching of the vessel are thus guarded against.

—An electrical tooth pulling machine which is quick and almost painless in its operations can pull as many as seven teeth in five seconds. A pair of forceps protrude from a nickel tube which is connected with a wire. The forceps are applied to the tooth, the operator touches a spring, a spiral arrangement within the tube winds up in a wink, draws down the forceps like flash and in an instant the tooth is jerked from the jaw and cast on the floor.—N. Y. Sun.

—Those who remember the wooden cogs and screws of the cider mill of the olden time would open their eyes at the process of cider-making now in New England. By means of a grinder, as many bushels can be grated in a minute as there are horse powers used in operating the machinery. An elevator carries the apples to the hopper as fast as they can be used up. The pomace falls directly upon a platform, and when the cheese is complete the platform revolves like a railroad turntable. The cider is strained through racks and cloths. Tanks in the basement are provided for catching the juice, and by means of a pump it is brought into its various receptacles.

$65,000 WORTH OF THE FOLLOWING GOODS NOW IN OUR MAMMOTH HOUSE. $65,000

Bought at Rock Bottom Prices, and will be sold at a Small Profit to insure our Big Fall Sales.

The following goods are kept in the Boot and Shoe, Ready-made Clothing, Millinery & Cloak Departments. The style of this firm is as formerly, Wm. Colter. We have what you want in our Ready-made Clothing, Department.

And in many lines of Goods you will find they will be sold far below the regular price, as they are bargains that have been bought at Snaps during the dull Summer months, and we want to say to all our old customers and friends that we think we can give you better satisfaction this Fall than we have ever done before, from the fact that we are now associated in the Dry Goods Depart ment with Messrs. Ira Powell and Wm. Ownby, making this Department a firm by itself, for the Sale of Dry Goods, Notions, Carpets, &c., under the style of COLTER, POWELL & OWNBY, and the Ready-made Clothing, Boots and Shoes, Millinery and Cloak Departments the same as formerly, WM. COLTER. Many of our friends ask us why we have associated with partners in the Dry Goods department. In answer to this would say, anyone aware of the amount of attention a stock like this requires, saying nothing about seeing that customer have proper attention from the clerks; that our goods are kept properly, and many other reasons, wouldn't wonder if we were to have partners in all departments. It is one man's work to buy the goods right for a house like this, without giving attention to the other matters mentioned above. Of course we could do like the Old Fogy merchant, stay at home and wait for samples to to be brought to him, and give them their price. But we don't do business that way. We are always awake in the cash market, and buy goods at our own price, and not a drummers' price.

The following goods are kept in the Dry Goods, Notion, and Carpet Departments, the style of this firm is Colter, Powell & Ownby. We have what you want and have Rock bottom prices on all Dry Goods, Notions. Blanket, &c.

We are authorized to announce DR. JAMES S. BROWN, of Warsaw, as a candidate for the State Senate, from this, the 23d Senatorial District, subject to the action of the Democratic party.

We are authorized to announce J. H. McDANELL, of Warsaw, as a candidate for the State Senate, from this, the 23rd Senatorial District, subject to the action of the Democratic party.

VOTE for CARLISLE.

WITH this issue the RECORDER is nine years old.

THE Blaine hypodrome will now go into winter quarters.

IN the Lawrenceaurg, Indiana, judicial district both parties are trying to elect a Democrat for Circuit Judge.

INDIANA is being reconstructed this week, and the festive bull-dog will make its appearance on the scene next Tuesday.

THE great Southern Exposition closed last Saturday, having been a success in every particular, all of which was due to the energies of its president, Bennett H. Young.

SOME of the friends of Gen. John S. Williams are bringing him to the front as a candidate for Governor. General Williams as well as some of the other old stagers in this Commonwealth, can certainly see the handwriting on the wall.

NEXT Tuesday is the National election, and although the "rascally" Democrats are largely in the ascendency in this State, deputy United States Marshals and Bull Dog pistols will not be as numerous as in some other States.

A New York paper says: "it is now stated authoritatively that the Italian government will, during the month of November, contract for an additional 3,000 hogsheads of Kentucky tobacco. This will deplete our already impoverished stock."

In this issue is published the order for a primary election to nominate a Democratic candidate for State Senator in this district. The fourth of November is the day appointed, and it being the day of the Presidential and Congressional elections, no doubt a large vote will be polled.

EDUCATIONAL.

[Communications for this column must be addressed to Prof. T. H. Stephenson, Burlington, Kentucky.]

Value of Mathematics compared with the study of the Languages.

Much has been said in commendation of mathematics as a mental drill. Perhaps it has been more highly commended in this particular than its real importance would warrant. All systematic mental labor gives discipline to the mind. The ability to pursue a course of reasoning steadily and logically to its conclusion is acquired only after considerable practice. It becomes a habit of the mind. Mental habits or habits of thought are quite as common as those manifested by outward actions. But great skill or mental discipline in one pursuit does not insure it in every other, but certainly aids in acquiring it. Great skill in mathematics and ability to solve problems does not insure ability to reason well on abstract subjects. In a problem there exists between the quantities natural relations, and some minds perceive them readily, and pursue them step by step to the conclusion The ability to perceive the relations with many, is natural, and one step suggests the next till the conclusion is reached. Where talent exists, very little drill is requisite to insure proficiency. There have been prodigies in mathematics who have been pigmies in every thing else. The value of mathematics, in its practical application, is too obvious to admit of question but as a mental drill, its claim to superior excellence, is more questionable. The mind acquires strength and efficiency by use; it acquires discipline by the prosecution of any study systematically, and just so every study is pursued in the schoolroom. The thinking done, and the studious habit acquired in school, are, perhaps, more valuable than the knowledge obtained.

But the ability to communicate knowledge, is important as well as the knowledge itself. The study of foreign languages affords a sure means of acquiring this facility of expression. It gives constant practice in expressing in English the thoughts of the author in the text. It is impossible in a small vocabulary to give all the different shades of meaning to the words and the student must exercise his taste and judgment in selecting that word which most nearly expresses the meaning of the text. In reading a passage it is easy to see the meaning of it as none of the English terms given in the vocabulary just express it and a word of kindred signification must be chosen for the purpose. It has been said of persons who have studied foreign languages that they are generally more fluent and express themselves with greater precision than persons versed only in their vernacular. The ability to express just what we mean is certainly much to be desired; the ability to express it fluently, forcibly, and elegantly is an accomplishment of the highest order. The celebrated John Locke opposed the study of the languages, insisting that the time should be spent in obtaining ideas, but ideas without the ability to express them are a sort of miserly possession, the only satisfaction of which is the having of them. There are persons so deficient in language that they can hardly communicate intelligibly the simplest thoughts, and others of more than ordinary intelligence, who use words as if they were not the signs of definite ideas. Cromwell certainly had some ideas, but his incoherent utterances, which his contemporaries chose to dignify with the name, "speeches," have remained an enigma to the present day, and although he was a minister, it has never been suspected that that Apostolic endowment, the gift of tongues, was ever conferred on him

THE footings of the official vote in Ohio are as follows: For Secretary of State: Robinson, rep., 391,599; Newman, dem., 380,275; Morris, p., 9,857, Herold, G., 3,780. Robinson has a plurality of 11,324, and lacks 2,113 ot a majority.

For Supreme Judge: Johnson, R., 392,917; Martin, D., 377,953; Roseborough, P., 9,857; Grogan, G., 3,780 Johnson's plurality, 13,954; majority, 217.

For Member of Public Works: Flickinger, R., 393,885; Benfer, D., 376,802; Kirkendal, P., 9,004; Ogden, G., 3,527; Flickeringer's plurality, 17,083; majority, 1,552.

THE Masonic Grand Lodge in session in Louisville last week elected the following grand officers for the present year:

Grand Master—John G. Orndorff, of Russellville.

Deputy Grand Master—Bernard G. Witt, of He[illegible]n.

Grand Senior Warden—Jas. W. Hopper, of Lebanon.

Grand Junior Warden—A. H. Shirley, of Richmond.

Grand Treasurer—John H. Loathers, of Louisville, and Grand Secretary Hiram Basset of Millersburg, were elected to their respective offices.

Grand Chaplain—Henry R. Coleman, of Louisville.

Grand Tyler—Joseph T. Davidson, of Louisville.

HON. POLK LAFFOON received a majority of about twenty-five votes over Clay, for the Democratic nomination for Congress in the Second District.

To the Democracy of the Counties of Owen, Gallatin and Boone, composing the 23rd Senatorial District of the State of Kentucky.

At the solicitation of the candidates for the office of Senator from this State Senatorial district it is ordered by the District Democratic Committee that a primary election be held at the several precincts or voting places in Owen, Gallatin and Boone counties on the 4th day of November next to ascertain the choice of the Democrats of the district for State Senator.

The several county committees are requested to meet and appoint two judges and a clerk in each precinct or voting places to take the vote and they will report the same, when taken to the chairman of the county committee of their respective counties, duly signed and certified by them.

All persons who possess the qualifications of voters in their respective precincts, and who belong to the Democratic party or vote the Democratic ticket at the presidential election shall be entitled to a vote in said primary election.

In appointing judges and clerks to hold said election, the county committees will select, as near as may be a friend of each candidate at each o the voting places.

The chairman of the county committees of said counties will meet in person or by proxy at Warsaw, Gallatin county on Saturday following said election, compare the vote and announce the result.

Done by order of the Democratic District committee of the 23rd Senatorial district of Kentucky.

J. J. ORR, Chm. of Com.
J. G. FURNISH, Chm. of Boone.

In pursuance to the above call the following judges and clerks are appointed to act in their respective voting precincts, with the request that in case of their failure to act, some other Democrat of good standing be selected, and that the poll-books be forwarded to me at Burlington as soon after the election as possible:

Taylorport—Henry McGlasson, J. A. Riddell, judges; W. B. Grubbs, clerk.
Bullittsville—W. A. Goodridge, John Stephens, judges; W. C. Watts, clerk.
Petersburg—L. A. Loder, N. S. Walton, judges; J. C. Stott, clerk.
Bellevue—T. H. Sutton, A. Corbin, judges; J. S. Huey, clerk.

Next Monday the Justices of the Peace, when organized as a court, will be confronted by a voluminous petition requesting the abatement of the public nuisance in the rear of the jail. The young man is certainly to be sympathized with.

Judge Riddell's suggestion that the town should purchase a lot of buckets and other implements necessary for organizing a bucket brigade, is a good one. Burlington has been very fortunate in not having many large and destructive conflagrations, but one may visit the place any day or night and destroy much property, which might be saved by a proper organization and equipment. The best time to prepare to defend against a fire is previous to being called to the scene of action.

ONE DAY AT A TIME.

One day at a time! That's all it can be;
No faster than that is the hardest fate.
And days have their limits, however we Begin them too early and stretch them late.
One day at a time!
It's a whole some rhyme,
A good one to live by,
A day at a time.

One day at a time! Every heart that aches
Knows only too well how long that can seem;
But it's never to-day which the spirit breaks,
It's the darkened future without a gleam.
One day at a time!
It's a wholesome rhyme,
A good one to live by,
A day at a time.

One day at a time! A burden too great
To be borne, for two can be borne for one;
Who knows what will enter to-morrow's gate?
While yet we are speaking all may be done.
One day at a time!
It's a wholesome rhyme,
A good one to live by,
A day at a time.

One day at a time! When joy is at height—
Such joy as the heart can never forget—
And pulses are throbbing with wild delight,
How hard to remember that suns must set.
One day at a time!
It's a wholesome rhyme,
A good one to live by,
A day at a time.

One day at a time! But a single day,
Whatever its load, whatever its length;
And there's a bit of precious Scripture to say
That, according to each, shall be our strength.
One day at a time!
It's a wholesome rhyme,
A good one to live by,
A day at a time.

One day at a time! 'Tis the whole of life!
All sorrow, all joy, are measured therein,
The bound of our purpose, our noblest strife,
The one only countersign, sure to win!
One day at a time!
It's a wholesome rhyme,
A good one to live by,
A day at a time.

MR. PUDSTER'S RETURN.

CHAPTER I.

Mr. Solomon Pudster and Mr. Gideon Maggleby were bosom friends, nor could they well be otherwise. They were both born on the 2?th of May, 1815, in Gower street, Bloomsbury; Solomon entering upon the world's stage at an early hour in the morning, at No. 69, and Gideon first seeing the light about midday at No. 9?. At the age of ten the boys were sent to Westminster School; at the age of seventeen they became fellow-clerks in the great West India warehouse of Ruggleton, Matta & Co.; at the age of four-and-twenty into partnership as sugar merchants in Mincing Lane. At that period they were bachelors; and being already sincerely attached one to the other, they decided to live together in a pleasant little house in the fashionable neighborhood of Fitzroy Square. For years they were almost inseparable. Day after day they breakfasted and dined together at home, and worked and lunched together in the city; and but for the fact that the firm purchased a large sugar estate in Demerara, Solomon Pudster and Gideon Maggleby would probably have never been parted for more than a few hours at a time until death decreed a dissolution of their partnership. The sugar estate, unfortunately, required a great deal of looking after; and at regular intervals of two years one of the partners was obliged to cross the Atlantic and to remain absent from his friend for five or six months. Solomon and Gideon alternately undertook these troublesome expeditions, and braved the heat and mosquitoes of the tropics; and meantime the firm of Pudster and Maggleby prospered exceedingly, and no shadow of a cloud came between the devoted friends—the former of whom, on account of his being a few hours older, was declared senior partner in the firm.

But in the year 1865 an important event happened. Mr. Pudster and Mr. Maggleby ran down by train one evening to see the fireworks at the Crystal Palace; and on their return journey they found themselves in a compartment the only other occupant of which was a remarkably buxom and cheery-looking widow of about forty years of age. The two gentlemen, with their accustomed gallantry, entered into conversation with her. They discovered that she and they had several friends in common, and that she was, in fact, a certain Mrs. Bunter, whose many domestic virtues and abounding good-nature had often been spoken of in their hearing. They were charmed with her; they begged, as if with one accord, to be permitted to call upon her at her house in Chelsea and when, after putting her into a cab at Victoria Station, they started off to walk home, they simultaneously exclaimed with enthusiasm: "What a splendid woman!"

"Ah, Gideon!" ejaculated Mr. Pudster, sentimentally, a few moments later.

"Ah, Solomon!" responded Mr. Maggleby, with equal passion.

"If only we had such an angel at home to welcome us," continued the senior partner.

"Just what I was thinking," assented Mr. Maggleby, who thereupon looked up at the moon and sighed profoundly.

"No other woman ever affected us in this way, Gideon," said Mr. Pudster; "and here we are at fifty——"

"Fifty last May, Solomon."

"Well, we ought to know better!" exclaimed Mr. Pudster, with warmth.

"So we ought, Solomon."

"But upon my word and honor, Gideon, Mrs. Bunter's a magnificent specimen of her sex."

"She is, Solomon; and I don't think we can conscientiously deny that we are in love with her."

"We are," said Mr. Pudster, with much humility.

Having thus ingenuously confessed their passion, the two gentlemen walked on in silence; and it was not until they were near home that they again spoke.

"I suppose that it will be necessary as a matter of formal business," suggested Mr. Pudster, diffidently, "for us to call upon Mrs. Bunter and apprise her of the state of our feelings. We mean, of course, to follow the matter up?"

"Certainly, certainly," agreed Mr. Maggleby; "we mean to follow the matter up."

"Perhaps the firm had better write to her and prepare her mind," proposed the senior partner, with kindly forethought.

"The firm had better write to-morrow, Solomon; but, Solomon, it occurs to me that the firm can not marry Mrs. Bunter. You or I must be the happy man; and then, Solomon, we shall have to separate."

"Never!" ejaculated Mr. Pudster, who stopped and seized his friend by the hand—"never! You shall marry Mrs. Bunter, and we will all live together."

"Solomon, this magnanimity!" murmured Mr Maggleby, who had tears in his eyes. "No; I will not accept such a sacrifice. You, as the senior partner, shall marry Mrs. Bunter; and, with her permission, I will stay with you. The firm shall write to prepare her mind. Business is business. The firm shall write to-night; and I myself will take the letter to the post."

Half an hour later Mr. Maggleby handed to Mr. Pudster a letter, of which the following is a copy:

14 MINCING LANE, CITY, August 4, 1865.

To Mrs. Ferdinand Bunter, Matador Villa, Chelsea.

MADAM: Our Mr. Pudster will do himself the honor of calling upon you to-morrow between twelve and one, in order to lay before you a project which is very intimately connected with the comfort and well-being of the undersigned. We beg you, therefore, to regard any proposition that may be made to you by our Mr. P. as made to you on behalf of the firm and with its full authority. We remain, madam, most devotedly yours,

PUDSTER & MAGGLEBY.

"How will that do?" asked Mr. Maggleby, with a conscious pride.

"Excellently well, Gideon," said Mr. Pudster. "But don't you think that 'most devotedly yours' sounds rather too distant? What do you say to 'yours admiringly,' or 'yours to distraction?'"

"'Yours to distraction' sounds best, I think," replied Mr. Maggleby, after considerable reflection. "I will put that in and recopy the letter, Solomon."

"We are about to take an important step in life," said Mr. Pudster, seriously. "Are you sure, Gideon, that we are not acting too hastily?"

"Mr. Pudster!" exclaimed Mr. Maggleby, warmly, "we may trust these sacred promptings of our finer feelings. We have lived too long alone. The firm needs the chaste and softening influence of woman. And who in this wide world is more fitted to grace our board than Mrs. Bunter?"

"So be it, then," assented the senior partner.

Mr. Maggleby recopied the letter, signed it with the firm's usual signature, and carried it to the nearest letter-box. When he returned he found his friend waiting to go to bed, and trying to keep himself awake by studying the marriage service.

On the following forenoon Mr. Pudster, with the scrupulous punctuality that is characteristic of city men, called at Matador Villa, Chelsea, and was at once shown into the presence of Mrs. Bunter, who was waiting to receive him. "I am quite at a loss to understand why you have done me the honor of coming to see me to-day," said the widow. "From your letter, I judge that you have some business proposal to make to me. Unfortunately, Mr. Pudster, I am not prepared to speculate in sugar. I am not well off. But perhaps I am under a misapprehension. The letter contains an expression which I do not understand."

"It is true," replied the senior partner, "that we have some hope of persuading you to speculate a little in sugar; and there is no reason why your want of capital should prevent your joining us."

"I quite fail to grasp your meaning," said Mrs. Bunter.

"Well, I am not very good at explanations," said Mr. Pudster, "but I will explain the situation as well as I can. You see, Mrs. Bunter, Mr. Maggleby, my partner, and myself are bachelors and live together. We find it dull. We long for the civilizing influences of woman's society. We are, in fact, tired of single blessedness. The firm is at present worth a [illegible] thousand a year. It will support a third partner, we think; and so we propose, Mrs. Bunter, that you should join it, and come and take care of us in a friendly way."

Mrs. Bunter looked rather uncomfortable, and was silent for a few moments. "You are very good," she said at last; "but although I am not well off, I had not thought of going out as a housekeeper. The late Mr. Bunter left me enough for my little needs."

"I hope so, indeed, madam. But we don't ask you to come to us as a housekeeper simply. Marriage is what we offer you, Mrs. Bunter. In the name of Pudster & Maggleby I have the honor of proposing for your hand."

"Mercy," exclaimed Mrs. Bunter, in some agitation. "Surely you would not have me marry the firm?"

"I put it in that way," said Mr. Pudster, "because Maggleby and I are practically one and the same. But I will be accurate. The proposition is, Mrs. Bunter, that you should become the wife of—ahem—the senior partner, and that Mr. Gideon Maggleby should live with us in his old sociable way. Excuse my blunt way of expressing myself, Mrs. Bunter."

"Then you, Mr. Pudster, are the senior partner," said Mrs. Bunter, with a very agreeable smile, "I am very much flattered, I assure you, but your proposal requires consideration."

"No doubt," assented Mr. Pudster. "The firm is willing to wait for your reply. In matters of business we are never in a hurry. When may we look for your answer?"

"Well, you shall have a note by to-morrow morning's post," replied Mrs. Bunter. "I may say," she added, "that I have heard a great deal of your firm, Mr. Pudster; and that I am conscious that it does me great honor by thus offering me a partnership in it."

"Indeed, madam, the honor is ours!" said Mr. Pudster, bowing as he retired.

No sooner had he departed than the widow burst into a long and merry fit of laughter. Her first impulse was to write and refuse the ridiculous offer; but as the day wore on she thought better of the affair, and in the evening after dinner she sat down quite seriously and wrote a letter as follows:

MATADOR VILLA, CHELSEA, August 5, 1865.

To Messrs. Pudster & Maggleby, 14 Mincing Lane, City.

GENTLEMEN: I have decided to accept the very flattering offer which was laid before me to-day on your behalf by your Mr. Pudster. If he will call, I shall have much pleasure in arranging preliminaries with him. I remain, gentlemen, very faithfully yours

MARIA BUNTER.

"I must fall in with their humor, I suppose," she reflected. "And really, Mr. Pudster is a very nice man, and almost handsome; and I'm sure that I shall do no harm by marrying him. Besides, it is quite true that they must want some one to look after them. If they go on living by themselves, they will grow crusty and bearish." And Mrs. Bunter sent her maid out to post the letter.

Three weeks later the widow became Mrs. Pudster; Mr. Maggleby, of course, officiating as best man at the wedding, and being the first to salute the bride in the vestry after the ceremony. Thenceforward, for a whole year, the three members of the firm lived together in complete harmony; and the pleasant history of their existence was only interrupted by Mr. Pudster's enforced departure for Demerara in September, 1866. Mr. Maggleby, it is true, offered to go instead of him; but Mr. Pudster would not hear of it: and Maggleby was obliged to confess that business was business, and that it was certainly Mr. Pudster's turn to brave the mosquitoes. And so, after confiding his wife to the care of his friend, Mr. Pudster departed. During his absence all went well; and in March, 1867, he returned to England. But this time the heat had been too much for poor Mr. Pudster. His wife noticed that he was looking unwell. Maggleby, with sorrow, perceived the same. Pudster laughed. Nevertheless, he soon took to his bed; and after a long and painful illness died.

The grief of Mrs. Pudster and Mr. Maggleby was terrible to witness. Mrs. Pudster talked of retiring from the world; and Gideon Maggleby disconsolately declared that he had no longer anything left to live for. No one, therefore, will be much surprised to hear that toward the end of March, 1868, Mr. Gideon Maggleby led Mrs. Solomon Pudster to the altar.

"Solomon will bless our union," Mr. Maggleby had said when he proposed.

"Ah, dear, sainted Solomon!" Mrs. Pudster had exclaimed as she fell weeping upon Mr. Maggleby's breast.

CHAPTER II.

Mr. Gideon Maggleby had been married rather less than two-and-twenty hours, when at about nine o'clock in the morning of March 23, 1868, he walked into the room in which he had so often breakfasted and dined with his late friend and partner, Solomon Pudster. Mr. Maggleby, who was preeminently a man of business, had not seen fit to go to the Isle of Wight or to Paris to spend his honeymoon; and Mrs. Maggleby, who was nothing if not a woman of sound sense, had loyally accepted the decision of her third lord and master. They had agreed to stay in town, and not to allow their new happiness to interfere with their material interests in Mincing Lane. Mr. Maggleby had determined, however, to make a holiday of the day after his wedding; to stay at home in the morning with his wife, to escort her to Madame Tussaud's in the afternoon, and to take her to the play in the evening.

With this comfortable programme in his mind's eye, Mr. Maggleby came down to breakfast in his flowered dressing-gown. Mrs. Maggleby, he knew, would not be many minutes behind him, and he therefore rang the bell for the coffee, and turned lazily toward the table, upon which lay two piles of letters. The smaller heap chiefly consisted of missives addressed to Mrs. Pudster, for the marriage of the previous day had not as yet been noised abroad in the country, and Mrs. Maggleby had several female correspondents who communicated with her much more often than she communicated with them. The large bundle was made up of letters addressed either to Mr. Maggleby or to Messrs. Pudster & Maggleby, the letters to the firm having been already brought down from Mincing Lane by a confidential clerk.

It was a chilly morning; and Mr. Maggleby, with the letters in his hand, sank into an easy-chair by the fireside, and then began to polish his spectacles. But ere he had time to complete that operation, one envelope attracted the attention of his not very dim-sighted eyes. It bore the post-mark "Plymouth," and was addressed in a familiar handwriting. Without waiting to put on his spectacles, Mr. Maggleby seized this envelope and tore it open. For an instant he stared at the letter which it contained; then he turned white and fell back with a groan. But Mr. Maggleby was a man of considerable self-command, and he soon partly recovered himself.

"Maria must not come to see me in this agitated state," he murmured, as he rose. "I shall go back to my dressing-room and decide upon some plan of action before I face her." And with unsteady steps he quitted the dining-room, taking with him the letter that was the cause of his emotion.

Almost immediately afterward a servant entered with the coffee and some covered dishes, which she set upon the table; and no sooner had she withdrawn than Mrs. Maggleby appeared. Mrs. Maggleby looked blooming, and was evidently in capital spirits. She caught up her letters, sat down smiling in the very easy-chair from which her husband had risen a few minutes earlier, and began to read. The first letters to be opened were, of course, those which were addressed to her in her new name. They contained congratulations upon her marriage. Then she attacked the envelopes that were addressed to Mrs. Pudster. One contained a bill; another contained a request for Mrs. Pudster's vote and interest on behalf of Miss Tabitha Gabbles, a maiden lady who was seeking admission into the Home for the Daughters of Decayed Trinity Pilots; and a third brought a lithographed letter from the Marquis of Palmyra, imploring the recipient to make some small subscription to the funds of the Association for the Encouragement of Asparagus Culture in the Scilly Islands. There were also letters from Martha Tigstake and Mrs. Benjamin Bowery, dealing with nothing in particular and with everything in general; and finally there was a letter bearing the postmark "Plymouth." Mrs. Maggleby opened it carelessly; but a single glance at its contents caused her to start up, grasp convulsively at the mantelpiece, utter an exclamation, and tremble like a leaf.

"Poor Gideon!" she said. "What a fearful blow! He mustn't see me in this agitated state. I shall go up-stairs again, and decide upon some plan of action before I face him." And Mrs. Maggleby, letter in hand and pale as death quitted the room, leaving the coffee and the eggs and bacon and the crumpets to get cold.

Three quarters of an hour later Mr. Maggleby ventured down stairs again. He was dressed as if to go to the city, and in his hand he held a letter which bore the simple address, "Maria." This letter he laid upon his wife's plate. It was worded as follows:

MY DEAREST LIFE: I am suddenly and unexpectedly summoned to Mincing Lane on business of the greatest importance. I do not know exactly when I shall return, but you must not be anxious. Your devotedly, GIDEON.

Mr. Maggleby hastily seized a tepid crumpet, and without the formality of seating himself at the table, devoured the clammy dainty. Then, hearing his wife upon the stairs, he rushed like a madman from the room, and an instant afterward left the house and quietly closed the front door behind him.

Mrs. Maggleby, whose face bore traces of recent weeping, entered the dining-room as if she expected to find the place tenanted by a ghost. Discovering, however, that it was empty, she resumed her seat by the fire, and, with an hysterical outburst, buried her head in her hands.

"Poor, dear Gideon!" she sobbed. "What will become of him and me? We shall be imprisoned for life; I know we shall. The house will have to be shut up; the business will go to ruin; the servants will have to know all! Oh, it is too terrible! But I must compose myself. Gideon will be coming down, and I must be prepared to break the news to him;" and with great self-command Mrs. Maggleby wiped her eyes and seated herself at the table. As she did so she caught sight of her husband's note, which she eagerly opened.

"He has gone!" she exclaimed, despairingly, when she had read it. "I am left alone to bear the trial! Ah, Gideon, you little know how cruel you are. But I must follow you. We must concert measures at once."

Once more she went up stairs. She put on her bonnet and cloak; she covered her flushed face with a thick veil; and without saying a word to any of her servants, she left the house, and made the best of her way to the nearest cab stand.

Meantime, Mr. Maggleby had been driven to his place of business in Mincing Lane. He entered his office, and sat down as if dazed in his private room. Hearing of his principal's unexpected arrival, the head clerk, Mr. John Doddard, almost immediately appeared. He, too, was scared and breathless.

"Read, sir, read," he gasped, as he thrust an open letter into Mr. Maggleby's hand.

Mr. Maggleby mechanically took the letter, and read aloud as follows:

ON BOARD S. S. CAMEL, OFF PLYMOUTH, Tuesday.

DR. MR. DODDARD: As you are probably not expecting me, I send a line ashore to let you know that I hope to return in time to be at business at the usual hour on Thursday. Please take care that there is a good fire in my private room, as a visit to Demerara always, as you know, renders me particularly sensitive to cold and damp. I am writing to Mr. Maggleby. We have had a capital voyage so far, but the weather in the Channel threatens to be rather dirty. I shall land at Gravesend, and if you can find out when the Camel is likely to be there you may send down some one to meet me.

Yours faithfully, SOLOMON PUDSTER.

"I knew it!" ejaculated Mr. Maggleby. "I have just received the letter that he speaks of."

"What does it all mean?" asked Mr. Doddard. "I seem to be dreaming, sir. We buried poor Mr. Pudster eight months ago, didn't we?"

"So I thought," murmured Mr. Maggleby vaguely. "But this letter is certainly in his handwriting. And look at the post-mark. There it is, as plain as possible: 'Plymouth, March 22, 1868.' That was yesterday, and to-day is Wednesday, March 23d. Just read my letter, Mr. Doddard." and he pulled from his pocket a missive, which he handed to his clerk.

Mr. Doddard read as follows:

ON BOARD S. S. CAMEL, OFF PLYMOUTH, Tuesday.

MY DEAR GIDEON: Here I am almost at home again. I fancy that you didn't expect to see me just at present; for I wasn't able to write to you before we left Demerara; so, as we are now sending ashore here, I post you a few lines to prepare you for the surprise. It is, as you know, quite unusual for vessels of this line to call at Plymouth, and, therefore I haven't time to send you a long letter, though. If we also call at Southampton, I will write again from there. I have told Doddard to send some one to meet me at Gravesend; let him take down any letters that you may want me to see at once. Yours affectionately, SOLOMON.

"Well, I never did!" cried Mr. Doddard. "Yet I could swear to Mr. Pudster's handwriting anywhere. It is a terrible thing for a man who ought to be lying quietly in his coffin to come back like this, and upset everyone's calculations."

"You are quite certain about the handwriting?" asked Mr. Maggleby, anxiously.

"Quite certain!" replied Mr. Doddard. "What a frightful thing for Mrs. Pudster?"

"Mrs. Maggleby, you mean!" said Mr. Maggleby. "Yes, I don't know how to break it to her. It's a case of bigamy; isn't it?"

"Let us hope for the best, sir. Mr. Pudster won't prosecute, I fancy, considering the peculiar character of the circumstances. It's his fault. That's my opinion. I could swear, even now, that we buried him. He must have revived in his coffin, and been dug up by the grave-diggers; and must then have gone over to Demerara, in order to avoid shocking his poor wife."

"I wonder our Demerara agents didn't say something about it when they wrote by the last mail," said Mr. Maggleby.

"Oh, of course he kept them quiet, sir. But it's a cruel case—that's all I have to say. And though I have known Mr. Pudster these thirty years, and liked him, too, I don't hesitate to say that he's not behaving straightforwardly in this piece of business."

"Hush! Wait until you know of his motives," said Mr. Maggleby.

"He can't excuse himself, sir, I tell you," said Mr. Doddard, warmly. "If he comes back, I go. So there! And I say it with all respect to you, sir. When a man's once dead he's got no right to come back again. It isn't natural, and what's more, it isn't business-like."

The bitterness of Mr. Doddard's remarks in this connection may be partly accounted for by consideration of the fact that Mr. Maggleby had a few days previously announced his intention of taking the head-clerk into partnership at an early date. Mr. Pudster's return of course knocked this project in the head.

"Well, Doddard," said Mr. Maggleby, "we can't mend matters by talking. We can only wait and perhaps, when we see Mr. Pudster, we shall find that——"

But Mr. Maggleby's philosophical remarks were suddenly cut short by the unexpected arrival of Mrs. Maggleby upon the scene. She rushed into the private room, stretched forth a letter, and fell sobbing upon her husband's neck.

Mr. Maggleby placed his wife in a chair, opened a cupboard, gave her a glass of wine, took the letter and read it. Like the others, it was dated from on board the Camel, off Plymouth:

"MY OWN DEAREST WIFE," it ran, "In a few hours from this I shall, I hope, be with you once more in [illegible]. I ought to have already apprised you of the probable date of my return, but at the last moment before starting I had no opportunity of writing. How glad I shall be to see you! My long absence has been a great trial to me, and I feel sure that it has also tried you; but it is now almost at an end. I will, if possible, write again from Southampton and tell you exactly when to expect me. The sea in the channel is so rough at present that it is difficult to say when we shall get into the river. Your ever loving husband, SOLOMON."

"It is most painful!" gasped Mrs. Maggleby. "What can we do, Gideon? You must manage to meet Solomon at Gravesend. Look in the newspaper, and see whether the Camel has been signalled yet. He must hear first of what has happened either from my lips or from yours and I am really not well enough to go myself. I thought that he was lying cold in his coffin. Oh, that I should have committed bigamy! I ought to have remained faithful to his memory. This is my punishment. But he must—he shall forgive me."

Mr. Doddard had gone into the outer office, and had sent a clerk for a copy of the Times. With this he now returned; and the paper was opened on Mr. Maggleby's table and eagerly scanned for news of the Camel.

"Here we have it!" said Mr. Doddard at last. "'Steamship Camel, from Demarara to London, with cargo and passengers, was signaled off Dover at one o'clock this morning.' Then Mr. Pudster will be at Gravesend in an hour or two, sir."

"Go, Gideon, go!" exclaimed Mrs. Maggleby. "Lose no time. Take a special train if necessary. Tell him all, and implore his forgiveness."

"Yes, I think I had better go, Maria," said Mr. Maggleby. "I will send a clerk home with you, and will telegraph to you as soon as I see your—your late husband. In the meantime, try to be calm. Please tell them to call a cab, Doddard." Mr. Doddard returned to the outer office, and dispatched a messenger for two cabs. Mr. Maggleby handed Mrs. Maggleby into one of them and a clerk followed her. Then the unfortunate man went back for a moment to his private room to study Bradshaw on the best and speediest route from London to Gravesend. There was a train at a quarter past eleven. It was then a quarter to eleven.

"And when will he be at Gravesend?" asked Mr. Maggleby.

Mr. Doddard turned again to the Times. But instead of at once lighting upon the shipping news, his eye fell upon a paragraph that occupied a very conspicuous position at the foot of the page. Suddenly he uttered a cry.

"What's the matter, Doddard?" demanded Mr. Maggleby, who was rapidly growing impatient.

Mr. Doddard replied by bursting into a paroxysm of laughter. "By Jove!" he exclaimed, "this is too ridiculous! I never heard of such a thing in my life! It is like a play! Ha ha, ha!"

"Your merriment is rather ill-timed," cried Mr. Maggleby reproachfully. "Tell me when Mr. Pudster will arrive at Gravesend; and be quick, or I shall lose that train."

"A pump, too!" continued the head-clerk hilariously.

"You're mad, I think," said Mr. Maggleby. "What do you mean?"

"Well, read this, sir," answered Mr. Doddard, and he handed the Times to his principal and pointed to the paragraph.

Mr. Maggleby took the paper, adjusted his spectacles, and read:

EXTRAORDINARY DISCOVERY AT PLYMOUTH.

The corporation of Plymouth recently decided to remove an old and disused pump which for many years has stood handleless and dry on The Hoe. Yesterday morning some workmen proceeded to remove it, and in its interior they were astonished to discover a number of letters, which had, it is supposed, been put into the hole into which the handle formerly fitted, under the delusion that the pump was a Post-office pillar letter-box. The letters were at once taken to the Plymouth Post-office, and were without delay forwarded to their destinations."

"Can it be true?" ejaculated Mr. Maggleby, with a great sigh of relief. "Then the fact of the Camel having been signalled last night off Dover is merely a coincidence?"

"Most certainly," said Mr. Doddard.

"Thank heaven!" cried Mr. Maggleby, fervently. "Send the cab away, Doddard. But no! I'll go home again at once, and set my poor wife at ease. Ha, ha! I do remember, now, that when poor Mr. Pudster came home from his last voyage he discovered that some letters which he had posted at Plymouth had not been delivered. We didn't miss them, because, as you recollect, Doddard, he wrote again from Southampton."

"Of course he did, sir," said Mr. Doddard. "Well, let us congratulate ourselves. It would have been a fearful business for Mrs. Maggleby to have to go through."

"And it would have been bad for you, Doddard, for it would have spoilt your chance of a partnership for some time to come. Now I'm off."

Mr. Maggleby put the Times in his pocket and departed; and when he reached his home and showed the paper to his wife, the couple sat together for at least half an hour, talking over the extraordinary nature of the adventure.

"Well, we shall be able to go to Madame Tussaud's and the theater after all, Maria," said Mr. Maggleby at luncheon.

And go they did; and what is more, Mr. Doddard became a partner a fortnight later, the firm thenceforward being known as Maggleby & Doddard.—Chambers' Journal.

Packing Fruits.

While we are inclined by a fellow-feeling which we are told "makes us wondrous kind," to defend our brother farmers from unjust aspersions upon their probity, yet we can not refrain upon that account from consistently pointing out to them their faults and earnestly enjoining any needed reformation. And a timely homily might be given to farmers upon the subject of packing fruits. This text was brought to mind very recently upon seeing some crates of peaches opened in the market. They were what is called sandwiched or plated. All outside were fair specimens of good size as far as could be seen, but under these were runts and culls of a very mean kind. Probably this sort of dishonest packing is more common among peaches than with any other fruit, but it is at times found to be practiced, with apples and pears and also with potatoes. It is very mean business. But it is worse than that; it is excessively foolish, for it does not profit the packer in the least, and he has some labor for his pains in the trouble of packing his products in this way, and he loses money by it. It is a double loss, in fact. It reminds us of that foolish bird, the ostrich, which is said to hide its head in the sand when pursued, and because it can not see it believes it is not seen.

Now, the dishonest, foolish, and self-deluded farmer, who is so wanting in self-respect as to make himself known as a cheat in this way, never deceives anybody. His vain tricks are well known to the purchasers of his fruit, etc., and they discount the value every time. No doubt the commission agent laughs in his sleeve as he opens the crates and packages and finds therein as he expected, and credits the self-victimized farmers with the exact value of the poorest specimens in the lot, for this mode of packing damns the good with the bad, and the good never raises the value of the bad one cent. This is the foolishness of it. The dishonesty is undisguised, but the foolishness is, in many cases, not perceived by the one who commits it, and therefore we call attention to the common practice which is a blot upon the general character of farmers, who all suffer alike in public estimation.

In packing fruits for market different grades should be separated. The finest kinds will sell for double or treble as much as a mixed lot. The retailer is obliged to cull out the poorest and select the best, and it is not in human nature to work for any other man, or do work which he should have done, for nothing. The apple and pear season is begun, and the potato season will soon begin. We should urge every farmer to sort shipments and pack them separately, and mark the packages first, second and third, as the case may be, and put his name on the packages, so that in time, when suspicion, justly prevalent and watchful, is disarmed, his marks may give confidence and he may acquire a character for thorough honesty. Falstaff's remark, "How this world is given to lying," is as applicable now as it was three centuries ago. But those who practice this deception in packing fruit only rob themselves, and are and always will be poor, while the shippers whose marks are known wherever their goods may go get extreme prices and the best trade, and are rich. Thus "honesty is the best policy" in packing strawberries, peaches, apples, potatoes, and other farm produce, as well as in pecuniary matters.—N. Y. Times.

Antiquity of Agriculture.

Notwithstanding the obscurity that surrounds the beginnings of agriculture in different regions, it is settled that the dates vary exceedingly. One of the earliest examples of cultivated plants is drawn from Egypt, in the shape of a design representing figs in one of the pyramids of Gizeh. The date of the construction of the monument is uncertain authors vary in assigning it to from fifteen hundred to four thousand two hundred years before the Christian era. If we assign it to two thousand years before Christ, we would have an antiquity of four thousand years for the fig. Now, the pyramids can have been constructed only by a numerous people, organized and civilized to a certain degree, who must consequently have had an established agriculture, going back several centuries, at least, for its origin. In China, twenty-seven hundred years before Christ, the Emperor Chen-nung introduced a ceremony in which, every year, five species of useful plants were sown—viz., rice, soja, wheat, and two kinds of millet. These plants must have been cultivated for some length of time in some places to have attracted the attention of the Emperor at this period.

Agriculture seems, then, to be as ancient in China as in Egypt. The constant intercourse of the latter country with Mesopotamia justifies us in presuming that cultivation was almost contemporaneous in the regions of the Euphrates and the Nile. Why may it not have been quite as ancient in India and the Indian Archipelago? The history of the Dravidian and Malaysian people does not go back very far, and is very obscure; but there is no reason for presuming that cultivation, particularly on the banks of the rivers, did not begin among them a very long time ago.—A. de Candolle, in Popular Science Monthly.

The Farmer's Boy.

To educate boys so that they may acquire no dislike for the farm is a matter of no little anxiety to many farmers. In fact, this is one of the knotty problems of farming. It is often asserted that our boys are continually becoming more and more averse to the farm. Assuming this statement to be true the outlook is indeed a gloomy one. Under such conditions days of utter degeneracy must be rapidly approaching and inevitable ruin waits upon our country. It is singular enough that this fatal delusion has become so common among the farming community. And yet those who hold so tenaciously to this idea must be ready to admit that our native farming population is increasing. The vexed questions regarding the future occupation of the farmer's boy naturally arrange themselves into two queries: How shall we keep the boys on the farm? Is it desirable to keep them all on the farm?

The first question demands an individual answer to every boy. The parents should know best how to win their sons into sympathy with the occupation. I have known many young men who have left the farm when they became of age, and I think I know the reason why some of them left it. Most of them saw too many hours of work in the day, and too many days of work in the year, to make the farm an attractive home. It was not the hard work especially, but the never-ceasing routine from sunrise till dark, from January till December, with not a pleasant hour for a book, a sport or a rest. They were content to work in a shop, to do a variety of work requiring hard labor, but where certain hours of each day were their own. It is a very injurious notion, entertained by many farmers, that there is no time on the farm for study or pastime. I now recall with pleasure a few farmers, among whom my father is one, who always take a delight in having the last chore done before sunset. It is also a pleasure to reflect that these farmers are among the thriftiest I ever knew. It was on such farms, where a long nooning was the practice in the hot days and where a half-day all "one's own" was a frequent gift, that I have known boys to improve their time in reading, studying or in working for themselves. Such useful information, in fact a good education, combined with contentment, I have known to be obtained in this manner. If the parents did not themselves enjoy the pursuits of the boys, they did not discourage them if their efforts were praiseworthy. Every boy, too, has a feeling that he wants something of his own: a garden, a horse, a few sheep, a carriage, a little library, of which he has full possession.

The importance of encouraging the boys, of giving them a frequent holiday, of conversing with them as if you were once a boy, of making home attractive inside and out, in short, of making them feel as if something depends upon them, are subjects often enough discussed. But is it necessary that all farmers' boys should become farmers? Or, is it indeed, the best thing for agriculture that they should do so? Leaving out those who have a natural dislike for the farm, it is evident that farming itself would be the loser if none of its sons followed the law of science. The farmer's boy always carries with him sympathy and love for the farm. Being himself "out of the profession," he wields a greater influence in behalf of agriculture than a farmer of equal ability. The rights of farmers would receive much less attention than they do, if the occupation had no friends outside its own community. An influential man in sympathy with the farm, be his occupation what it may, is a wonderful prop to the agricultural interests of any country. We should, in the same manner, expect more science of direct benefit to the farmer from scientists bred upon the farm. Agriculture is so composite in its nature, its sympathies and resources are so many and so varied, that it draws support from many diverse sources, and upon the extent to which it can control these sources depend its power and its influence.—L. H. Bailey, Jr., in American Cultivator.

Successful Farming.

A Wisconsin dairyman uttered a great and pregnant truth when he remarked at a meeting of dairymen that "it was not a special dispensation of Providence that Mr. Wright received $98 per head for the yearly product of his cows, while his next door neighbor received only $30 per head." So it is not a special act of Providence that on one side of a fence the corn yields eighty bushels per acre and the hay three tons, while on the other side the products are thirty bushels of corn and barely a single ton of hay. An enterprising farmer writes that he is "cutting a second crop of clover which yields a full ton of hay per acre," and his neighbors wonder how it is. The secret is that this farmer used plaster on his clover, which made all the difference; and his other crops are equally conspicuous and remarkable because he uses fertilizers liberally as well as manure. The rain falls and the sun shines on all alike; but the better farmer gets the most good from the rain and the sun because he prepares and enriches the ground better, and so gives the natural elements better chances to exert their benign influences.—N. Y. Times.

He was in the "Agency" Business.

The base of the Appennines is an elegant country for road agents, and all the old books of travel are filled with stories of captures, ransoms, hair-breadth escapes and the like. But the railway ruined the business, and most of the gentlemen engaged in that lucrative branch of commerce have gone to America. A pious old dame who got on the train at Porreta told me that she used to receive regular remittances from her son in Nevada, until he was executed by a lawless mob who would not listen to his explanations. She said he was in the "agency" business of some kind. Judging from the appearance of the neighborhood, the looks of the old woman and the particulars of the story, it was not difficult to guess what kind of "agency" her son had been employed in. The peasants of this district are poor and adventurous; the Valley of the Reno has always been the highway of travel between the plains of Lombardy and those of Tuscany; the Appennine regions are close at hand to furnish places of refuge for lawless characters, and it is hereabouts that most of the highway robberies which followed the era of the tourist travel into Italy and preceded that of the railway, occurred.—San Francisco Chronicle.

—At a recent meeting of one of the English mechanical institutions, there was examined some cast-iron chilled tools, the exhibitor stating that with such tools, the cost of which he showed to be merely nominal, he was able to turn cast and wrought-iron and gun metal at from fifty to one hundred per cent. higher speed than with tools made from steel. Surprise was expressed that such tools were not in more general use.

—The organ of hearing is generally double, but not always located in the head. In the clam it is found at the base of the foot; some grasshoppers have it in the fore legs, and in many insects it is on the wing. Lobsters and crabs have the auditory sacs at the base of the antennæ.—Scientific American.

THE maxim: "Strike while the iron is hot," is getting altogether too slow for the age; you must make it hot by striking.

IN a letter from HON. MRS. PERY, Castle Grey, Limerick, Ireland, BROWN'S BRONCHIAL TROCHES are thus referred to: "Having brought your 'Bronchial Troches' with me when I came to reside here, I found that after I had given them away to those I considered required them, the poor people will walk for miles to get a few." For Coughs, Colds, and Throat Diseases they have no equal. Sold only in boxes.

TOPICS OF THE DAY.

The cost of running New York City for one year, is over $40,000,000.

Old Mr. I-told-you-so will be around in a few days to make a friendly call on you,

New York has a monthly magazine, conducted by a lady, and devoted entirely to the faith cure.

The season has arrived when the ice wagon should be required to give the coal wagon full right of way.

Mr. Vanderbilt has given half a million dollars to the trustees of the College of Physicians and Surgeons, New York, for a building fund.

A New York woman writes that her sisters tempt pick-pockets and purse-snatchers to rob them by the ostentatious display of money in the streets and stores.

A French woman is making money by pulling teeth at Newark, N. J. Men flock to her to have their ivories pried out, as they did to female barbers when they were a novelty.

Women are to be admitted to lectures in the University College, Toronto, and the concession is regarded as a great victory for the friends in Canada of the higher education of women.

Uncle Moses Montefiore, who has just passed his one hundredth birthday, doesn't believe in early rising. Every school-boy in America owes this good, kind man a debt of gratitude.

The $50 prize for a sermon on Slander, offered by Hon. T. H. Worrel of Washington, has been awarded to Rev. G. S. Bailey, D. D., pastor of the First Baptist Church, Ottumwa, Iowa.

Germany and Great Britian have gone into two or three weeks' mourning over the death of the Duke of Brunswick, and at the same time a pretty quarrel has arisen over his succession.

An exchange advertises "A new thing in ovens." Now that the price of wheat is so low, a little larger loaves of bread would be a new thing that patrons of baker shops would like to see.

It is said that tea can be successfully grown in South Carolina, and cured by the fruit-evaporating process, is not bad to drink—fully as good, anyhow, as the doctored-up stuff said to have been imported from China.

A deaf family in New Hampshire has been traced back to the fourteenth century in England, and in all that time has regularly shown a succession of deaf mutes. In Maine there is a family in which there are ninety-five deaf mutes, all of them connected by blood or marriage.

A French invention is a cushion of India rubber on the bottom of household objects in earthenware, porcelain, etc., so that they may be inclined at an angle of from forty-five to sixty degrees without falling over. Such an invention would prove useful on ships and among careless servants.

Some one should invent a hat especially for election betting purposes. It should be one to look respectable after numerous wettings and bangs; provided with an expansion band for morning wear, and should cost a sum large enough to make the other fellow squirm and sweat when he pays for it.

A Paris paper tells of a new science—philographic—the art of discriminating character by the beard. Close-growing hair indicates a vigorous temperament and a decided temper; coarse hair, obstinacy; fine hair, refinement and erratic tendencies; curly beards appertain to brilliant and sprightly, but superficial persons; harsh, to amiable but cold natures.

The Greek Church at Sitka, Alaska, is declared to be the most ornate house of worship in America. It is built on the plan of the Greek cross, and the interior is a mass of gold and silver, of the magnificence of which one enthusiastic writer says he can give no idea. The walls are hung with pictures of royalty and the priesthood, the gift of a Russian Princess, who has taken this temple under her special charge.

A New York "finishing school" teaches girls how to sleep gracefully. The head should recline naturally, so as not to throw the mouth open when asleep; night clothes should be neat, well-fitted and adapted to the individuality of the wearer—whatever that may mean—and the hair should be adjusted with a view to comfort and beauty. So the instructions go. The evident purpose of the school is to prevent the dear creatures from frightening burglars to death.

A curious freak of nature has been noticed by apple growers in Connecticut. In some orchards trees were found to be plentifully bearing, while others had not a single apple on them. Orchards that were adjacent showed in one field barren trees and in the other the largest yield that has been known for years. Farmers account for this by saying that worms very curiously attacked the trees or orchards that have failed, while passing over those that have so bountifully produced.

A young girl has just died in the asylum at Hamburg, who possessed the peculiar gift of changing the color of her hair according to the state of her mind. In "periods of sedateness" her hair was of its natural dull color; when she was excited it became reddish; and her anger was indicated by a blonde color. Three days were generally required for the change to be completed, and her complexion also varied in the same periods and in the same direction.

THE WAR IN EGYPT.

Khartoum Reported to be in the Hands of the Rebels and Gordon a Prisoner.

The Garrison Surrounded by 150,000 Rebels.—Eight Thousand Soldiers and Civilians Desert.

Paris, November 2.—A dispatch from Cairo to the Morning News says: "The Madhi, in the beginning of September, hearing of the advance of the British forces, made a supreme effort to reduce Khartoum, which place, at the end of September, was surrounded by 150,000 rebels. Supplies failing the garrison began to waver. A deputation of officers complained bitterly to General Gordon that they had been deceived by the promise of British assistance, and they accused him of aiding in the deception. The deputation also demanded that a retreat be made to Dongola, and threatened, if this action was not taken, that they would join the Mahdi. General Gordon thereupon consented to the plan proposed. Meanwhile a panic arose, and eight thousand soldiers and civilians deserted in a body. Two thousand men remained faithful, and embarked with Gordon. The rebels were advised of what had occurred, and harrassed the retreat to Shendy, where masses of rebels, provided with artillery, disabled the flotilla. Only Colonel Stewart's vessel succeeded in passing Berber, and shortly afterward it was wrecked. The remainder of the flotilla was obliged to return southward, and on reaching Shendy the entire force was captured. About the 5th of October General Gordon was sent under strong escort to the Mahdi's camp, where he is now a close prisoner.

London, November 2.—The Foreign Office discredits the dispatch to the Paris Morning News, announcing the capture of General Gordon. A dispatch to the Daily News, from Debbeh, says powerful Takara tribes, inimical to the Mahdi, have captured El Obeid. It is said the Mahdi's prestige is waning among the tribes between Debbeh and El Obeid.

DEADLY RIOT.

Two Prominent Democrats and Four Negroes Killed.

Several Others Wounded—Large Bodies of Men Under Arms, and Frightful Possibilities Engendered.

New Orleans, November 1.—At a Kellogg meeting at Lareauville to-day, it seems that some negroes got into a difficulty. Joe Gilfoux stepped in to quiet them when he was fired on by a negro, the ball penetrating his hat. He returned the fire without effect. By this time there was a general resort to fire-arms and a fusilade commenced. Joe Gilfoux was the first to fall, shot dead. He was one of the best citizens and a staunch Democrat. Sheriff Theo. Victor was wounded, but not dangerously. The parties who brought him in say that Captain R. Bell, a Democrat, was also shot dead. Abner Boulte, a negro politician, and three other negroes were shot dead. Jules Mealyer and Judge Fontalieu are reported among the wounded. A large number of men are under arms there, and the excitement is at fever heat. The excitement here is very great. Squads of armed men have left for the scene of conflict. The town is to be picketed and patroled to-night. A courier was dispatched to New Iberia and in a few minutes after he arrived the town was in the wildest excitement. All drinking saloons were closed by order of the Mayor. Fifty or seventy-five men left under orders of the sheriff for the scene of trouble, all armed with double-barrel shot-guns and rifles. They arrested Fontelins and Adolph Bienvenu and five white men, who are now in the Parish Jail under heavy guard. The first ball came from the negro ranks. After this it is said a thousand shots were fired simultaneously. On the battle-field it is said a dozen horses are lying dead. It is impossible to learn how many were wounded, but it is reliably reported that a great many wounded left during the excitement.

Opening Day Postponed.

New Orleans, November 1.—Colonel E. A. Burke, Director-General of the World's Industrial and Cotton Centennial Exposition, announces that, as Congress meets on the day heretofore designated for the opening ceremonies, and therefore the President and Congressmen could not then be present, the formal opening will take place at noon, December 16. Exhibits will be received until December 10, with the understanding that they must be arranged in place by the opening day. Demands upon the World's Exposition for space have exceeded any thing in the history of former Expositions. The management has added seven hundred thousand square feet exhibiting space to the buildings originally designed, and advantage will be taken of time now allowed to provide additional space for exhibitors who may rely upon every possible effort to accord reasonable space to all who may apply.

Ill-Fated Steamer Sunk.

Wheeling, W. Va., November 2.—The steamboat Regular sank at the head of Fish Creek Island Saturday afternoon, and is now lying near the shore. She was lately the property of the Wheeling and Parkersburg Transportation Company, and was seized by the U. S. Marshal on a libel in a suit against the company. She has been tied up at Sunfish, and was en route to this city to be sold when she sank. This boat seems ill-fated. She was formerly the Scioto, and her disastrous collision at Mingo is historic. Since then she has been dismantled by a gale once and sunk twice.

A Relic of Other Days.

Schenectady, N. Y., November 2.—Men digging trenches for sewers here have found at a depth of sixteen feet the old corduroy road which was laid in 1690 and led to the fort at the time of the massacre by the Indians. On another street the hollow logs which were laid in 1806, and served for pipes for the city water supply, have been found in an excellent state.

A Poisoner Riddled With Bullets.

Nashville, Tenn., November 1.—A mob of thirty masked men took the man Taylor, who poisoned five persons, from jail at two o'clock this morning, carried him half a mile up the road and literally riddled him with buck-shot, leaving the body in the road. Taylor was a cousin of the famous desperado Andy Taylor, hanged at London, some time since.

Obstreperous Students.

Toronto, Ont., November 1.—Two hundred students paraded the streets at a late hour last night, singing songs, etc., and had a collision with the police. A number of students were pretty roughly handled, and John L. Boyd, son of Vice Chancellor Boyd, was arrested, and at the Police Court fined $3 and costs, or thirty days.

THE LOUISIANA TROUBLE.

Sixteen Colored and Two White Men Reported Killed.

New Iberia, November 2.—Everything has been quiet since the Fausse Point trouble yesterday. The prisoners are still in jail, and will probably have a hearing to-morrow. A great many reports came in from Fausse Point to-day, nearly all different as to the number killed and wounded. Coroner Manville came in late this evening, and says, "There are sixteen negroes dead and two white men." All in the fight when it began say the first shot came from a negro, who fired at Jos. Gilfoux from his coat pocket. Bell and Gilfoux were killed instantly and from the first volley. The pistols taken from their bodies show they had not fired a shot when they fell. It is not known how many were killed, but it is certain sixteen and probably twenty. Nearly all those killed received wounds from stray shots. It is reported that the white Republicans present wore breast-plates. Judge Fontelieu's clothing was full of bullet-holes, but his skin was untouched. Captain Bell was buried to-day at St. Martinsville, and Joe Gilfoux at Loreauville. Bell and Gilfoux were two of Fausse Point's most respected and beloved citizens. Their friends present, six or eight men, were so infuriated that they went into the battle regardless of every thing, and fought bravely. A great many negroes stood and fought until they emptied their pistols. The majority, however, stampeded. Hundreds of them jumped into the bayou, and some, being wounded, did not get out, and others ran, and some fell down on the way and died. One negro was found near by in his cabin dead without a bruise. No further trouble is expected.

PANIC IN A SCOTLAND THEATER.

Sixteen Persons Killed and Twelve Seriously Injured.

Glasgow, November 1.—A serious panic occurred this evening at the Star Theater, caused by a cry of fire. During the rush of the audience to escape from the building sixteen people were killed and twelve seriously injured. The performance had proceeded without interruption until shortly after 9 o'clock, when some person shouted "Fire!" The whole audience instantly rose to their feet and made a rush to the several exits. The great mass of people in the "pit" rushing therefrom, met the crushing crowd pouring down from the gallery, and a fearful and fatal block followed. Wild shrieks of agony and despairing cries for help could not then be answered. The mass of panic-stricken and struggling humanity were appealed to by officers of the theater and by police to hold back, but the appeals were unheeded. The crazed crowd frantically pressed toward the outlets, trampling down and over the weaker ones, until the street was reached. When the theater was finally cleared sixteen corpses were found on the stairs leading from the gallery, and twelve persons were so badly injured that they only gave evidence that life was not extinct by their piteous moanings. Upon the first alarm being rung the whole fire brigade quickly went to the rescue, and with the police did their utmost to allay the panic and rescue the dead and dying, but they were too late to be of any effective service. Police and citizens followed, and succeeded in forcing their way into the building, and then aided all they could the escape to the street, but the crowd was so wedged that they were sadly interfered with in their humane labors. The city ambulance corps conveyed the wounded and dead to the infirmary. The wounded were so overcome that they were as helpless as the dead. It was learned that the author of the cry of fire was a former employe of the theater, who had been dismissed. The audience numbered about two thousand people. The performance was chiefly music hall business. Another account says the alarm arose while a trapeze performer was taking a dive from the ceiling of the theater to a net hanging in mid air. One of the audience shouted "Fire," meaning the performer had gone too near the footlights.

The Buzzard Gang.

Litiz, Penn., November 2.—The famous Buzzard gang of bandits threw this town into wild excitement yesterday by a visit to the vicinity Friday night. They robbed several houses and mills, and tried to gain entrance to several grocery stores. At one place they secured a large quantity of hams and other meat. From the White Oak Post-office they took money, stamps, nails and guns. A posse of farmers armed with guns and rifles went in pursuit and after a search of four hours came upon the gang. They were ten in number, all on horseback, and each carrying a gun and a lot of booty. A chase was made, but after being pursued ten miles the Buzzard gang, having better animals, got out of the way. By this time the whole neighborhood was aroused, and it was decided the posse should be doubled and an attack made.

Struck a Gas Vein.

Canonsburg, Pa., November 1.—The Canonsburg Iron Company struck a heavy gas vein yesterday which throws a flame fifty feet high.

Killed While Racing.

Goshen, Ind., November 2.—Samuel Wohlford, a well-to-do farmer, living near here, was thrown from his wagon while racing and was run over and received such injuries that he died therefrom Saturday.

France to Protect Her Jews.

Paris, November 1.—The French Minister to Morocco threatens reprisals unless outrages committed on Jews who are French subjects shall be stopped, and the persons injured indemnified. It is reported that at Fez, Jews, claiming French protection, were scourged for refusing to walk barefooted in the streets. Other French Jews were banished.

Fatal Collision.

Kalamazoo, Mich., November 1.—Two freight trains coming north this morning about 1 o'clock from Sturgis for a political meeting, the forward one slowed up at Nottawa, and its caboose, containing nine persons, was run into by the hind train. William Green, clerk in a hardware store at Mendon, was instantly killed, and George Koons, furniture merchant, also of Mendon, was fatally injured. Both leave families, the former a wife and three children.

The Public Debt.

Washington, November 1.—The public debt was decreased $8,307,192 during the month of October, and $32,890,373 since June 30, 1884.

Size of His Defalcation.

Augusta, Ga., November 1.—The defalcation of President Jackson, of the Enterprise Cotton Factory, is now known to be $128,000. Probably the misappropriation of funds covers a period of several years.

Methodist Minister Drops Dead.

Troy, N. Y., November 1.—Rev. Caleb A. Stevens, Methodist, dropped dead at Lansingburg just after eating breakfast this morning.

LO, POOR INDIAN.

The Questions of An Indian's Right to Vote.

The Supreme Court Decides That He is Not Entitled to Suffrage Unless Naturalized and Taxed.

Washington, November 3.—A decision was rendered by the Supreme Court of the United States this afternoon in another of the long series of cases which have arisen out of adoption of the Fourteenth and Fifteenth Amendments of the Constitution. The present case, which is that of John Elk, plaintiff in error, against Charles Wilkins, and which came from the District of Nebraska, is a suit brought by an Indian against the Registrar of one of the wards of the city of Omaha, for refusing to register him as a qualified voter therein. The questions presented are whether the plaintiff in error is a citizen of the United States, and whether he has been denied any right guaranteed by the Fifteenth Amendment to the Federal Constitution. This Court, in a long and elaborate opinion by Justice Gray, holds: First—That an Indian who is born a member of one of the Indian tribes within the United States, which still exists and is recognized as a tribe by the Government, and who has voluntarily separated himself from his tribe and taken up his residence among white citizens in a State, but who has not been naturalized or taxed or recognized as a citizen either by the United States or by the State is not a citizen of the United States within the meaning of the first section of the Fourteenth Amendment. Second—That the plaintiff in error, not being a citizen of the United States under the Fourteenth Amendment, has been deprived of no right secured by the Fifteenth Amendment, and can not maintain this action. The judgment of the Circuit Court is affirmed. Justice Harlan read a long dissenting opinion in behalf of Justices Woods and himself.

Jones, "The Avenger," Acquitted.

Washington, November 3.—The Criminal Court was filled with echoes of the Guiteau trial to-day. Jones, known as "The Avenger," was put on trial for firing into the prison van with intent to kill Guiteau. It was during the trial of Guiteau for the murder of President Garfield that one afternoon, while the van was carrying the assassin from the Court-house back to the jail, and had reached Capitol Hill, that a man dashed up on horseback and fired into the van. The ball plowed a furrow in the sleeve of Guiteau's coat, and he dropped to the floor in his fright. The jury was out twenty minutes, and returned a verdict of not guilty, which seemed acceptable to everybody, and Jones retired from the court-room surrounded by his friends.

Effects of a Cyclone.

Havana, November 3.—Porto Rico papers report large waves observed in several parts of the island during the recent cyclone. In Arecibo thirty houses inhabited by poor people were destroyed. Water entered stores, but did little damage. A schooner was cast ashore. The cyclone was felt severely in Nuevitas. The city was inundated in a few hours, causing some damage. The water at the railway station rose twenty-five centimeters above the passenger stairs. The telegraph station was struck by lightning and destroyed.

Skull Crushed by Unknown Parties.

Pittsburg, November 3.—James A. McGuire, engineer at Carroll's foundry, was found this morning lying in the engine-room in an unconscious condition, with the back of his skull crushed in. He is still living, but has not regained consciousness, and physicians say he will die. Two men who were seen in his company late last night were arrested to-night on suspicion of having made the assault.

Canadian Revenues.

Montreal, November 3.—The customs and inland revenue receipts at Montreal show a falling off in October of $129,000, compared with October, 1883. The customs decrease is attributed generally to the dullness of trade, but some claim it is caused by the Scott temperance act and the consequent shrinkage of the volume of business in spirits and beer.

A Polygamist's Sentence.

Salt Lake, Utah, November 3.—Judge Zane to-day sentenced Rudger Clawson, convicted a week ago of polygamy, to four years in the penitentiary and $800 fine. An appeal was taken, pending which his counsel moved that he be released on bail, which was refused. Clawson was remanded to the custody of the U. S. Marshal.

German Elections.

Berlin, November 3.—The result of all the elections is now known. There are 69 Conservatives elected, 95 Members of the Center, 24 Imperialists, 35 National Liberals, 34 New German Liberals, 10 Socialists, 16 Poles and 14 Alsatians. In ninety-seven districts, supplementary elections will have to be held, there having been no choice.

Powder Explosion.

Kingston, Ont., November 3.—By the premature explosion of gun powder at Bedford Station, Saturday afternoon, John McCrimmon was killed and Alpheus Brown had his jaw broken in two places, an eye put out and his hands fearfully mangled.

The Cholera.

Naples, November 3.—After lasting seventy-four days and causing the death of 7,025 persons the cholera epedemic in this city seems to have disappeared. No new cases of deaths were reported yesterday or to-day.

Reinforcements for Tonquin.

Paris, November 3.—Five thousand three hundred troops, to reinforce the French army in Tonquin, will start on or before the 15th inst. A second installment will also start a fortnight later.

Fatal Explosion of a Still.

Chester, Pa., November 3.—A still at Chester Oil Works exploded to-day, burning three men, two of them, Alex. Smith and Martin Ryan, probably fatally, and damaging the place by fire over $5,000.

Montefiore's Condition Grave.

London, November 3.—The illness of Sir Moses Montefiore is of a very grave nature. Queen Victoria telegraphed to-day, inquiring his condition.

—English agricultural journals report that a new industry has been started in East Kent, that of growing crops of lavender and peppermint for the purpose of extracting the oils. This sort of farming had long been profitably carried on in East Surrey, the rich black mold of that region being particularly favorable to the growth of the aromatic plants. But the soil of late has shown signs of rapid exhaustion, and the flower farms of Mitcham and Carshalton, so long famous, have greatly declined in productive capacity.

—The pipe lines connect with 21,000 oil wells in Pennsylvania, receiving from them daily 65,000 barrels of oil. Forty-one million barrels are stored in tanks. To transport and store this enormous quantity of oil about 5,000 miles of pipe-line and over 1,000 iron tanks of an average capacity are necessary. Besides the 5,000 miles of branch pipe lines in use in the region, there are 1,200 miles of trunk line for piping oil to the refineries at Cleveland, Buffalo and Pittsburgh.—Pittsburgh Post.

—Fires have destroyed a million dollars worth of property in Portland, Ore., since January 1.—Denver Tribune.

THE COMMONWEALTH.

Louisville Leaf Tobacco Market.

The corps of buyers has been fuller and have displayed more interest, from which it may be inferred that the present experiences and the prospects of manufactured goods have sensibly improved. Bidding has been active, especially for Burley leaf, but lugs have also attracted more attention. The range of price has been raised more or less all around, and re-offerings of rejected packages have paid good profits. New crop Burleys have been in moderate supply, selling about even with corresponding grades of old. The activity and firmness of the market are due entirely to small current supplies, in the presence of a healthy manufacturing demand. Dark and heavy styles have been firm throughout. We quote full-weight packages new-sound tobacco as follows:

	Dark and Heavy.	Burley.
Trash	$6 00@ 6 75	$ 5 00@ 5 75
Common lugs	7 00@ 7 25	6 00@ 7 00
Medium lugs	7 50@ 7 75	7 50@ 8 00
Good lugs	8 00@ 8 50	9 00@ 9 50
Common leaf	8 75@ 9 00	10 00@10 50
Medium leaf	9 50@ 9 75	11 00@12 50
Good leaf	10 50@12 00	13 50@16 50
Fine and fancy leaf	13 00@16 00	18 00@20 00

Miscellaneous Items.

Hon. Ira Julian, Democratic Elector from the Seventh Kentucky Congressional District, has tendered his resignation to Governor Knott as Representative in the General Assembly from Franklin County.

A Frankfort lady who had never attended a circus in her life went from Frankfort to Louisville to see one. The Frankfort Yeoman says she could not summon courage to be seen under a tent at home, but went abroad, where she would not be likely to meet many of her friends—but they found it out somehow.

Among the finest tobacco crops raised [illegible] are those of Joel Rector, 30,000 pounds; T. A. Rector, 2,000 pounds; David Rector, 15,000 pounds, all of Kenton County. L. F. Webster, of Grant, has 5,000 pounds, said to be of very superior quality.

John Krolle, a German carpenter, fell from the roof of a three-story building in Covington the other day, and was instantly killed. He had a fall of fifty feet some time since, escaping without much injury, while half the distance and striking on his head were fatal in the latter instance.

Bud Lane has been arrested at Atchison, Kan., for the killing of Jack Lucas near Bobtown, in Madison County, two years ago, and was brought back for trial.

Richard Tobin, of Frankfort, has been recommended by the Democratic County Committee, as a suitable candidate for Member of the Board of Equalization from the Seventh District. R. J. O'Mahoney, of Lexington, and James W. Roberts, of Henry, are also candidates.

The Directors of the Harrison County Agricultural, Mechanical and Live Stock Association, of Kentucky, held a meeting and agreed to dissolve, as their lease on Abdallah Park had expired.

The Banner is to be the name of a paper started at Tompkinsville, Monroe County, edited by R. R. Rodgers, of Missouri.

George A. Madison, of Covington, charged with the murder of his wife, has been held to answer before the Circuit Court.

Alex. Cross, a colored brick mason, was killed a few days since while at work on the new bake oven of Fred. Hesper, Bowling Green. He was doing brick work and one of the walls fell in upon him and smothered him before the bricks could be removed. No bones were broken, nor was he scarred. When the bricks were removed it was found that life was extinct.

In the Circuit Court at Frankfort, the jury in the case of Norman Brawner, charged with killing John Simmons, of color, returned a verdict of not guilty. Several weeks ago Brawner, who is only sixteen years of age, had a difficulty with George Simmons, a brother of the deceased. Simmons was much the superior of Brawner in size and strength, and whipped him most unmercifully, choking him and thumping him in the face with his fists until the services of two by-standers were necessary to pull him off. Brawner ran home, got a double-barreled shotgun, and mistaking the deceased for the man who whipped him, he shot and killed him. It was proven at the trial that Brawner had an uncontrollable temper when excited, caused by a fracture which he received on the head a few years ago, and that he was not in his right mind several hours previous to and after the shooting, and consequently was not capable of knowing right from wrong.

Adam Hoffheimer, peddler, threw a knife between John Sloss' ribs, in a money quarrel near Louisville. Adam escaped temporarily.

The coal-miners in the employ of the Livingston Coal Company, who have been out on a strike on account of the screen being larger than they thought it should be, resumed work the other morning, upon the same conditions they struck upon. The leaders of the strike will not be allowed to go back to work.

While J. W. Young, a Bath County short-horn breeder, was driving one of his fine bulls, he suddenly became enraged, and plunging at the horse which Young was riding disemboweled him, from which he died immediately. The angry animal then pursued Mr. Young, who reached a place of safety barely in time to save his own life.

Henry Roberts, colored, was found dead in an empty room of a house in Louisville, where his divorced wife lived with his children, the other morning. He had been shot. The two had not been living together for several months. It is supposed that he went to see her and she shot him. She denies that she killed him, and says she don't know how he came to be in the room.

Joseph Ryan, a stock trader of Louisville, was run over and instantly killed by an Ohio and Mississippi Railway train in Jeffersonville, Ind., the other night.

The delay of severe frost for more than a month beyond its usual time has assured the maturity of the tobacco crop, and added thousands of dollars to its value.

The business of stripping bluegrass seed, which commenced only a few years ago, has assumed large proportions, and thousands of bushels are now shipped all over the United States and Europe.

While John McCarthy, son and daughter, living near High Bridge, were returning from church their horse took fright at a railway train and ran away. The son had his wrist broken, and the daughter, in jumping, dislocated her knee joint, and it is feared sustained internal injuries.

Mrs. Ruth L. Hunter dropped dead of heart disease at her home in Louisville.

J. Smith Lindsay was crushed to death by a heavy timber near Leesburg, Harrison County.

At a meeting of business men the other night it was resolved to hold an exposition in Louisville in 1885, and plans to that effect were arranged.

At Mt. Sterling a company has been formed with $50,000 capital, for manufacturing wrought iron fences and making and repairing machinery. It is expected to have one hundred employes at work by January 1.

Dr. E. F. Evans, of Jessamine County, has twenty-seven acres of the finest tobacco in that county. It will average 1,400 pounds to the acre.

Bad Book Agents.

An indignant old gentleman, with sharp eyes and a keen knowledge of the world, was conversing with a reporter yesterday. He had something on his mind which he believed was wrong, and he showed it in his manner. Finally he said: "There are lots of tricks in all trades but ours, and they float around big cities in numerous shapes. I think I have found a new one, however, that the public don't know about, and I'll let you in on it. Of course all tricks of sharpers who want to make money are simply schemes or devices by which money is obtained under false pretense; but this savors of blackmail to a certain degree. Of course it is worked by knowing the character and motives in life of the victims who are to be fleeced, and the parties in it read the characters of their 'bird.' Every 'con' man, every bunko-steerer who goes out on the road has a knowledge of men and can see at a glance if they will bite at a chance to make money easy, or, what is more important still, if they will kick when they find their money gone. If they don't they soon get where the dogs won't bite them and where they can do the State service by wearing their hair short and wearing zebra clothes. In the new scheme, however, much more refinement is used, and the parties, who number four or five, show better taste and stand no show of ever going to the 'pen.' They wear good clothes and only mingle with the rich, refined and educated. To come down to hard facts, they are nothing more, or less than book agents with a good subscription book and perfectly legal subscription blanks or promises to pay. In this scheme one or more young ladies are required, and they work singly, soliciting orders for the books. The other parties do the advance agent work, and are never seen with a book. These people go to a town or city and quietly look around. They examine the people who are well-to-do, and make out a list of those who can afford to buy a book or series of works. When they have got the list fixed up they find out the parties' characters. If a man is charitable or religious, or egotistical on his knowledge, or inclined to be a bit fast, or liable to weaken to the tender glances of the bright eyes, they know it and these are all added to the names. Then the young ladies show up in the town with their books and the parties get acquainted. When evening comes there is a night school, and the young ladies are drilled as to how to get orders. They have the list of men on whom they are to call the next day, and the parties who have looked up the probable subscriber relates all of the characteristics. Then the women are drilled as to how to approach men and how to flirt, and are instructed to lead the men on, using any scheme until the order is obtained, and then to quit them unless there is a chance that the deluded victim of his own weakness may have and will give up more money. Some times the subscribers discover that the girl, who is working to support a sick mother, or who is homeless, or who is inclined to flirt, or be loose, or to be religious, is a fraud. Then they kick and want to get their orders back, but the signature to the blank compels them to take the book or else have the story told of the weakness which induced the subscription. No man wants the world to know anything about his being taken in, and so he swallows his dose of medicine, and pays his $5, $10, $25 or $50, and swears that he will never be caught again. This scheme has been worked in many cities in the United States and Canada. Come to think of it, I don't know that there is anything crooked in it, or that it is blackmail, and it may be only a part of a profession, which a few of the tricky adopt. It would not be right to judge all lady agents as being parties to such doings. but if you give it to 'em, do it good." The mind was relieved and the gentleman, satisfied, went on his way, and the reporter wondered if the next class of humanity would be imitating the school of Fagin to their own advantage.—Chicago Inter-Ocean.

Great Men I Have Met.

In the earlier days, when I drew my lecture from its scabbard and swept like a besom of holocaust across the land, I lectured one night in Macomb, Ill. As I passed through Bushnell I was told that I must drive up from Macomb that night after the lecture, because Schuyler Colfax would pass through Bushnell the following morning at five o'clock: he would have an hour or two to wait for a connecting train; the leading citizens had arranged a little surprise breakfast party for him; there would be much to say, something to eat and nothing to drink, and I had been appointed one of the speakers. There were no trains, but the distance was only twelve miles and I could drive.

Drive? I would walk. In those younger days to meet a great man were greater than to be a Roman, and to make a speech at a great man's reception—remember, brethren, I was young then. It was a not a snarling toothless old cynic, with ashes of disappointment on my head and the cinder of envious distrust in my eye. So I went willingly, joyously, proudly.

I believe, to meet the same man, I would do it again.

I left Macomb at midnight. The roads were not of the good, goody; they were of the bad, bady; they were prairie roads. It had been raining on them twenty-two years off and on, principally on. The night was darker than a theological controversy. It was raining like a house afire. It seemed as though old Aquarius had got mad, pulled her wide open, threw her clear over, and was running wild for the next deluge. It thundered hard enough to sour a man's temper When it lightened, which was nearly all the time, you couldn't see anything for the blinding glare. When it was dark, which was most of the time, you could reach out and feel the darkness like a fog bank. Splash, splash, splash went the horses through the mud. Where they couldn't wade they could swim. By and by there was a scrambling sound in the darkness. The driver would have disappeared if he had been apparent. As it was, without missing anybody particularly, I felt that I was alone. Presently a voice came up from the darkness:

"Where are you?"

I recognized the voice of my driver. I had not seen him since we left Macomb, but he had been swearing all the way and his voice had grown familiar to me. I said that I was right where I belonged, on the seat in the buggy, and asked where he was. He informed me that the horses had stepped upon a fallen bridge, under our end of which there had been a washout. The forward wheels were resting on the sunken bridge, while the hind ones were perched on the great round earth, which is the planet we inhabit. This accounted for the peculiar sensation I experienced of sitting on the roof of a house or the side of a mountain.

The driver further told me that he had fallen over the dashboard and was now sitting down between the horses. He had the dashboard with him, but did not know what to do with it. He concluded by asking me if I was hurt.

I told him that at first I felt a little piqued at not receiving an invitation to the bridge opening, but since his explanation I forgave everything—cherished no feelings of resentment. He then suggested that I get out and walk across the bridge while he held the horses, and I could see if the other end was all right.

I replied, with much feeling, that while I could not do that, I would remain where I was until daylight, when I could look across and tell him how it was.

Finally he led the horses safely across, and we resumed our pleasant loitering upon the darkened way. At the merry hour of 2:30 a. m. we reached Bushnell.

I was mud to the eyes. I was wet to the bone. My eyes burned for sleep. I had smoked 150 cigars on the way and was a little nervous.

I crawled into bed just in time to hear the porter say it was time to get up.

I sat up on the side of the bed, and beginning at my neck counted nearly 300 distinct and definite arches, and stopped at the floating ribs discouraged. I arrayed myself in my wet and muddy raiment and danced merrily off to the banquet hall. I sat at the festive board with smiles on my pale, false face and murder in my wicked heart. When the festive board did not groan, I did. I was among good, kind, loving friends, but their word of cheer fell upon an icy heart, for I wanted to crawl under the table and go to sleep. I loved and admired Mr. Colfax with genuine affection. I meant all the true and beautiful things I said about him that morning, and he will forgive me when he knows that I wanted to hit him with a stove leg.

I went back to the hotel and went to sleep leaning up against the wall of my room, before I could get close enough to the bed to fall upon it. I dreamed that I was a man with two hundred heads and only one eye to sleep for all of them; that I hadn't been asleep in a hundred years, and had just crawled into a steamboat boiler to catch a little nap, when Schuyler Colfax, wearing a waiter's white jacket, with a napkin on his arm, sat down at the manhole and read me Benton's "Thirty Years in the United States Senate" clear through, while two hammered cold rivets in the boiler to keep me awake.

Somehow my meetings with great men are always attended with certain features of pomp and circumstance with which a man of my retiring habits would willingly dispense. I am not grown proud and haughty. I would even to-day unbend to shake hands with the President, but I would hardly drive twelve miles in the mud and rain now, even to sit up all night with the Press Club.—Burdette, in Brooklyn Eagle.

Thorwaldsen's Museum.

The museum is devoted exclusively to originals or copies of Thorwaldsen's work, and to furniture or works of art which belonged to the sculptor, who made the Danish people his heirs. The first impression which one gets from walking through the galleries is of the astounding productiveness of the man, but the longer he looks the more he is likely to find the marvel comprehensible. Here is, indeed, a great array of statuary, but the same subject recurs repeatedly; the plaster reappears in the marble, and studies abound which indicate the variations upon a certain round of themes It is a pity that the collection is not so arranged for the student that he may see in a group all the work produced by Thorwaldsen upon a single theme. Instead, the effort is apparently made to secure the widest variety of artistic grouping, so that the separate rooms shall each be agreeable little galleries of sculpture.

Aside from the portrait busts, the few illustrations of religious art for churches, and the occasional memorial sculpture, the great mass of works consists of illustrations of classic fable, and here again one discovers a further limitation in the constant recurrence by Thorwaldsen to the myth of Amor and Psyche, and the loveliest of his work was the marble group of Amor and Psyche reunited in Heaven. There is a series of bass-reliefs entitled "Amor's Dominion over the World," and one is tempted to take it as expressing most completely the sculptor's conception of life. He was a man born with a love of sensuous beauty who came late to a knowledge of the Greek form, and seized upon it, and all the myths which it represented, as sufficient and satisfying. After that he desired chiefly to reproduce the Greek idea as it swayed his own life. There is thus little thought in his work, little attempt at losing himself in a great idea, little imagination, but considerable fancy, and great fertility in the use of Greek examples. These he handled as the material which was familiar to him, and he never got far from the use of a few simple forms.

There was one curious invention as applied to Christian art, and that was a whimsical illustration of the story of Adam and Eve. They are represented seated together, while Adam holds Abel on his knee. An altar fire burns near Abel has an apple in his uplifted hand, and Cain, who is on the ground, spurns another apple with his foot, at the same time snatching at Abel's. The serpent looks upon the family group, which appears to have been Thorwaldsen's sculpturesque conception of an antithesis to the Holy Family. But in the treatment of the subject of Christian art one is apt to discover how completely Thorwaldsen was dominated by a Greek and, I may add, a pagan sense. He was often called upon for memorial stones, and his conception of Death was always one of fear. Such triumph as he delineated was always that of a sublimated human passion, as instanced in Psyche. In the direct subjects of the Christ and the Apostles the twelve are merely conventional figures, with scarcely any individuality springing from personal or typical traits, and the Christ was the elegant work of a man whose thought was controlled by Greek lines and inspired a traditional Protestantism.—Horace E. Scudder, in Harper's Magazine.

SCIENCE AND INDUSTRY.

—The stocking-darner is the latest invention.—Chicago Journal.

—The quadricycle is the name given to a wheeled vehicle invented by James O. Brown, of Boston. It has two small wheels in front and two large wheels behind. The inventor says that it is far superior to the bicycle or tricycle.

—Experiments with the electric light in coal mines, made in Pennsylvania, have been quite encouraging. It is believed the use of the new light in place of the miner's lamp will reduce the liability of mines to fire-damp explosions.—Philadelphia Press.

—An engineer in Michigan has invented an attachment to steam cylinders which condenses the waste from the steam cock on starting the engine. It does away with the hissing noise which frightens horses and worries men.—Detroit Post.

—Sponges which are kept for a few hours in a solution of bromine (made by adding about ten drops to every five ounces of water) acquire a fine light tint, which may be still further improved by dipping them in dilute sulphuric acid and then washing them well in water.—Boston Globe.

—The French railway companies are about to adopt an electric gate opener. A catch connected with an electro-magnet keeps a gate closed. When a train approaches it closes the circuit, releases the catch, and the gate flies open. The last car on the train as it passes through opens the circuit, and the gate again closes. The same device rings a bell violently on the approach of each train.

—Madame Delong-Tuyssusian, of France, has, after experimenting for eighteen years, succeeded in constructing an instrument by which it is possible to cut metal plates of considerable thickness in any elaborate pattern or design. She has received eighteen medals and diplomas at different European exhibitions, and her invention is very highly praised by French architects.

—It is found that the seaweed known as "zostera marina," or wrack, can be made to yield, by treatment with mineral acids, a substance quite resembling horn, capable of being manufactured into forms and of receiving color from pigments. This substance is called algin, from alge, the generic name of one common species of seaweed. The crude material is obtainable in large quantities on all exposed shores.

—According to the Lumberman's Gazette, paper bottles are now largely manufactured in Germany and Austria. They are made of rags, wood pulp, and straw, and are coated on both sides with defibrinated blood, lime, and alumina. They are manufactured in two parts, and are submitted to high pressure. When completed they will hold spirits, etc., and are not easily broken. Their cost is very low.

—A scientific journal reports that a composition of sand, cork and lime molded into blocks is now on trial in Germany for building light partitions. It is said to have the advantage of excluding sounds better than ordinary brick work, while being light and a good non-conductor. But a composition of hard-wood sawdust applied on lath-like common plaster is cheaper than the German method of constructing partitions, is much lighter, and has other desirable qualities.

Because it is a secret still.

—It came out in a Tennessee lawsuit that the ardent letters sent by a girl to her lover had been composed for another fellow, but that, on transfering her affections suddenly, she had erased the original name and inserted a new one.

—A new telephone instrument has been invented by which the crying of a baby may be heard at the distance of a hundred miles. The adaptability of the moon as a place of residence will now become a matter of supreme importance.—Philadelphia Call.

—A new game, similar to hide and seek, is becoming very popular in this country. It is played as follows: A cashier in a bank takes the money of the institution and disappears. Then the detectives try to find him. If they succeed, he comes home and has to pay a forfeit.—N. Y. Ledger.

—A very witty newspaper paragraphist recently received a letter requesting him to state what were the principal causes of his wit. The answer was promptly returned. It was this: "Nine hours of sleep every night, three square meals every day and a good salary."

—In speaking of the girl to whom he was engaged he referred to her as his "finance." "You mean your fiance, I guess. It is pronounced fee-ong-say." "I don't care how it is pronounced. That girl is my financee. She's worth $50,000."—Chicago Tribune.

—One of these English devotees to mammon once received a lesson from John Bright, who did not seem to pay to him, the possessor of the purse, sufficient homage. The rich man pompously said: "Do you know, sir, that I am worth a million sterling?" "Yes," said the irritated but calm-spirited respondent, "I do; and I know that it is all you are worth."

—"Do they have spring in Russia now?" "No, why do you ask?" "Because the Czar had all the trees cut down along the railroad from St. Petersburg to Warsaw, and in spring the trees all shoot." "No, he is not afraid of the trees shooting." "Why then did he have them cut down?" "I am not sure, but perhaps he was afraid there might be dynamite in their trunks."—Texas Siftings.

—"Oh, my," said Mrs. Greatheart, looking up from the evening paper, "a man in Michigan had his tongue shot off yesterday." "Was he a married man?" inquired her husband. "I don't know. Why?" "Because, if he is a married man he is not so badly off," replied Mr. Greatheart. "His wife probably has tongue enough for both of them." Mrs. Greatheart rustled her paper irately and Mr. G. silently scored a great big one.—Washington Hatchet.

THIS week the RECORDER enters upon its tenth year, which fact should divest every citizen of the county of a fear that it will not support a local paper. The RECORDER came to stay and by hard work has successfully tided over the most critical periods in its existence, and is now an institution of the county, and one which will continue to deal out to the citizens many facts of local interest that are obtainable from no other source. Its interests is so closely indentified with those of the county that they are inseperable and every head of a family who has any county pride about him and is not a subscriber should at once subscribe. Many things in which the people of the county as a[illegible] community are interested are occuring which pass and are never heard of by the person who fails to take his county paper, while his neighbor, who is a subscriber, is posted at all times as to what is being done concerning the matters in which they are alike interested. Subscribe for the RECORDER, it will be a welcome visitor to you.

THIS is thanksgiving month.

THE country will enjoy a brief period of rest from politics.

GUESS the Carrollton Democrat has shaken that penumbra of doubt by this time.

IN the Owen Circuit court there are 118 appearances—51 of them being ordinary and 57 equity suits.

THE Lexington Daily Transcript now contains the Associated Press dispatches, which makes it a valuable sheet to Lexington and vicinity.

JOHNNIE HOGGINS, of Walton, held the ticket that drew Lady DeJarnette, the fine $5,000 mare that was raffled off at Cynthiana last week.

THE Louisville Commercial (Rep.) the week before the election was satisfied that neither Mr. Cleveland nor Mr. Blaine would win, but that Mr. Boodle would.

As wealthy a county as this should have a jail in which evil doers can be safely confined. The taxpayers will not object to contributing toward the construction of a jail which will be secure and large enough to keep prisoners in a decent manner.

SOME of our subscribers complain that the postmasters at the offices where they receive their papers, allow other persons to take them out of the offices to read, and very often they are not returned. The postmaster who suffers such practices at his office, comes short of his duties, and we trust that a mere reference to the matter will suffice, and that only those having authority will be allowed to handle this paper.

SOME persons entertain the opinion that joining the Union Detective Association and putting money in its treasury for offering rewards for stolen property is only contribution to a fund calculated to induce men to remove and conceal the property of others in order to secure a reward when offered for it. This is a very erroneous idea as no body would take the risk of being apprehended and lodged in the penitentiary for a paltry sum that would be given as a reward.

Last Saturday Mr. Tucker, of Boone county, accompanied by three other gentlemen, came to this city in search of a stolen horse, and found it in the possession of Richard Farrel, of this county. The horse was stolen from Mr. Tucker about the 1st of last June, and Mr. Farrell got it from a man giving his name as Frank Harris, and residence, Williamstown. His complexion and size corresponds to that of the party who was accused of stealing the horse, and Mr. Tuck[illegible] real name is Black Clark. All parties interested will try [illegible] the thief to justice, and we [illegible] succeed.—Falmouth [illegible] Williamstown Courier.

The above are the headlines in this morning's Enquirer, and you can take them for what they are worth. The Commercial Gazette had not arrived when our forms closed, and the Republicans confidently expect quite the reverse of the above.

Wm. Neal, who is now in the Mt. Sterling jail under sentence of death the day of his execution not yet having been named by the Governor, has reached a tender spot in the heart of Mr. Trebble, a wealthy farmer of that county. Mr. Tribble does not think Neal should be put to death upon the evidence adduced at his several trials, all of which is circumstantial, but should receive a life sentence with a view to something turning up which will clear him. Mr. Tribble, so we have been informed, is so much interested in this case that he is willing to pay $200 to any lawyer who can even at this late day save Neal's neck.—Richmond Herald.

County Court.

The County Court of Claims met Monday with 18 justices present, and remained in session all day, allowing about the usual amount of claims.

The County Superintendent of Public Schools was allowed $50 on his year's salary.

The County Judge and County Attorney were each allowed $400 for a year's salary.

Abe Wginscott was exempted from paying county levy.

The settlement with the sheriff shows that he owes the county about $6,000, subject, however, to some further credits.

The committee on "public works" recommended that the "government building" behind the jail be claned out or closed up. The citizens memorial in regard to that institution was received and filed. The committee was continued.

An instrument of writing purporting to be the last will and testament Amanda Hoard was offered for probate, but was rejected.

AT the opening of the Grand Lodge of the I. O. O. F., at Louisville last week, Grand Master J. Frank Grant delivered the following address:

BROTHERS—For the membership of the Grand Lodge of Kentucky, for its officers, for myself, I desire to say a most emphatic and hearty "thank you" for cordiality and earnestness of your welcome. We have come to the metropolis of our beloved Kentucky, and by the terms of our coming we have "come to stay." This determination has been reached only after long deliberation and debate; after the experience of more than ten years of junketing up and down of the grand old Commonwealth. Our annual convocation in future will be here; and as it was in the wisdom and safety of much counsel that this step was taken, let our best thoughts continue to mark our future legislation that the step may not be condemned. We must pledge ourselves anew to the tenents of Odd Fellowship; we must band dywn our sacred trust to our successors improved and brightened by our touch. Waved in the bright raidiance of our fires of friendship, love and truth, with our banners floating in the fresh breeze of heaven, let us march in the face of all obstacles to crown our success with another until a failure shall be unknown. Bring the earnestness into this work which characterizes our efforts in all matters of personal interest and the mountain of difficulty will vanish; the highway of Odd Fellowship will be one of pleasure and happiness, bordered with the verdure and blooming with the flowars of an ethereal spring time. Hand to hand shoulder to shoulder, let us come to to our deliberations, determined to do our full duty, and aid in building a future for Odd Fellowship in Kentucky unknown in all its history.

EDUCATIONAL.

[Communications for this column must be addressed to Prof. T. H. Stephenson, Burlington, Kentucky.]

COLLEGE STUDENTS.

Men, when debarred from the society of the opposite sex, are disposed to be less tidy in dress, less choice in their language, and less courteous in their behavior, than when the two sexes are associated. With however much force this may apply to men, it applies with still greater to boys at school, away from home, and cut off, in a measure, from the society of the outside world. This is very natural, being dependent on themselves for their amusement and entertainment, and lacking that experience and steadiness of character which age usually gives, it would be strange if they did not wander into devious paths, fall into habits of slovenness in dress, coarsness in speech and rudness in their manners.

But these are not the worst evils that beset the college pupil. He is removed from that restraint which parents usually exercise over their children, associated with young men men from different sections of the country, and who [illegible] have money in their pockets, and a willingness to spend the same when any opportunity of dissipation presents itself, which promises either diverson or entertainment. The very atmosphere of a college seems to foster the spirit of recklessness. They vie with eachother in the extent and in the madness of their folly. It frequently happens that these young men have left home because they were sent, and not with the desire of improvement. School is distasteful, irksome to them. Any place else or anything else is preferable to the class-room. The most shameful expedients are adopted to avoid it, such as feigned sickness, absence from home, visiting friends and many others that only a fertile genius could devise. Some wish to have it known and said that they have attended college. Others seem to think at college they have a secret art of imparting knowledge, that learning will cost no effort, that mere presence is sufficient. They expect to absorb it like a sponge. The truth is a young man who is not thorough in the elementary branches of education can go to no worse place than to college. When he has met difficulty after difficulty, none of which he has been able to solve alone, and goes with them to the class-room, where classes come and go by the tap of the bell and at the very nick of time, and he leaves there no more enlightened than he entered, he is in a fair condition to appreciate the assistance of a teacher, ever present in the school-room.

When young men wish to pursue studies for which they have no teacher at home, they must necessarily go elsewhere or slowly and perseveringly pursue them at home, which is not much different from college, at last, since they have no assitance there except during recitation, and then it often happens that the pupil is so engaged that he has no time to obtain the information he desires concering his own difficulties.

When we consider the very small number of those who ever finish the course of instruction, compared with the much greater number who begin it, we are puzzled to understand the motive by which they were actuated in the beginning; whether the step was taken without due consideration or without a knowledge of the work necessary to complete it, or whether it was not a mere whim of the pupil, gratified by the indulgence of the parent. Of every twenty-five who enter college, probably not more than one ever finishes the course of instruction and of ever ten who finish it, not more than one, perhaps, is entitled to the certificate of graduation he receives. Thus, of every two hundred and fifty who start out in the race, one reaches the goal. This is a very small per cent., but is, perhaps, as large as is ever successful in any pursuit, requiring as much time, labor and talent to succeed. But to the student who is properly prepared to enter college, who is in earnest, and who has the ability to comprehend readily, and to acquire knowledge rapidly, and who enters the lists of successful competition, it is an Elysium, a little world full of honors and rewards, the scene of earnest rivalries and of most gratifying successes.

When the student leaves this scene of spirited contest, where he has grown to feel that knowledge is the only rational pursuit in life, he seems to step down into a lower world whose pursuits are mean and unworthy of man's am[illegible] or his effort.

This is, perh[illegible] the reason that many persons whose career has been brillient in the school-room, have disappointed the hopes of their friends and falsified the predictions of their teachers.

Among the advantages of such institutions are to be reckoned the extensive libraries accessible to the pupils, and affording information on almost every subject. The taste for books acquired by association with those of similar pursuits, if not possessed before, also a knowledge of one's own peculiarities or eccentricities, if he should chance to have any such.

If there is anything in which students display a superior genius, it is in detecting the disagreeable peculiarities of their companions, appropriately naming and successfully ridiculing them. Rustic habits, self-commendation, boasting, exageration, and such like habits, can not be indulged without their possessors being reminded of them more frequently and plainly than is agreeable. Even a short sojourn is likely to round off some of the angularities of the most obtuse boy.

We Have Our Photograph Taken.

We have long been aware that we are not as others. Although we may have neglected the example of the Pharisee of old and not thanked our Creator for the same, we are just as cognizant of the fact as he was.

Our towering intellect has comprehended that our shape was just "too-too," since away back. Our clear blue eyes have aided our mirror somewhat in depicting a classic countenance such as Tintoretto pined for when he painted his gods. It has often seemed strange to us that all our perfection should be reserved for this plebeian nineteenth century, when it might have adorned the canvass of an old master.

It was brooding over this great mistake that caused us to subject ourself to the camera; and preserve a faint remembrance of our perfection ere it was everlastingly too late. The artist who we settled upon to perform this delicate operation, was a tall, willowy youth, whose face bore a sad and meloncholy air that was but too suggestive of an etherial soul, bound down to the sordid cares of humdrum life and forced to drag out a painful existence on the awful provender of a boarding house. I shall never forget the sorrowful air of indigestable beefsteak and petrified biscuits that clung around his noble brow, nor the soulful intensity that two meals a day with hash for breakfast, gave to his mild green eyes. My soul went out to him as a kindred one and my spirit whispered out "brother." He planted me in a howling wilderness of roots and herbs with a thing that looked like the side of a paint shop the painter samples his colors on, for a background.

He told me that this was a rustic scene and with true poetic love for the region of the hired man, I close it. I suggested that some other living thing, a calf for instance, be introduced to give a still more rural aspect to the greenery; but he said it was'nt necessary; there was quite enough of that species of landscape in the picture now.

I then struck an attitude such as Ajax must have assumed when he defied the lightning, and told him to go ahead.

He said no. If I wanted to be taken as a prize fighter I should remove my coat and vest. I was ready to admit that perhaps there was too much of the combative in my appearance, so I resolved to trust it all to him and he commenced the operation of posing me. After many laudable endeavors he at last screwed my head up in a vise, elevated my nose, twisted my mouth, dislocated my spinal column and made me stare at a figure four with a fixed intensity that gave an unwonted glare to my usually tranquil visage. But he said I took a splendid photograph.

Yesterday I received what purported to be the picture of myself along with a bill for $5. If that thing looks anything like me I want to die. A man with lineaments such as that fiend depicted, can only rest in peace beneath the daisies. Their classic outlines can only be appreciated with a headstone for a background and a misty veil of sod and loam between. As a portrait of Arabi Pash, or an ideal fancy of the Star-eyed Goddess of Reform it is a success, but as my portrait—never! It is hideous, it's crosseyed and the general au revoir expression of the whole sublime creation is enough to make a pup sick. It has the most inanely idiotic grin where the mouth should be, that even his devilish ingenuity could concoct. A perfect imitation of a canvass ham (25 lb. average) does duty for a hand and it is pressed upon my anatomy in such a manner as to leave an unalterable conviction that I am suffering from colic.

I don't know whether that operator died when he finished that artistic creation. I only know that my shotgun is loaded with buckshot and that the grand and glorious West will be robbed of one of her most accomplished demons who is now a photographer. Yours, PETE.

THE political discussion came off Monday as per appointment, Col. J. J. Landram, Republican candidate for Congress, dividing time with Mr. Applegate, Democratic elector, in the absence of Mr. Smith, Republican elector. Both gentlemen put in his best licks for his party, the Democrats with a very small sprinkle of Republicans composing the audience for both speakers. Each party was very well pleased with the effort of its representative. Mr. H. M. Winslow, of Carrollton, Prohibition elector, also made a brief speech in advocacy of the temperance cause, but for the want of time he could not handle the subject as well as it is evident he is capable of doing.

Among the Farmers.

In Scott county corn is worth $2,25 a barrel.

Jacob Graves, of Fayette, is feeding 350 head of cattle.

Robertson county farmers have corn cutting frolics at night.

A pear tree at Putman, Conn., was covered with blossoms October 1.

A little son of Mr. John Boyd, of Bath county, fell into the fire and was burned to death.

John Lutz, of Cane Ridge, Bourbon county, sold his interest in 26½ acres of tobacco, averaging 1,600 lbs.

G. H. Chenault shipped eight car loads of graded cattle to Wyoming Territory. They were valued at $10,000.

A young widow in Vanceburg will soon be married to her stepson, and then that fellow will be his own father.

Frank Clark, a farmer near Owensboro, has eight head of fine cattle totally blind from what is known as "cattle blindness."

Judge J. K. Simrall, of Danville, lost a $400 horse, the animal running away with a road cart and plunging over an embankment.

J. W. Hunt sold his farm of forty-eight acres, well improved, near South Elkhorn, Fayett county, to Mr. C. Adams, for $135 per acre.

"After all," says the Farmers' Home Journal of Kentucky refering to the recent pleuro pneumonia excitements, "we were worse scared than hurt."

A tobacco plantor informs us that the damage to the crop in this section was nothing like so great as represented. The leaf was very slightly injured by the overheating.—Yeoman.

A cow belonging to Joe Gaiemer, in Cynthiana, died a few days ago, and thinking the beast died of pleuro pneumonia, the city authorities compelled him to bury her in his yard, notwithstanding the protest of himself and neighbors.

The Deposit Bank of Georgetown has brought suit against the Fayette National and the Second National Banks of Lexington for the amount of the checks forged by John R. Wolfe and cashed by those Banks. As will be remembered the checks were forgeries on the Georgetown Bank. L. and G. Strus and one or two other parties in Lexington cashed these checks and placed them with the Lexington Banks named for collection, and they were paid by the Georgetown Bank. All of the checks were made payable to Williamson & Wolff, a ficticious firm. The question will be awaited with interest.—Georgetown Times.

BLACK CLARKSON,
Lodged in the Covington Jail

Union Excited—A Successful and Important Arrest.

Parties Implicated Deny Their Guilt.

And Many Believe Them Innocent.

For a year or two in the immediate past, the Union neighborhood has been the theater for numerous depredations of horse thieves, and after the stealing of the horse belonging to N. B. Hig gins' son a month or so since, the good people in that section organized a society for the better protection of their property and the apprehension and prosecution of thieves. That organization has in its short existence become quite formidable both numerically and financially, and its efforts to apprehend thieves culminated, last Wednesday night, in the capture of "Black" Clarkson, who, for some time has been suspected of dealing in horse flesh in a crooked way.

The capture of Clarkson was through the instrumentality of a stranger, who, a few days before, made his appearance in Union, and though professing to be an "amateur" in the detective business acquired the confidence of some of the leading members of the above mentioned organization, and divulged things which threw the entire community into a fever of excitement and implicated James Rogers and his sons, near Union, in the horsestealing business.

Influenced by the statements of the detective, that Beauregard Rogers, with whom he slept one night a short time before, had communicated to him a history of how the business was conducted, and that he saw him and his father conceal a couple of saddles and four feet that had been cut off of a horse which it was said had been stolen and rode to death, the feet being preserved to convince their pals that the horse died and had not been sold by them, a search warrant was obtained and James Rogers' premises searched, nothing being found.

The detective had also told where a horse stolen from Mr. Tucker, near Union, could be found in Pendleton county. His directions were followed again and sure enough Mr. Tucker secured his mag, and also came across a gentleman in Kenton county who is acquainted with "Black" Clarkson and gave him and the horse a breakfast when he was making off with it. Clarkson had traded Tucker's horse to a man in Pendleton county, where it was found.

Of course everybody wanted Clarkson captured, and many of the citizens in and about Union believed that he had spent much of his time in their neighborhood since his escape from the Nicholasville jail not long since, but how to get him was the puzzle.

The detective now leaves, and after a few days absence returns, and informs those through whom he had been operating that Clarkson would be at Lucien Dickson's near Union on Tuesday night. Sheriff Clutterbuck was promptly informed of the anticipated arrival and with a posse he laid in wait at Dickerson's for Black, but darkness came and went and Black failed to put in his appearance. This failure on Black's part to make connection caused some to become doubting Thomases, but the detective was positive that he would arrive on Wednesday night as he was probably detained somewhere on the road. The Sheriff and posse were determined to see it through and went on duty again the next night, and at a late hour Black unconciously allowed himself quietly bagged. When he arrived Mr. Dickerson informed him of the existing circumstances and advised him to offer the officer no resistance, but to quietly surrender. He gave Mr. Dickerson his two pistols, and allowed the Sheriff to read the warrant without any demonstration whatever.

Clarkson was informed of and for what Rogers' premises had been searched, when he declared emphatically that the saddle and horse feet were there and gave directions where to look for them. A second search was made but was as fruitless as the first. Clarkson then swore that he could find them, when he was taken to a tobacco house on Rogers' farm, where he brought to view the two saddles and a sack containing horses feet. This additional development in the matter added new life to the excitement and Rogers and his son Beauregard were put under arrest, both denying stoutly any knowledge of how or when the saddles and sack were concealed where found.

It was claimed by Clarkson that the horse off of which the feet were cut was stolen near Nicholasville, and that the carcass was buried on Rogers' farm. Friday, at the request of Rogers, a committee composed of Fielden Dickey, Nick Talbott and Lute Rice, was appointed by the Detective Association, and Saturday they gave Rogers' farm a thorough search, but failed to find any trace of the horse's carcass or any sign of one having been disposed of or concealed on his farm.

After the above revelations, arrests and discovery, the detective left under the pretense that he was going to Louisville to obtain evidence as to his character, that any doubt about his sincerity of purpose might be dispelled, there being several in the Union community who look upon him with considerable suspicion. He promised to return to Union last Monday evening. He avoided meeting Clarkson, and at last account Black did not know who gave him away.

The examining trial was set for 2 p m., last Saturday, before Esquire Norman and Bannister when Clarkson waived an examination. His bond was fixed at $1,000 and failing to give it, he was sent to the Covington jail, the one at Burlington not being considered safe for the detention of such big game.

The trial of Rogers was continued till to-day. It is almost the unanimous opinion that Rogers and son are innocent, and that it is a deep laid and malicious scheme on the part of Clarkson and his accomplices to implicate them and that while trying to trap Jas. Rogers and son Clarkson has unwittingly got himself into the clutches of the law from which he is not expected to extricate himself unless he gets a chance to forfeit a bail bond.

The stranger who worked up the case claims that his business is that of a solicitor of pictures to enlarge, and that he had heard of this case and concluded to try his hand on it, although he has had some experience at like work.

It was reported on the streets of our town one day last week that County Clerk Grunell and County Attorney Tolin were bothrothed. How about this Messrs Editors.—[We refer you to the marriage records.—Eds.]

Not long since two sewing machine agents met at Lewis Sullivan's to sell him a machine, and in discussing the merits of their machines one called the lie, and that was more than he could stand, so they went at it rough and tumble. Lewis told them to step out side and the one that hollered enough first he would buy a machine of. The Singer man being the best man succeeded in selling a machine.

We met our friend Dr. J. E. Terrill on the streets of Petersburg the other morning and he seemed very much excited and out of humor because Ed Chappin, one of the most influential Democrats in the town had flopped over to Blaine and Logan. Doctor said he thought the change was brought about by an ex-banker of Lawrenceburg, whose daughter Ed was going to see. We interviewed Mr. C. on the subject, and he said that it was a campaign lie started to injure him in the race for representative two years from now.

A few nights after Stephens' horse was stolen, W. A. Crigler was watching his stable of fine steppers when he detected some fellow endeavoring to get in, supposed by Mr. C. to be after one of the horses. He discovered Crigler's presence and fled before the contents of a double-barreled shot-gun could get in its deadly work.

A little four-year old child of Chas. Williams, colored, while nursing its mother's baby the other day, had a fit, falling head foremost out of its chair into the fire, burning its head and face very severely. It fell across the baby the screams of which brought the mother from the kitchen where she was preparing breakfast, to discover the critical condition of the larger child. The baby was not hurt.

The Union Detective Association is officered as follows: J. A. Huey, Chairman; C. P. Rice, H. Bannister, M. C. Norman and J. G. Bradford, executive committee; O. C. Utz, Treasurer and James Blanton, Secretary. It has about 100 members and the list is increasing rapidly. The intentions of the Associations are good, and with its staunch membership and energetic officers, it promises a useful career to that part of the county by making it warm for thieves both large and small.

AUTUMN WINDS.

Ye autumn winds, ye soft and sighing winds,
That westward on your cloudy chariots roll,
Vain are my casements folded and my blinds,
To shut your sadness from my conscious soul.

In every breath ye mourn a glory gone
From meadows brown, that yesterday wore bright,
From wooded hills of emerald splendors shorn,
Grown sere, like locks that blanch with sudden fright.

I know, O winds, your arts, and deft deceits
That kindle now the maple-groves to flame;
Their gold and crimson are but glittering cheats,
And ruin lurks amid their hues the same.

And ye will hold your melancholy breath
To-morrow, when the sun your veils shall rend,
That ye may gild your forest-flags of death—
With rainbow splendors in the cloud to end.

I shall behold and marvel at the show,
But catching yet the echoes of your moans,
I shall translate the sign to sense of woe,
That, 'neath the painted mask, the ravage owns.

Ye are but preludes, O ye murmuring winds—
(Which seem to soothe, while mocking still, my pain)—
Masked preludes of the blast that bites and blinds
The scathed and shriveled earth while winter reigns.

I know, ye specious winds, what ye would say—
That ye will come as zephyrs in the spring,
And blow across the land in June's sweet way,
As if your breath no wintry airs could sing.

And I were well content to have ye pipe
Your plausive plaints of seeming sadness now,
And suck the sweetness of your juices ripe,
If ye would keep your signals off my brow.

I would not dread the snows of which ye mourn,
Were they not symbols of my own swift shroud;
When that shall wrap me, ye have no weird tone
To call Life's sunshine out of Death's cold cloud.

O Autumn winds! I heard ye once and laughed
To mark the flush ye brought on dull decay;
When Youth's free chalice with delight I quaffed,
Your maple-flames warmed all my fears away.

But, now, I rend your signs by inner sense,
Till glow my cheeks, with scarlet leaves to vie;
Life's June can charm me with no future tense—
And graveward only all its shadows fly.

Ye Autumn winds, that wail about me now,
This subtle meaning undertones your chant;
Since blow ye must, breathe gently on my brow,
And this sweet solace to my sorrow grant;

That I may know I have not lived in vain—
As all in vain I sought your voice to shun,
And though Life's Winter finds no Spring again—
Immortal Youth, in death, shall be begun.

DISCOVERED IN TIME.

Some three miles back from our eastern coast, just within sight and scent of the salt water, lies a Suffolk village, Wynford by name, of whose scattering population four-fifths find their living and center their material interests upon that broad area they call "the land."

A sleepy parish? An unemotional congregation of clodhoppers then? By no means, indeed! Wynford has decided opinions, brisk little quarrels, many social grades of its own, and has moreover, its full quantum of human joys and sorrows; perhaps, hidden among its sober generations, some tragedies, and to a certainty now and then a bit of romance.

On Wynford Green, near the flint-towered, thatch-naved St. Nicholas's, cluster all the dwellings of the rural upper-ten, from the smart white villa of a late shop-keeper's buxom widow close by the rectory to the red brick residence of a Vice-Admiral's relict—Mrs. Orde—from whose casements one can look across the narrowing road into some twenty acres of the park, where stands the chief house of the parish, "The Beeches."

Here lived the lady of the manor. Not a stately, exacting dame, ruling jealously over a tribe of bobbing, hat-touching rustics, but a young and beautiful woman, who inherited through her mother a position none ever needed to grudge her sweet and noble nature.

"Miss Temple, my daughter that is to be, seems part of Wynford's very self, Mr. Murray," explained Mrs. Orde to the newly come rector, on his call, one Autumn day. He was an Oxford Fellow, who, in sudden impatience at the barrenness of book-life, had deserted it for the opposite extreme—a moderate living in the depths of the country. "The people think so much of her and she of them, that I fear it will be a lamentable day when my son comes to take her away from us."

"Your—son?" repeated Mr. Murray, politely,—almost more than politely attentive.

"Yes, from India. He returns soon, to rob your parish of its mistress. You had not heard this? Oh, well, I think our clergymen ought to understand what goes on among us. It makes him more at ease, does it not?" And, with the friendly view of furthering this pleasant footing, Mrs. Orde chatted complacently into accounts of the neighboring family, and told how a Mr. Temple, well connected, but of no fortune, had married the heiress of Wynford Manor, who, sadly enough, had died, when their one child, Agatha, was born.

"But there are two Miss Temples?" interpolated Mr. Murray, puzzled by remembrances of two attractive faces near his pulpit, of which one had earnestly marked (or so he fancied) every syllable of his first nervous sermon, while the other had wandered from pointed attention, through smothered yawns, into a comfortable little nap. "Surely I see two ladies often together, both young; I thought them sisters."

"So they are—at least, half-sisters," explained Mrs. Orde: "for Mr. Temple foolishly married again—a French lady, little Agatha's governess; and Miss Leonie is her child—younger than Miss Temple by five years. Poor thing! Her father died long ago, leaving not the least provision for her: for of course, he had only a life interest in the Beeches. So his widow and little girl were simply dependent on the elder daughter. But the Trustees were liberal, Miss Temple most unselfish and generous, and they all lived admirably together till Mrs. Temple's death."

"Which was——"

"Four years ago, six months before our dear Agatha came of age. It was just when my son got his Assistant-Judgeship, Mr. Murray—an excellent appointment—and, on the strength of his promotion, wrote home as he did. It has been a long engagement, has it not? But Geoffrey would never live on his wife's income, without means or position of his own, so he determined to keep abroad till he earned a pension; but, I am thankful to say, the last three years of his exile are not to be lonely. Now you understand what brings him home, Mr. Murray."

Mr. Murray understood Mrs. Orde's modestly triumphant confidence only too well. By some process of reasoning he had no mind to trace to its source; he felt the revelation had spread a shadow over his own life and as he went back alone, past the golden-brown beeches, to his solitary fireside, was half inclined to wish he had never ventured from the scholarly seclusion of Corpus into the perils of a country parsonage.

And how was Mr. Geoffry Orde's return awaited by the tenants of the manor-house? Seemed the days long or short to Agatha Temple till he came?

Why, scarcely could she tell. The play-fellow of her almost babyhood—the lad who used to bring his schoolboy laurels for her praise—the youth who had gone from her in her first girlhood—and wooed her as yet only with written words; and though she trusted every syllable, and idealized her absent love, perchance, more than most maidens—for, save Leonie, no other was near and dear to her yet, to leave for him the home she clung to more each year, to cast her lot in with his, was a point over which sadness and gladness often fought, and victory lay as yet on neither side.

"I know what I shall do," asserted Leonie, very positively, one night in the midwinter, when, being telegraphed as arrived at Southampton, Mr. Orde might at any hour appear at Wynford. "When that man comes I shall hate him!"

"O, Leonie! why?" laughed her sister, stroking the pretty, wilfully-posed head, shorn of its summer tresses in a freak of fashion, and left shining, curly, provokingly coaxable. "Remember when Geoffry left it was you, not I, who cried unceasingly. And who, pray, wrote to him and begged him to come back, for fear tigers would eat him? Who"——

"H-u-s-h! Scandalmonger!" cried Leonie, her cheeks aflame. "Then I was small and foolish, now I am old and wise, and I wish he had kept across the sea forever. He'll take you away, and what shall I do?"

"Keep house till we come back. Three years will soon go by, Lono darling. There will be so much for you and Aunt Helen to do" (Aunt Helen was a distant relative—companion, now, and chaperone to the two girls) "that time will fly. Mind, you are not to miss me, nor let anyone else miss me, either."

Leonie gave a disconsolate shrug. "Aunt Helen will rule me with a rod of iron. She means to be good, but she's like Mrs. Orde, and knows I'm poor, and—and—she'll make me mend my gloves and be industrious."

Agatha's dark eyes rested lovingly on her sister's young face, so like her own, save that its lines were always gay, while hers were often grave.

"Be industrious, little woman," she said, with a half-motherly tenderness. "We richer folks have no right to be lazy, but—wait a moment," as Leonie crumpled her forehead into negative wrinkles over "we richer folks"—"but no one, Lono, will tron le you about being poor. You know how often I have been letter-writing lately? Well, it was for you. And to-day all is settled. You are independent enough, now, with all that my careful guardians have been saving for your fortune. I wanted to tell you before Geoffrey came home. Now you know and we will say no more about it."

"But I must!" cried Leonie, clasping her sister impetuously. "O Agatha, how good you are to me! How can I thank you. Why, every single thing I have I owe to you!"

"There is no owing between our father's children," answered Agatha, yielding herself to a shower of grateful caresses, "so there's nothing to pay back and I want no thanks; only please keep this secret till I am gone."

"Till you are gone!" echoed Leonie, ruefully. "O, Agatha, to have you kinder than ever, just before you go, is dreadful! I hope you may be happy, but I shall be miserable! When that horrible man comes, I'll try not to be wicked, but—I—shall—detest him!"

CHAPTER II.

When Mr. Orde really did return, then, Miss Leonie accorded him a jealously-cool reception, vastly amusing to those accustomed to her natural warm-hearted frankness; but, fully occupied in attention to his fiancee, the gentleman appeared perfectly callous to this ungracious treatment. So, perceiving, to her amazement, that she was receding into the unusual position of a non-entity, the younger Miss Temple was piqued into becoming her old self, letting fall her droll mask of ceremony, and slipping again into the old bright ways that made her what Agatha called "the sunshine of The Beeches." Hating her sister's future husband was unprofitable work; now, in a fit of repentant amiability, she resolved to please him.

By the time this happy transformation was effected, Mr. Orde had been back a month, and had discovered the value of the prize he had come home to fetch.

Five years had changed the girl friend he had left into a beautiful woman, whom he was bound to love, not by promise only, but by keen appreciation of her worth, grown now and ripened even as she herself. And for weeks his task seemed very easy, while to Agatha, increasing knowledge of her betrothed increased her happiness. Of a surety, the course of their love promised to run smooth. Proud Mrs. Orde's air of dignified gratulations over her son's excellent match grew day by day; the village grew deeply interested in the coming wedding, and the bride elect began to be busy exceedingly over plans for her wide circle of humble friends' well-doing while she should be away. Jestingly, Geoffrey Orde would tell her he grudged the time she spent in confabulations with Aunt Helen over the many trusts to be left in her or the rector's hands, but the eager confidence with which she would seek to draw him into her projects, and her delight in his approval, disarmed him of any passing chagrin and left him no shadow of excuse for complaint.

They were all of them certainly very happy—perfectly content. And yet—. How a cloud rose on this fair sky, none knew exactly. Those whom it overshadowed most acknowledged it last of all. For it was so easy, so right of Leonie to glide into treating her almost brother with the free winsomeness that kept her childish spite of nineteen years. He was of necessity almost as often her companion as Agatha's. She had been fond of him long ago, and was it not her duty to be fond of him now? To what precise depths this duty led her she didn't stop to measure, until, alas! they were unfathomable.

And Geoffrey Orde, his word and honor pledged to Agatha, felt himself safe to bask, pleasantly amused, in the animated presence of her younger sister, never finding out, till May's warm weeks were entered, and his wedding fixed for the first day of June, that he was turning traitor to his troth; that the charm of Leonie's gay nature was stronger than the sweet gravity of that to which he owed allegiance. But not to himself would he allow this possible at first.

"I think," urged his mother, anxiously, one night when they were leaving The Beeches, "I do think, Geoffrey, as Agatha sings no duets with you, you would be wiser to sing fewer with Leonie."

"And why?" said her son, shortly.

"Well, Agatha—may not like it. Other people may—at least, they do notice it."

"Agatha is entirely above any wretched jealousy," said Mr. Orde, impatiently.

"Still I should be sorry," his mother ventured on, "that you should even seem to slight your wife that will be. People might say you were marrying for money, and Agatha doesn't deserve that, Geoffrey."

"With or without money, she deserves the best any human creature can give her," returned Geoffrey, warmly. "Don't fancy I underrate her, mother." And with that Mrs. Orde had to be satisfied, though the ambiguous speech left her disquieted.

Still, he meant to be—nay, he vowed he would be—loyal; and strong in self-trust, went next day to The Beeches and found himself listening for Leonie's step, watching for Leonie's coming, made infinitely glad by the dangerous hour's music which unsuspecting Agatha pressed on them while she gave audience to homely guests.

That hour he vowed, though, should be his last of dalliance with a temptation that was getting too strong. Resolutely he would avoid Leonie henceforth, resolutely devote himself to Agatha. And so for days he did, dulling his own spirit into unutterable aching, bewildering Agatha, who thought the two had quarreled, and filling with pain unspeakable the heart that was just learning its luckless secret.

"How the child frets over your leaving!" said Aunt Helen, pityingly: and Leonie's sister, gazing at her, white and listless, wandering through the garden, wondered, with a sudden fear, was it for that alone she sorrowed!

A doubt, double-barbed, shot through her mind. Guiltless herself of falsity in a single thought, it seemed unworthy, evil, treasonable to two she loved. But truth or treason it must be. Which, for the peace of all, she must find out.

It wanted only two days of her marriage, and on the last evening but one her nearest friends were gathered at The Beeches, all noting approvingly the close attendance of Mr. Orde at her side.

Once only he left his post, when Leonie, who had obstinately refused a single song, suddenly yielded and sang, not the gay air that used to suit her best, but the very saddest of her strains, with a tremulous pathos that ended in a sob. Then Geoffrey Orde drew slowly towards her, as if scarce master of his steps, and as the notes ceased, looked down into her fever-bright eyes with such a glance as love of Agatha had never wakened.

Standing near, with his young hostess, was the rector, looking ten years older than when he came to Wynford. People said the place couldn't suit him.

"Your sister sings with tears in her voice," said he, and, waiting vainly for response, saw to his pain that tears were trembling, too, on his companion's dark lashes.

"I am—tired," said Miss Temple. "Will you tell Aunt Helen to bid all good night for me?" and, turning swiftly away, abruptly left her guests, of whom one departed soon, sharing, if not comprehending, the pang that drove her into solitude.

"She was tired"—a plea that barred all talk with Leonie that night, all share in next day's preparations for the festive morrow. Geoffrey Orde, coming, as usual, early, was met by a message only—"Would he return towards evening?" And when he did return, for the first time Agatha descended from her own room, and went for a last hour with her lover.

Leonie, too restless for all company, wandered hither and thither, now flushed, now pale; betaking herself at last to the small "study," where, with her more than sister, she had worked and played her way from childhood up to now, and thence, with door fast locked, she watched two figures pace across the lawn, intent on speech so earnest neither turned or noticed her.

A book was in her hands; what book she never knew. A rose she had idly plucked fell to the ground uncared for. As the two passed from sight the self-control, so difficult to her impulsiveness, forsook her utterly. Back into the room she shrank, covering her face, with a sharp cry of pain whispering: "So false! so false! Ten thousand times I have deserved it all. And yet it is so hard!"

While she sat shivering through her trouble, sunbeams sank into twilight, wood pigeons cooed forth their slumber songs in boughs without, and in the gloom she dared at last to weep—for herself; for him who, worst pang of all, shared her great grief; for Agatha, before the very thought of whom she cowered guiltily.

"But she shall never, never know!" she cried through her tears. "If only she can go, and I can die, why, she need never know."

"Never know what?" said a soft, sad voice close by; and the next instant Leonie was in her sister's arms.

"O, Agatha," she entreated, striving to get free, "let me go! Don't come so kindly to me. Don't ask me what I mean!"

"Wait!" answered Agatha, with a wonderful calm on her pale face. "I can tell you, Leonie, what it all means. That two of us have nigh made a terrible mistake, but I have found it out in time. I was slow to see it, Lono, but I know it now, I have no right to Geoffry. He loves you best."

"Agatha"——

"Hush! He belongs to you, not me. It has been a tangled skein for us, but this is the only right way out of it; and Geoffry sees that it is so."

"But Agatha," urged Leonie, trembling between exceeding pain and marvelous joy, "he has never said"——

"A word. I know he has not. Both of you meant to be faithful to me. Perhaps"—with a wistful faltering in her tender voice—"it was my fault you could not be. There, darling, there!"—as Leonie wept passionately on her bosom—"let Geoffrey come to you" (his step was sounding on the path outside), "and thank God for all of us this hour is not too late."

How this extraordinary news was received by household and wedding guests, by poor, disappointed Mrs. Orde, by the whole startled parish, we must leave to our readers' imaginations. Long before the ferment of excitement had subsided a quiet marriage had taken place so Agatha had willed it, and all yielded to her—and with his bride not portionless, as to his contrite surprise and his mother's comfort, he discovered, Geoffrey Orde was speeding away to the far East.

Till the hubbub of discussion was past, Agatha Temple deserted the Beeches, and, returning after weeks of absence, brought back in her brave serenity scarce a trace of the trial that had driven her away.

"Leonie is happy," she says, and allows no tongue to blame her sister in her hearing.

Perchance her home, her people, make up to her for what she lost. Perchance the very power to renounce what she did wakens mistrust as to her fitness ever to have filled the state she missed. Or perchance (and this way run many wishes) it may be dawning on her that womanhood's fair crown is yet waiting if she will but wear it; that in her hands lies all the happiness of a man who has loved her from the first moment he saw her, and that the sure response stirring within her own heart promises her yet a glad future as John Murray's wife.

He adds, too, that they burn well, and hold their white ash firmly.

Cost of Pigs at Ten Months.

A Kansas subscriber, who intends to go into the business of raising and feeding hogs, wants to know what kinds of food are most economical from birth to ten months old, and what the cost should be estimated at.

This is a pretty broad question, and can not be fully answered in a short article. Preliminarily it may be said that the breed of pig must be one that has been thoroughly developed into early maturity, because if the pigs are to be fitted for sale at ten months they must be pushed from the day they are farrowed to the day of sale. The food of pigs till five or six weeks old must be chiefly the milk of the dam, and some good breeders keep them on the dam till eight weeks old. The dam must be well fed, and fed for the largest milk secretion. The amount of milk she yields will have a decided influence upon the favorable start of the pigs. If a dairy is kept upon the farm, then, after two weeks old, the pigs should be taught to drink skimmed milk, and they should have this, at first, sweet and warmed up to blood heat, and all they want of it. When they are over three weeks old, a little middlings should be added to the skimmed milk, and they will learn to eat this food, that must be used at weaning time. No corn meal should be given to pigs under two or three months old. Some think a little shelled corn may profitably be given to young pigs, but they are better without it. It is not fat that you want to put on to the young pig, but you want to grow the muscles and bones—produce a rangy frame. There is plenty of fat in middlings, and middlings is a cooling food, with nitrogen to grow the muscles, and phosphate of lime to grow the bones; besides, middlings ought to be as cheap as corn, especially in Kansas, where so much wheat is grown. When the pigs are ready to wean, they will be the better for a little linseed-oil meal, mixed with the middlings—say one pound to five pigs per day and if it is not easy to get the oil meal, and flaxseed is raised near, buy a few bushels of that, and boil it in six times its bulk of water, and it will form a thin gelatinous substance, which can be mixed with other food. Not more than one pound of the seed should be given to six pigs. They soon become very fond of it. A little of this boiled flaxseed is, perhaps, the best preventive of disease, and at the same time it assists in the digestion of other food.

If cheaper, oats and corn, in equal weights, ground together, may be fed to pigs after they are two and a half months old, and middlings may also be continued with this feed up to six or seven months old, at which period the frame of the pig ought to be pretty well developed, and the fattening period proper may commence. Corn is the great American fattening food, and the last three or four months corn may be the principal food and ripen them for sale. Corn makes solid sides of fat pork, but the frame must be developed before this ripening begins. We have watched many efforts to grow young pigs on corn alone, but never yet saw a well developed pig fed in that way. We have seen pigs at three and four months old almost as round as a ball, and which would roll about as well endwise as sidewise. They were mere balls of fat. These cases occurred when an effort was made to grow the pigs rapidly by those who had the greatest confidence in the propriety of feeding such young pigs on corn alone. But after making a thorough test of it, these persons became convinced of the error, and afterward fed nearly in manner as here advised. When pigs are on clover pasture, a little corn is very appropiate. On pasture, corn meal and middlings, mixed in equal parts, will produce a fair result.

Our correspondent has asked a difficult question on the cost of food, because of the different systems of feeding, depending on the exposure in the cold season, for animal heat must be kept up by the expenditure of food.

Let us suppose that the pig grower has warm pens, and that the pigs are farrowed on the 1st of February. The dams having warm quarters, and being well fed, will yield milk to grow the pigs rapidly. The first three months will bring them to May and the mild season. Now these pigs can be turned to pasture, and, with extra feed, made to gain very rapidly through the warm season. The six months from May 1st to the end of October is precisely the time that pork can be grown the cheapest. The food to keep up animal heat is reduced to a minimum. The grass will assist, not only in producing growth, but in preserving health. Half the grain food will push the pigs on pasture that would be required, even in a comfortable pen, in winter. This will much cheapen the cost of the pigs at ten months. November will be the only cool month, and the pigs sold early in December.

But let us suppose that this pig feeding is conducted upon land that does not afford a proper pasture in a convenient situation, still if clover or orchard grass, or even winter rye could be cut and brought to the pigs in pen or a dry yard, and fed in troughs, mixed with ground feed, they would grow as rapidly as upon pasture. This green food should be run through a cutter and cut short. This could easily be mixed with corn meal and middlings, and the pigs must then eat the grass and ground feed together, and we have found in that case that the feeder can mix the ration in such proportion that the pigs will gain more evenly than on pasture, for pigs on pasture take a notion sometimes to eat all grass or nearly all grain, but in this way they must eat it in the proportion that is mixed. One man could prepare the grass, mix the ration and feed 500 pigs, which would make the expense very little per pig. One quart of fine cut clover or grass for each pig is enough for each feed. Two quarts per pig per day would be quite sufficient, and this would require only thirty-two bushels per day for 500 pigs.

Successful feeding ought to produce pigs of 300 pounds weight at ten months. We will give approximate figures of cost at different periods:

Cost of pig at one month	$1.00
Grain for next two months, corn and middlings, 210 pounds	1.20
Grain for next six months, corn and middlings, 900 pounds	4.50
Grain for November, one month, corn and middlings, 210 pounds	1.05
Grass	1.00
Attendance	5
Whole cost at ten months	$9.25

This ought to cover the average cost in Kansas, if all the food is purchased. The cost of attendance is calculated on a large number—say 400 or 500 pigs. This will leave a fair margin, as the pig should be worth at least from $12 to $15. Now, on a farm which produces nearly all the feed, the result must be satisfactory. We shall be glad to hear from practical feeders on the question of cost.—National Live-Stock Journal.

HOME AND FARM.

—Cottage Pudding: One cup of sugar, butter the size of a walnut, one-half cup of milk, two eggs beaten separately, one and one-half cups of flour, two teaspoonfuls of baking powder. Serve with sauce.—N. Y. Tribune.

—An ornamental book rack is of light wood with little poles at each end of the shelves; to these can be fastened side pieces of plush, embroidered or otherwise decorated.

—The outside leaves of cabbage are greedily eaten by cows; but with, however, a bad effect on the milk, unless care is taken to feed just after milking. Given then, the bad flavor goes off before the cow is milked again.—Albany Journal.

—Every fall there is a great deal of refuse gathered around the fields, which should be piled up and burned. Much of it will consist of weeds, whose final cutting has not entirely prevented seeding. If left till spring these seeds will fall to the ground, and burning the refuse then will miss one of its most important objects.—N. Y. Herald.

—If stock is pastured it is better to have the land so used divided into two, or better still, into three or four compartments. When they are allowed to run over all they keep all eaten down closely, but by allowing successive portions to get a fresh start they do less walking, waste and destroy less, and a much greater amount of food is produced.—Boston Transcript.

—A very appetizing way to cook onions is to boil them in salt and water until they begin to be tender; drain the water from them, and wrap each onion in soft paper, set them side by side into a dripping pan, let them bake until done, then put them into a vegetable dish and pour rich brown gravy over them. Spanish onions are especially nice cooked in this way, as they have so delicate a flavor.—N. Y. Post.

—Meat balls to drop into soup stock are made of veal, with about one-fourth as much suet as veal, and with three-fourths of bread crumbs with salt, pepper and parsley, or other herbs to your taste; add one beaten egg, which will moisten and hold the ingredients together; make into round balls, drop into hot lard and fry quickly; drain them well on a cloth and they are ready for the soup.—Cincinnati Times.

—A writer on horse hoofs states that as the hardness and brittleness of the hoofs are caused by the loss of the natural water of the horn, through some diseased condition, it can be renewed by restoring the water artificially. This is done by frequent washing with warm water, the use of wet bandages, and the application of glycerine mixed with an equal quantity of r[illegible]. If the trouble is due to undue heat or fever in the feet this should be removed by some cooling medicine, as a pound of epsom salts, repeated when found necessary. A horse that suffers much from this trouble should have the floor littered deeply with soft material and never stand in manure. An earth floor kept even is excellent.

Health and Exercise.

A Western paper prints an article with the above title, in which it says with great emphasis that luxury is a prolific breeder of physical ills. Having read the article with interest, I got to thinking on the subject, and concluded that the theory could be proved a sound one by some of my experiences.

When I was comparatively poor, and struggling to exist on six thousand dollars a year, I was as healthy as the conventional farmer, because I had constant exercise and mental worry to keep me in good condition. But as soon as I was wedded to wealth, it was different. I immediately invested in the luxury of a sealskin cap.

What was the result of this luxury? Why, before the winter was over all my hair fell out. When I was living on wind and obliged to paint my straw hat black in winter I had hair like an Indian.

At that time I simply wore ready-made shoes, and had all the exercise I required. But when I got wealthy, the doctor said my high living was making me too stout, and that I must keep my weight down. He suggested the luxury of a horse.

It took me about five minutes to get on the horse's back and three seconds to get off.

When I crawled out of the fragrant labyrinth of blackberry-vines in the next lot, and dragged myself across the ox-eyed daisies and under the fence, I was so mutilated and such a picturesque series of abrasions that the dog didn't recognize me at first, but was going to finish up the work commenced so successfully by the horse.

The doctor told me my digestion was so bad that I must confine myself to shell-fish as much as possible. Therefore, every day at noon I ate fried oysters, which I have always regarded as a great luxury.

What was the result of this enviable luxury? It was that when I got up to sell out a plumbing establishment at auction, I couldn't talk loud enough to be heard ten feet away. I had to get a substitute.

When I went to the elocutionist to take my regular lesson, he said I could auction no more. He was greatly surprised that I was not aware of the fact that many opera singers have had their voices ruined by fried oysters, and thought I had lived in the backwoods all my life when I said I had never heard even of the theory.

Then I made up my mind that I would aim high and be ambitious. So I went to Niagara Falls and became a hackman, and retired a rich man in two weeks.

Therefore, I firmly believe that luxury is productive of physical ills, and that physical ills may be caused to depart when the luxuries are lopped off and dispensed with.

When this theory is put into practice—if it ever is—we may expect to see such items as these in the papers of the future:

Mr. Mugg's little boy Tommy was taken with scarlatina last week. On Wednesday the doctor said he was beyond the aid of medicine, and must stop before morning. Mr. Mugg immediately gave his thousand-dollar Turkish rug to a tramp and burned up six valuable oil-paintings. In two days the boy was perfectly well, and sailing up and down a ditch on a log.

Charley Fitch, the variety-actor, returned to his palatial residence on Dean street on Monday evening, after a three-months' absence. His Siberian bloodhound did not recognize him in the dark, and lost no time in taking his master by the throat. Long and fierce was the struggle, and the actor was almost exhausted, when by a Herculean effort he managed to unscrew his opulent diamond studs and remove his massive gold watch and chain and throw them over in the next lot. Then the dog let go and became affectionate. On the following day he destroyed a lot of cut-glass and a number of plaques, and his throat was entirely healed before morning.

If your girl hints at ice cream, caramels, oyster suppers, or the opera tell her that luxury is productive of physical ills, and you would gladly lavish these things on her if you didn't think so much of her; that it made you sick to fancy her becoming deaf, near-sighted, dyspeptic or club-footed through your extravagance. Then, if you get engaged to her, give her a cheap garnet ring, or fear a luxurious diamond might give her sciatica. And after marriage keep down your expenses on the same plan.—R. K. Munkittrick, in Puck.

How a Dog Saved Its Blind Master.

Some time ago a blind gentleman, well known in the North of England went for a walk of several miles accompanied by his dog. He knew the road so well that he did not strap up the dog, but let it run loose. He had gone nearly five miles on his way, and was crossing some fields by a foot-path, when his dog gave a peculiar whine in front of him. He was about to climb a stile when another whine was heard. This startled him, so he crossed the stile as carefully as he could, feeling every step. Just as he got over the stile, the dog gave a louder whine of alarm, placed his fore feet upon his breast and held him fast against the stile. He tried to push the dog aside, but it would not let him proceed. The strap was, therefore, put around its neck, and the wise creature at once lead its master by a roundabout way quite out of the ordinary path. It appeared that part of the footpath which led past a stream had been entirely washed away by a flood, so that, had the gentlemen continued upon the old path he must have met with a most serious accident.

What made the sagacity of the dog more conspicuous on this occasion was the fact that it had not been with its master for eighteen months, he having been laid up for the whole of that period, and the dog living with a friend during the illness.—Little Folks' Magazine.

The Professor and His Barometer.

A characteristic story comes from Sewanee College in Tennessee. The students were to have a holiday. The afternoon before the day one of the scientific professors noticed alarming changes in his barometer. The sensitive instrument clouded up, showed great depression and was in a terrible state altogether. The Professor foresaw unprecedented storms and cyclones, and after deliberation rescinded the order giving the boys holiday the next day, postponing their proposed excursion. The next morning the sun lit up a cloudless day, balmy and mild. The boys, appreciating the situation, put on rubber coats, boots and attended recitations with umbrellas raised. They rushed through the soft sunshine as if pursued by howling winds, and shook themselves on entering the lecture-rooms as if emerging from drenching rains. The Faculty gave it up finally, let the boys off, and the scientific professor is overhauling his barometer.—Atlanta (Ga.) Constitution.

Destruction of Ancient Monuments.

The reason why the Pont du Gard is now so much more a perfect structure than that other great remaining work of the Roman architects, the Colosseum, is that it has always stood at a distance from towns and cities whose inhabitants might want its stones to build their palaces and their huts. It is not the hand of time that has, in most cases, destroyed the temples and other architectural works of the ancients, but the hand of man. They were built strong and massively; but, although they could resist the storms of centuries, they could not resist the crow-bars of men who found it much easier to take away their stones, already cut and shaped, than to quarry building material from the rocks. The world has now more respect for ancient remains than it used to have; and I feel sure that if every town arises near the Pont du Gard, the stones of the old bridge will not be taken to build its houses.—Frank R. Stockton, in St. Nicholas.

—The following is said to be a good substitute for matches where it would be unsafe to use them. In a vial of clear, white glass, put a piece of phosphorus about the size of a pea. Fill the vial one-third full of boiling-hot olive oil, and then cork it tightly. When a light is required, remove the cork a moment and then recork the vial. The empty space in the vial will become luminous. The process can be repeated as often as desired.—Boston Budget.

—The competitive tournament in fly-casting held in the New York Central Park was an interesting exhibition of the skill of anglers in throwing their fine grass lines a distance of seventy and eighty feet. The effect of these long throws with light rods was like legerdemain upon the spectators. William Blackford, a boy of thirteen, son of the Fish Commissioner, threw a line sixty-four feet.—N. Y. Sun.

—A curious animal was recently captured near Elmira, N. Y. It is a wonderful conglomeration of several forms of beast and fish, and as a peculiar formation is unexcelled in the history of monstrosities. Its body is in the form of a fish, while its head closely resembles that of a bulldog. It seems to be devoid of all feeling, as the prick of a pin produces no outward expression of pain.—Syracuse Journal.

—Among the prominent and most interesting exhibits at the London Health Exhibition was the dairy. The cows were milked in the presence of the spectators; the milk was then put into centrifugal skimmers, and in twenty minutes' time from the time it left the cow the spectator could spread the butter on his bread.

—A young widow with a genius for advertising herself had inscribed upon the tombstone of her late husband, "Sacred to the memory of Mathusin Beuchet, who departed this life aged sixty-eight years, regretting the necessity of parting from the most charming and best woman."—Chicago Herald.

—Church bells are going out of use in every large American city.—N. Y. Tribune.

CATARRH

HAY-FEVER

What is Catarrh? It is a disease of the mucus membrane, generally originating in the nasal passages and maintaining its stronghold in the head. From this point it sends forth a poisonous virus along the membranous linings and through the digestive organs, corrupting the blood and producing other troublesome and dangerous symptoms.

Cream Balm is a remedy based upon a correct diagnosis of this disease and can be depended upon. 50 cts. at druggists; 60 cts. by mail registered. Sample bottle by mail 10 cts. ELY BROS., Druggists, Owego, N. Y.

THE READING

Of this Notice May Save Your Life—Removal of Stones from the Kidneys—A Common Complaint Among both Sexes and Ages—A Brilliant Recovery.

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., March 22, 1884.

Dr. David Kennedy, Rondout, N. Y.:

DEAR SIR—For ten years I had been afflicted with Kidney disease in its most acute form. What I suffered must be left to the imagination—for no one can appreciate it except who have gone through it. I resorted to many physicians and to many different kinds of treatment, and spent a great deal of money, only to find myself older and worse than ever. I may say that I used 25 bottles of a preparation widely advertised as a specific for this precise sort of troubles, and found it entirely useless—at least in my case.

Your FAVORITE REMEDY—I say it with a perfect recollection of all that was done for me besides—is the only thing that did me the slightest good; and I am happy to admit that it gave me permanent relief. I have recommended FAVORITE REMEDY to many people for Kidney disease, and they all agree with me in saying that DR. DAVID KENNEDY'S FAVORITE REMEDY has not its equal in the wide world for this distressing and often fatal complaint.

Use this letter as you deem best for the benefit of others. Yours, etc. LYMAN CRAWFORD.

TOPICS OF THE DAY.

THE United States Treasury is so guarded that no successful raid can be hoped for by bank robbers.

THE doctors of Elmira, N. Y., have contributed six hundred dollars towards a skating rink. Very significant.

THE Parisians are very fond of the meat of the mule. It is preferred to horse flesh, and brings a higher price.

MARRIAGEABLE maidens in this country are elated over the announcement of the proposed tax on bachelors in France.

NEW ZEALAND will send to England this year about half a million frozen sheep—frozen, however, after the usual process of slaughter.

IT will cheer the small boy dragging his reluctant way to school to know that the peanut crop is a million bushels ahead of the record.

A SHERRY wine which the English import from Hamburg and think delightful, is composed of common alcohol, sugar, water and table salt.

THE latest fancy is to fasten the low-cut corsage of a dress with an exquisite gold clasp. These are designed in birds, mice, rabbits and snakes.

SIR MOSES MONTEFIORE has witnessed all the Presidential contests in the history of America, but he was enough to be at a distance.

THE annual product of sermons in this country is said to be seven millions. And yet it is claimed that the Americans are a restless, sleepless set.

EUROPEAN bankers estimate that the loss to the continent during the past summer by the cholera scarce exceeds $25,000,000. Switzerland suffered most severely.

CHURCH and State have been separated in Japan, and all sects can choose their own spiritual head. Caution is given, however, against fomenting religious disputes.

JOSEPH I., of Portugal, had a state coat with twenty buttons, each a diamond valued at $20,000, and the rest of its ornaments being in keeping with the buttons.

AMONG one hundred and twenty-five works of various authors recently prohibited in the Russian public libraries and reading rooms by an imperial decree, are books by Agassiz, Huxley, Lecky, Michelet, Bagehot, Lubbock, Lyell, Mill, Adam, Smith and Spencer.

M. DELESSEPS allows his ten children to play freely out-doors without wrapping of hands, arms and necks. His neighbors think that he is careless of their health; but only one of the ten is delicate, and he is a twin. The rest never suffer with colds.

THE willow tree at Mount Vernon which overshadows the tomb of Washington was originally a clipping from a tree which overshadows the tomb of Napoleon at St. Helena. It was brought to this country by an enthusiastic admirer of both Bonaparte and the Father of His Country.

THE microscope reveals that there are more than four thousand muscles in a caterpillar, and that the eye of a drone contains a thousand mirrors. There are spiders as small as a grain of sand, and they spin a thread so fine that it would require four hundred of them to equal the size of a single hair.

IT is announced that of the four great countries in which science has made the greatest strides, America leads, being followed by England, Germany and France. It must be admitted, however, that while in base-ball pitching America acknowledges no equal, England is still ahead in cricket and the great science of pugilism.

THE secret is out. Dr. Schweninger, of Munich, he who reduced the bulk of Prince Bismarck's figure, is said to have achieved the success by never allowing his patient to drink while eating, and until two hours afterward permitting him to quench his thirst. With no fluid to wash down the solids, one would scarcely be able to eat so much; hence, probably, the advantage.

THE United States Mint at Philadelphia issues what are known as "proof coins." They are struck from polished dies on a hand-press, and are intended for cabinets and coin collectors. The price charged is twenty-five cents in addition to the face value of each coin in the case of gold coin, but silver coins are only sold in sets, for which twenty-five cents is added to the value of the set.

PHILADELPHIA will not permit the street railway managers to return to the use of salt in clearing tracks from ice and snow. There is some difference of opinion upon the theory of the injurious effects of salt, yet it is the declared fact that the cold mixture produced by the use of salt was accompanied, some years ago, by an unusual prevalence of sore throat.

NATURAL gas in Pennsylvania is becoming a serious competitor with coal for fuel. The gas has been successfully introduced into several of the largest rolling mills of Pittsburg and Allegheny, and pipes are being laid with the purpose of introducing it into the houses of the two cities for heating as well as lighting purposes. The local consumption of coal has been seriously curtailed already in consequence, and is likely to fall off very much more before spring.

INTERNAL REVENUE.

Annual Statement of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

A Marked Decrease in the Receipts—The Number of Stills Seized.

WASHINGTON, November 9.—The annual report of Hon. Walter Evans, Commissioner of Internal Revenue, for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1884, has been submitted to the Secretary of the Treasury. The total receipts from all sources of internal revenue taxation for the year were $121,590,039, as compared with $144,553,344 in the year 1883, $146,523,273 in 1882, and $135,229,912 in 1881. It is estimated $115,000,000 will be collected the present fiscal year. The payment of tax on a large production of spirits in 1881 was a material factor in collections during the past year. The Commissioner says the falling off anticipated in the present year will follow from the diminished quantity of bourbon and rye whiskies produced in 1882, on which the tax will mature during the current fiscal year. Another cause contributing to reduction of the receipts will be the largely increased exportation of spirits in bond, on which, for various reasons, the owners can not pay the tax. Something like ten millions of gallons has already been forced abroad during the current calendar year because of stagnation in trade and refusal of Congress to extend the bonded period. A comparative statement of receipts for the fiscal year of 1883 and 1884, show a decrease of $16,041,850 from tobacco, increase of $2,536,610 from spirits, increase of $1,184,338 from fermented liquors, and decrease of $10,642,404 from taxes under repeal laws and penalties, making the total decrease $22,963,305. The cost of collection the past year was $5,100,451 as compared with $5,105,957 in 1883. This includes $58,000 for accounts of storekeepers and gaugers for the last half of June, 1884, that were not paid owing to the appropriation being exhausted, and for which a deficiency appropriation will be needed. The total expenses were a little less than 4 1-5 per cent. of the amount collected. The Commissioner says the diminution of gross receipts could not proportionately affect the cost of collection, as nearly the same force had to be retained. During the year 377 stills were seized, and 902 persons arrested for engaging in illicit distillation. The Commissioner says strong representations were made in vain to Congress at its last session against the policy of reducing the force of revenue agents below the number of thirty-five, fixed in the Revised Statutes. Only twenty can now be lawfully employed. This leaves too many avenues for fraud exposed, and the Commissioner says he fears it will result in much injury, as it is difficult for any one man efficiently to do the work belonging to a revenue agent in a territory embracing sometimes three or more States, and never less than two.

ON LOFTY HEIGHTS.

Daring Feats Performed by Workmen on the Washington Monument.

[Washington Letter.]

No day passes while work is in operation on the shaft that hundreds of opera and field glasses are not used in eagerly watching the workmen on top, who, even with the aid of powerful glasses, look scarcely larger than huge flies crawling slowly about. As the shaft grows higher the workmen are obliged to use greater care. They are not sailors, and although most of them are, to some extent, growing accustomed to working at such a great height, they, unlike the sailor must work without anything to cling to for security. A single false step, a single stumble, a little faintness or dizziness would be apt to leave nothing that in the least resembled a human being, whether the fall was down the shaft or at the ground outside. As they go higher they grow more careful, instead of becoming used to and careless of their danger. For this reason it is anticipated that each of the upper courses, which are so much smaller in horizontal surface, will take as much time to place in position as those at the base of the cap. Besides this reason, as the working space grows smaller fewer men can be employed on the top. But it will be finished long before the time fixed upon for the dedication.

The Plenary Council.

BALTIMORE, November 9.—The Plenary Council of the Roman Catholic Church, which convened in this city to-day, was one of the grandest and most impressive events ever witnessed in this city. Fully ten thousand people were present. Archbishop Ryan, of Philadelphia, preached the opening sermon. The procession was an imposing one. There are 250 members, and the council will be in session three weeks.

The Cholera.

PARIS, November 9.—It has transpired that since June 20 there have been 160 cases of cholera in Paris, sixty of which were fatal. A hundred deaths occurred at Aubervillier in July, but the disease was suppressed by energetic measures. The same energy seems to have been displayed in suppressing the news. There were six deaths from the disease to-day in Paris, and eighteen new cases.

Explosion in a Colliery.

LONDON, November 9.—Fire-damp caused an explosion in a colliery at Wasmes, in Belgium, by which twenty persons were killed. In the explosion to-day, in the Tredegar Coal and Iron Company's colliery, at Hockin, near the town of Tredegar, fifteen lives were lost.

Memorial Bricks in Churches.

LONDON, November 9.—The last plan for collecting money for churches is to distribute what are called memorial bricks. One hundred memorial bricks were lately disposed of at a new Wesleyan chapel at a guinea a piece.

Governor Cleveland About to Marry.

INDIANAPOLIS, November 8.—Rev. James McLeod, pastor of the Second Presbyterian Church, this city, and who formerly occupied the pulpit of a Presbyterian Church at Buffalo, N. Y., says he has it on good authority that Governor Cleveland will shortly be united in marriage with a young lady of Buffalo.

Successful Balloon Steering.

PARIS, November 8.—Captains Renard and Krebs made a balloon voyage to-day from Meudon to Billancourt, and returned, alighting at the point from which they started, in forty-five minutes. The aeronauts made a complete success in steering their balloon.

Quadruple Drowning.

BURLINGTON, IOWA, November 8.—Prof. Jones, Superintendent of the city schools at Mount Pleasant, with another gentleman and five ladies, entered a small skiff upon an artificial lake near that city, last night. The boat was only intended to carry three persons, and soon capsized. Prof. Jones, Miss Ella Carpenter, a teacher in the public school, and Etta Veter and Edith Braugh, students, were drowned. The remaining three persons were rescued.

A ROTTEN ROPE.

One Killed, Another Fatally Injured, and a Third Badly Hurt.

CINCINNATI, November 8.—This afternoon Henry J. Cross, Louis Snyder and John Davin, slate-roofers, were at work on the new synagogue, corner of Richmond and Mound streets, and were precipitated from the roof of the building to the ground below, a distance of over forty feet, by the breaking of the ropes of the scaffold on which they were standing. A crowd soon arrived on the scene, and the unfortunate men were picked up, bleeding and bruised. Cross was taken to the Hospital, but never spoke a word from the time he reached there until his death, which occurred an hour after the accident. He was a widower with four small children. Louis Snyder, another victim, was also removed to the Hospital. An examination being made it was found that both his arms were fractured, as also his left knee-cap. Besides these, his right thigh was badly lacerated and the left eye fearfully cut. Chances of recovery very slight. John Davin had his left thigh broken, and was bruised about the head. His condition is not considered dangerous. The cause of the accident was a rotten rope, which was unable to bear the weight of three men. They had just rigged the scaffold, having fastened the ropes to the iron hooks, when suddenly the former broke and let the men and scaffold go down. The roof on which they were at work is a slant one for about fifteen feet from the gutter. The scaffold did not go all the way down, but when it reached the brick chimney on the east end of the building it was stopped. The men, however, were thrown all the way to the ground into the yard adjoining the church, and Davin and Cross rolled thence into a hole leading to the cellar. The rope was not only rotten, but very frail, being only about three-quarters of an inch in diameter.

GOVERNMENT EMPLOYES.

Probable Effect of a Change of Administration.

WASHINGTON, November 8.—The effect of a change of Administration on the employes of the Government is now the most interesting question here. According to the report of the Civil Service Commission there are in all about 110,000 persons holding office in the United States, 50,000 of whom are Postmasters, 4,000 are in the Railway Mail Service, and 4,000 in the Internal Revenue Service outside of Washington, the rest being divided among customs and consular service and officers and clerks of Congress and of the Federal Courts. A large proportion of the whole, however, are classed as laborers. Coming within the provisions of the civil service laws and being protected thereby are three classes, as follows: 5,632 department employes receiving salaries from $800 to $1,800 per annum. 5,699 Postal employes receiving from $800 to $1,800 per annum, and 2,573 Customs employes receiving from $900 to $1,800 per annum. In the three branches of the classified service, there are, therefore, about 14,000 places that can be filled by competitive examination only. This leaves the large number of 96,000 persons subject to removal, more than half of whom are postmasters. In Washington the changes will not, it is believed, reach 500. This will include the higher officials, chiefs, messengers and laborers. In addition to those appointed by the President and subject to confirmation by the Senate, whose removal is possible, are the following: 1. The confidential clerk or Secretary of any head of department or office. 2. Cashiers of Collectors. 3. Cashiers of Postmasters. 4. Superintendents of Money Order Divisions in Post-offices. 5. The direct custodians of money of whose fidelity another officer is under official bond. 6. Persons employed exclusively in the secret service of the Government, or as translators, interpreters or stenographers. 7. Persons whose employment is exclusively professional. 8. The chief clerks, deputy collectors and superintendents, or chiefs of divisions or bureaus.

Strengthening the English Navy.

LONDON, November 8.—Lord Northbrook, First Lord of the Admiralty, has urged upon the Government the necessity to the English navy of one hundred first and one hundred and fifty second-class torpedo boats. In accordance with Lord Northbrook's urgent representations, the Admiralty Board has ordered the construction of four torpedo cruisers and a number of torpedo boats, for use at all important points at home and in the British colonies.

Shoots His Affianced and Himself.

BUFFALO, November 8.—Frederick Rose visited the house of Mrs. Louisa Bork, with whom he was under a marriage engagement, and shot Mrs. Bork in the side and arm. The woman jumped out of a window, when Rose shot himself in the lung and head. He will die. Mrs. Bork is dangerously wounded. The parties are respectable. Jealousy on the part of Rose is the sole cause.

Farmer Killed by a Tramp.

MILWAUKEE, November 8.—John G. Atkins, a prominent farmer of Waukesha County, was shot and killed by a burglarious tramp this evening. The murderer escaped, and hundreds of armed and determined men are now scouring the country for him. If captured he will be lynched.

Poisoned by Cheese.

JACKSON, MICH., November 9.—All the prisoners in jail here were poisoned by eating cheese which one of them had purchased and divided among his fellows. It is not yet known what kind of poison the cheese contained. The lives of all have been saved.

Latest Election News.

NEW YORK, November 8—12:30 p. m.—On a careful review of the figures by districts, as furnished by the agents of the Associated Press, corrected by returns during the day, so as to bring the record down to this time, the total vote of the State stands: For Cleveland, 559,886; Blaine, 558,426; plurality for Cleveland, 1,460. There are yet eighteen districts from which returns are still behind or questioned. These in 1880 gave Garfield a plurality of 736. The counties in which are the lacking districts are Essex, Madison, Saratoga, Sullivan and Ulster.

Exodus from Canada to the States.

QUEBEC, November 8.—The exodus of ship and other laborers from Quebec this fall to seek employment in Southern ports and American and Canadian lumber woods is altogether unprecedented. It is said nearly the whole population along the coves and hundreds of others from other parts of the city and neighborhood who never went away before are either gone or intending to go.

Digna Defeated.

SUAKIM, November 9.—One hundred and twenty Amarars and Bashi-Bazouks defeated Osman Digna's followers at Tambota, killing fifteen men and capturing a number of camels.

THE CHINA BACK-DOWN.

Decision of French Cabinet on Chinese Indemnity Confirmed.

Great Excitement and Much Discontent Prevails in Paris in Consequence.

PARIS, November 10.—Great excitement has prevailed in the lobbies of the Chambers this afternoon and evening owing to the confirmation of the report published in the morning Liberte that the Cabinet council on Saturday had decided to forego demanding indemnity from China. Much discontent prevails on account of this in the Tonquin Committee of the Chamber of Deputies. Charreau, Chairman of the committee, has resigned and the committee has resolved to postpone presenting its report until Ferry has made an explanation. It is reported active negotiations with the view to the settlement of the difficulties between China and France are in progress in London, between Marquis Tseng, Chinese Ambassador, and Earl Granville, English Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs.

LONDON, November 10.—The Times' Hankow correspondent telegraphs that the situation of five of the inland treaty ports is very dangerous, on account of their isolation. There is only one man-of-war to protect foreigners at Han-Kow.

MARSEILLES, November 10.—Four transports are being prepared here, to take five thousand men from Algeria to Tonquin.

HUMAN PASSIONS.

What a Homeopathic Physician Proposes to do in Science.

[Galignani's Messenger.]

A physician of the homeopathic school at Lyons professes, seriously, to have discovered a remedy for human passions—those moral diseases, such as envy, hatred, malice, anger, jealousy, obstinacy, avarice, etc., which render so many homes unhappy. On a pamphlet to show "how homeopathy may improve the character of man and develop his intelligence," he gives some wonderful instances of the cures alleged to have been effected by his special treatment, which he declares to be infallible. In one case a suspicious, jealous and violent husband who had ill-treated his wife for a period of sixteen years was cured, unconsciously to himself, by a few globules of nux vomica dropped quietly into his broth, and his wife was soon delighted to hear him humming some operatic airs and addressing her as "cherie," "ma poupoule," etc. After a few days' experience of this regime the terrible Barthold was transferred into the tenderest of husbands. By a skillful alternation of other medicaments a rascally husband was corrected of his inherent faults and willful outbursts of anger. A miserly father, on being subjected to a few doses of calcarea carbonica, gave his consent to his daughter's marriage, which he had previously resisted. By the same medicine, varied in its preparation, a young student, who was backward in mathematics, was enabled to master the science without further study. The calcarea carbonica, it will be noted, cured a miser and a dolt—both suffering from the tyranny of sums and figures. The Lyons physician has an antidote for jealousy: sulphur for drunkenness, salicea for obstinacy, arsenicum album for malice, and belladonna for imbecility. Those patients who do not happen to be laboring under these infirmities, and for whom the remedies just mentioned might be subscribed for other ailments, will probably protest against their use. But unhappy partners, who believe in the efficacy of this latest application of the science of homeopathy, may be tempted to resort to it as a means of avoiding a divorce, and certain husbands invoke its aid against their mothers-in-law.

Many Killings During Mexican Elections.

NUEVA LAREDO, MEX., November 10.—Yesterday the election in the Mexican States of Coahuila and Neuva Leon came off for State and municipal officers. Riot reigned in the city of Saltillo and in the towns of Sabinos Hidalgo and Bustamente. At Saltillo five men were reported killed and fifteen or twenty wounded. A number were also killed in Santa Catarina. At Sabinos Hidalgo a battle occurred between Government soldiers and citizens. District Judge Gracia was killed, while the Colonel commanding the troops, together with about twenty soldiers, are reported killed. The towns are full of dead and wounded on both sides. The rioting is attributed, to attempts by the Government to coerce citizens by the use of troops at the polls into support of the Government candidates.

Suicided in Jail.

QUINCY, ILL., November 9.—This morning when the Deputy Sheriff went to unlock the cells to let the prisoners confined in the County Jail out into the corridors, he found Henry Metternmeyer hanging to the grated door dead. He had torn his shirt into strips, and made a short rope with which he hung himself. Metternmeyer was awaiting trial for assault with intent to kill his wife, and for setting fire to his house and barn on his farm, near Fowler, early last spring. He was sixty years old, and given to drink. His wife had applied for a divorce on the ground of cruelty.

Six Sailors Drowned.

BOSTON, November 10.—Advices from Turk's Island, under date of November 2, state that the brig Julia E. Haskell, Captain Paine, sailed from Wavassa, October 11, for Baltimore with guano. She encountered a hurricane October 14, and sprung a leak, which rapidly increased, and the brig was abandoned on the 16th, and the crew of eight in number took to the boats and made Caicos Island, and in attempting to land the boat capsized, and all on board except the Captain and one sailor named Henry Grant were drowned.

Supreme Court Decision.

WASHINGTON, November 10.—The Supreme Court of the United States have decided that "where a prisoner is in the custody of a State Court of competent jurisdiction, not illegally asserted, he can not be taken from that jurisdiction and discharged by a Court of the United States on a writ of habeas corpus merely because he is not guilty of the offense for which he is held."

The Cholera.

PARIS, November 10.—Fifty-three new cases of cholera are reported in this city the past twelve hours, ending at noon to-day.

—An authority on health says: Great workers must be great resters. Every man who has clerks in his employ ought to know what their sleeping habits are. The young man who is up till three or four o'clock in the morning, and must put in his appearance at the bank or store at nine or ten o'clock and work all the day, can not repeat this process many days without a certain shakiness coming into his system, which he will endeavor to steady by some delusive stimulus.—Chicago Inter Ocean.

—As a preventive of petroleum fires it is now proposed to place a bottle of ammonia in each barrel of the oil; on ignition, by accident or otherwise, the bottle would break and the effect of the ammoniacal vapors would be to extinguish the flames.

—Rev. Father De Marzo, of San Francisco, has invented an altar lamp which will burn for a long period, brightly at night and dimly in the daytime. The lamp is said to resemble a small engine and to measure nearly four feet in height.

—There is a town in Pennsylvania called Needledoosey.—Philadelphia Press.

THE PRESIDENTIAL ELECTION.

The Contest in Doubt—The Election Depends on New York State—Both Sides Claim Small Pluralities.

NOVEMBER 7—2 a. m.—The latest news up to this hour is that all depends in the choice of President upon the State of New York, and both sides persistently claim the State by small pluralities. It is believed that the official returns in full will be required to determine the result. The margin is so narrow, and the result so important, that it is believed there will be great and bitter contests.

All that the masses of the people of the United States want in this matter is fair play, and all good citizens should depend, for the peace of the country, upon rigorous respect for the law, and final submission to the forms of legality. Below we give the returns, so far as heard from:

NEW YORK, November 7—1 A. M.—The World claims Cleveland will have a plurality in New York State of over 2,000. The New York Times claims the plurality will be 1,200 to 1,500. Republicans still claim Blaine will have a plurality, and the official vote will probably be required to decide it. The Tribune estimates that Blaine has a plurality in the State of 1,114 votes. The Times' returns from all but two counties show Cleveland has 1,278 plurality. The Sun's revised figures from fifty-five of the sixty counties make Cleveland's plurality 1,205.

ALABAMA.

MONTGOMERY, ALA., November 4.—Montgomery city gives five hundred majority for Blaine. Scattering returns from different quarters of the State show Cleveland will carry the State by a large majority. Jones for Congress, First District; Herbert, Second; Oates, Third; Sadler, Fifth; Martin, Sixth; and Forney, Seventh, all Democrats, are certainly elected. Small returns are received from the Fourth and Eight Districts, but the general indications are that Wheeler, Democrat, will carry the latter. There has been no disturbance anywhere in the State.

ARKANSAS.

LITTLE ROCK, October 5.—The Democratic majority in the State is upward of 20,000. All the Democratic Congressmen are probably elected.

COLORADO.

DENVER, COL., November 4.—Returns from the interior are coming in slowly. None of the cities or important towns have been heard from. Prominent Democrats, relying upon private advices, admit that the next Legislature is unquestionably Republican. Congressmen are still in doubt. The Republican State ticket is elected beyond a reasonable doubt, with the probable exception of Lieutenant Governor. Blaine's majority will reach three thousand, a slight gain over the vote of Garfield.

CONNECTICUT.

NEW LONDON, November 5.—Connecticut gives Cleveland 1,200 plurality.

DELAWARE.

WILMINGTON, November 5.—The Democratic majority in this State is 3,500, a Democratic gain of 2,500 over 1880. Lore, Dem., is elected to Congress. He ran ahead of his ticket considerably. Every Democrat for the Legislature is elected, and also every Democratic nominee on the ticket.

FLORIDA.

JACKSONVILLE, FLA., November 5.—Unofficial returns from all but three counties in the Second Congress District indicate the election of Dougherty, Dem. over Bisbee, Rep., by 700 plurality. The State is Democratic by 4,000 majority.

OREGON.

PORTLAND, November 5.—State Republican by 1,500 to 2,000 majority. Indications that Armstrong (Rep.) is elected to Congress from Washington Territory.

GEORGIA.

AUGUSTA, GA., November 5.—George T. Barnes, for Congress, is elected from the Tenth District, practically without opposition, and Georgia sends a solid Democratic delegation to Congress.

ILLINOIS.

SPRINGFIELD, November 5.—960 precincts, including 164 in Chicago, with seven yet to hear from, show a net Democratic gain over Garfield of 10,465. There are 2,400 voting places in the State. Republicans carry the State by a greatly reduced majority.

INDIANA.

INDIANAPOLIS, November 7—12:30 A. M.—By midnight official returns from sixty-seven counties had been received showing a plurality for Cleveland of 4,567. There are twenty-five counties to hear from, but there is no doubt that the Democrats have carried Indiana by from six to eight thousand. The Sentinel claims the latter figure.

LAWRENCEBURG, November 5.—In Dearborn County, complete, Cleveland received 3,521 votes, Blaine 2,481; Cleveland's majority 1,040, Gray received 3,491, Calkins, 2,518, with one Republican precinct to hear from; Holman 3,456, Cravens 2,276, with same precinct as above not heard from. Bainbridge, in Dearborn County, received 2,966, Givan 2,488, with a Democratic precinct to hear from. The Democratic county ticket was elected by majorities ranging from 700 to 1,100.

WABASH, November 5.—Wabash County gives Blaine and Logan a majority of 1,411. A gain over that of 1882 of ninety-six. Calkins' majority for Governor will reach fourteen hundred and Geo. W. Steele's election over M. H. Kidd, Democrat, is conceded by the latter by a majority of two hundred.

MARION, November 5.—Blaine's majority in this county is 749. Calkins' 545. Steele, Republican, is re-elected to Congress by 251 majority. Brownlee Republican candidate for State Senator from Grant and Madison Counties, is probably defeated by 500 to 1,000 majority.

RISING SUN, November 5.—The Republicans in this (Ohio) County elect the County ticket entire, and give a majority on the Electoral ticket of 165; on the State ticket 95; a falling off of 12 as compared with the State election of 1880. Heymer, for Representative, receives a majority of 105; Givan for Judge, 136.

GREENSBURG, November 5.—Blaine and Logan carry this County by 212 majority. Calkins, Republican, for Governor, by 207 majority. Representative and county officers all Republican by from 97 to 264 majority. In 1882 the Democrats had one majority.

VEVAY, IND., November 5.—Blaine's majority in Switzerland County is 70. Calkins's majority in Switzerland County 8. Holman's majority in Switzerland County 46. The Democrats elect a Representative by a majority of 9 in the district.

LAFAYETTE, November 5.—Congressman Ward is re-elected in the (Ninth) district by over four hundred majority. Blaine carries Tippecanoe County by six hundred majority.

NEW ALBANY, November 5.—All the precincts in Floyd County are in except two, and these two estimated give Cleveland 1,130 majority, a Republican gain of 28.

VINCENNES, November 5.—Knox County complete shows Cleveland's majority 884, a net Democratic gain of 12 over 1880.

IOWA.

KEOKUK, November 5.—Returns from the First Congressional District indicate the election of Hall (Dem.) by 46 majority.

KANSAS.

TOPEKA, KAS., November 5.—At 8 p. m. the Republican State Central Committee estimates Blaine's majority at 50,000, and Martin, Rep., for Governor, at 40,000. Every Republican Congressman is elected, and the Legislature is nearly unanimously Republican. Much scratching on local tickets is delaying returns.

KENTUCKY.

LOUISVILLE, KY., November 4.—Returns from county seats throughout the State say that the election passed off quietly and a full vote was polled. The State will give the usual Democratic majority. Democrats elect a full Congressional delegation, a Republican loss of two in the House of Representatives.

LOUISIANA.

NEW ORLEANS, November 5.—Later returns considerably modify the result of the election in this State, although still assuring it to the Democracy. The vote will be large, but much exceeding 100,000, and about the same as in 1880, the Democrats are suffering most severe from the apathy, and losing one Congressman in consequence of it. Official figures from thirty-nine parishes and unofficial returns from the other nine give a Democratic vote of 62,346 and a Republican vote of 42,659, a Democratic loss of 2,721, and a Republican gain of 6,706. The Democratic majority in the State will be 19,737. This will be largely reduced by returns from the river parishes.

MAINE.

PORTLAND, November 4—The Democratic vote falls off 30 per cent. and the Republican vote falls off 3¼ per cent. The Greenback vote gains 8½ per cent. If the towns to hear from lose at the same ratio the vote of the State will be 130,000, as follows: Blaine 71,800, Cleveland 52,000, Butler 4,500, St. John 2,000. Blaine's plurality will be 19,500.

MARYLAND.

BALTIMORE, MD., November 4.—Baltimore city complete gives Blaine 34,486, Blaine 27,890, St. John 1,280, Butler 114; Cleveland's plurality 6,596. Third Congressional District—Cole, Dem., 10,697; Pentz, Rep., 10,687; Silverwood, Prohibition, 339; Cole's plurality over Pentz, 5,316. Fourth Congressional District—Findlay, Dem., 15,723; Brown, Rep., 14,226; Odom, Prohibition, 624; Findlay's plurality, 1,497.

MASSACHUSETTS.

BOSTON, November 4.—One hundred and sixty-three towns and cities, including 166 precincts in Boston out of 273 give Blaine 67,775; Cleveland 66,152; Butler 8,536; St. John 4,831. The missing precinct in this city gave last year a Democratic plurality of 141. The Gubernatorial vote in Boston, with two wards to hear from, is Robinson, 35,435; Endicott, 35,997; McCafferty, 3,360; Seelye, 945.

MICHIGAN.

DETROIT, November 5.—From reports of 1,063 precincts and estimates of the remaining precincts, the Democratic State Committee place the Republican plurality at about 1,500. The Republican State Committee claims the State and electoral tickets elected by 7,000 plurality. All reports received up to 10 o'clock indicate Blaine's plurality at 3,593, and Alger's 1,251.

MINNESOTA.

MINNEAPOLIS, November 4.—Returns from the city and country are coming in very slowly. Both tickets were badly scratched. Indications are that Merriman (Democrat) has carried the city. Reliable figures can not be obtained until late to-night.

MISSOURI.

ST. LOUIS, November 4.—One hundred and ninety-five precincts in this city give Cleveland 17,315; Blaine, 16,799. Marmaduke, Dem., for Governor, 16,124; Ford, Fusion, 18,277. It is estimated that Cleveland will go out of the city with 2,000 majority, and Ford with 4,000 majority.

MISSISSIPPI.

MEMPHIS, TENN., November 5.—Morgan, Dem., defeats Chalmers in the Second Mississippi District, for Congress by 4,500.

NEW HAMPSHIRE.

CONCORD, N. H., November 4.—One hundred and five towns give Blaine 18,016; Cleveland, 14,141; St. John, 508; Butler, 165; Blaine's plurality, 1874. The same towns gave Garfield 18,270; Hancock, 17,298; Garfield's plurality, 1,062. The same towns give Currier 17,885, Hill, 17,513; Mason, 672; scattering, 138. Both Republican candidates for Congress are chosen by good pluralities. Both branches of the Legislature are strongly Republican, and four of the five Councilors will be Republican. Indications are for an increased plurality for Blaine over Garfield. Blaine's plurality will not probably be less than 4,500. There is probably no choice of Governor by the people. Currier, Republican, will be chosen by the Legislature.

NORTH CAROLINA.

WILMINGTON, N. C., November 4.—Returns from many counties remove all doubts as to the result in this State. The Republicans concede the State to the Democrats on both Presidential and State tickets. The Democrats claim their majority will not be less than 10,000. There seems to be little doubt that the Democrats have eight out of nine Congressmen, a gain of one.

NEW JERSEY.

JERSEY CITY, November 5.—The Republicans concede the State to the Democrats by about 2,500 majority. U. S. Senator McPherson claims that the Democrats have from 4,000 to 6,000 majority.

NEVADA.

About half of ... counted up to 3 P. M., but enough to show that Blaine, Washburn and the entire Republican Legislature are elected. Story County carried by 300 to 400 majority. Republican State Central Committee claim the State by 1,100 majority.

OHIO.

COLUMBUS, O., November 4.—City of Columbus complete: Blaine, 7,728; Cleveland, 7,156; Butler, 126; St. John, 75; scattering 6. Blaine's plurality, 572. All reports from Ohio grow more favorable for the Republicans, and the percentage of gain in the townships has steadily arisen. The Secretary of the State Committee claims that if the ratio of gain from one-fifth of Ohio keeps up it will give a Republican majority of nearly 30,000.

PENNSYLVANIA.

PHILADELPHIA, November 5.—The following named Congressmen are elected in Pennsylvania: First District, Bingham, Rep.; Second, O'Neil, Rep.; Third, Randall, Dem.; Fourth, Kelley, Rep.; Fifth, Harmer, Rep.; Sixth, Everhart, Rep.; Seventh, Evans, Rep.; Eighth, Ermentrout, Dem.; Ninth, Hiestand, Rep.; Tenth, Sowden, Dem.; Eleventh, Stern, Dem.; Twelfth, Scranton, Rep.; Thirteenth, Brumm, Rep.; Fourteenth, Bound, Rep.; Fifteenth, Brinnell, Rep.; Sixteenth, Brown, Rep.; Seventeenth, Campbell, Rep.; Eighteenth, Atkinson, Rep.; Nineteenth, Duncan, Dem.; Twentieth, Curtin, Rep.; Twenty-first, Boyle, Dem.; Twenty-second, Negley, Rep.; Twenty-third, Bayne, Rep.; Twenty-fourth, Jackson, Rep.; Twenty-fifth, White, Rep.; Twenty-sixth, Player, Rep.; Twenty-seventh, Scott, Dem.; at large, Osborne, Rep. Brumm is a Republican-Greenbacker. The Republicans gain four members, the present delegation standing: Republicans, 16 (including Brumm); Democrats, 12.

RHODE ISLAND.

PROVIDENCE, November 4.—Total vote of Providence: Blaine, 8,275; Cleveland, 4,411; Butler, 211; St. John, 73. Blaine's majority, 3,400. Newport gave Blaine, 2,041, Cleveland 1,298, Butler 4, St. John 15, against 2,064 for Garfield and 973 for Hancock. The vote of the State complete: Blaine 19929, Cleveland 12,438, Butler 425, St. John, 641. Blaine's plurality is 7,483, against 6,305 for Garfield in 1880. For Congress in the First District Spooner (Rep.) has 10,169, Slocum (Dem.) 5,663, scattering 567. Spooner's majority 3,497 against 2,498 majority in the same district two years ago. The vote in the Second District is—Pierce (Rep.) has 7,757, Page (Dem.) 5,985; Chadsey (Prohibition) 1,350, scattering, 188; Pierce's majority 64.

SOUTH CAROLINA.

CHARLESTON, S. C., November 4.—The elections in South Carolina to-day are for Governor and State officers, members of the Legislature and Congressmen, as well as for Presidential Electors. There is practically no opposition to the Democratic candidates for State offices, and in only four or five counties have Republicans nominated candidates for county offices. There is no serious opposition to the Democratic candidates for Congress, except in the First, or Charleston District, where Taft, Republican opposes Dibble, Democrat; and in the Seventh District, where Smalls, Republican, is opposed by Elliott, Democrat. The vote for Presidential Electors will be compared with the vote for Electors in 1880, and the vote for Congressmen with the vote of 1882. Scattering returns from a number of counties throughout the State indicate that the Democrats have elected their entire ticket by large majority, with six out of seven Congressmen. The election so far as heard from was peaceful.

TENNESSEE.

NASHVILLE, TENN., November 5.—The following Republican Congressmen are elected in this State: Pettibone, in the First District; Houck, in the Second, and Taylor in the Tenth. The rest of the Congressional delegation is Democratic. The Democratic majority in the Legislature is considerably reduced. Bate, Dem., for Governor, is probably elected by a reduced majority.

TEXAS.

GALVESTON, TEX., November 4.—Returns from the country are coming in very slowly. A heavy vote was polled throughout the State. Returns thus far predicate the election of the entire Democratic Congressional delegation.

VERMONT.

WHITE RIVER JUNCTION, VT., November 4.—Returns from 140 towns give Blaine 28,241, Cleveland 12,284; Butler, 405; St. John, 505. Blaine's plurality, 15,547; Garfield's plurality, 16,051. If the remaining 100 towns give a proportionate vote to the above, Blaine's majority will be upward of 25,000. The vote for St. John is drawn mostly from the Republican party, while Butler comes from the Democrats.

VIRGINIA.

RICHMOND, VA., November 5.—Nearly all returns received show Democratic gains and few losses. Democratic majority may reach 8,000. They claim 8 out of 10 Congressmen from the State.

WEST VIRGINIA.

WHEELING, November 5.—Twenty-eight of the fifty-four counties in West Virginia have been heard from, in most cases officially, with the following result: Fifteen counties show Republican gains of 1,878 over the result in October. Thirteen counties give Democratic gains of 634. A net Republican gain of 1,236. The remaining twenty-six counties gave a majority of 700. To offset the Democratic majority in October, and this it is not at all likely they can do.

WISCONSIN.

MILWAUKEE, November 6.—Returns have not as yet been received from more than two-thirds of the election precincts of the State. But these clearly show that the Republican ticket has won by not less than 12,000. It is also shown that the Republicans have seven out of the nine Congressmen, and have a majority of fifteen in the State Legislature on joint ballot.

—A carpenter in Central Mexico earns from 60 to 75 cents a day; a mason the same; a common day-laborer from 25 to 50 cents; a farm laborer who works by the month from $2 to $5 a month and "found." They work from daylight until sunset, with half an hour at nine o'clock and again at three for breakfast and supper. These hours are very long, but they take it easy, stopping every little while to smoke their cigarros, and accomplishing less than an American laborer will in six or seven hours' work. Their earnings are barely sufficient to keep them in food and clothes of the coarsest kind, with an occasional "real" over for the bull fight at Pulke; but they are the happiest people on the face of the earth.

THE COMMONWEALTH.

Louisville Leaf Tobacco Market.

The market has been steady for Burley tobacco, and the demand for all types at least equal to the offerings. Dark and heavy styles have been irregular for lugs and shipping leaf, with a very weak tone in the first half of the week, and more steadiness at the finish. The supply of such styles on offer, however, has been hardly sufficient to test the demand. Green-river fillers and wrappery sorts have been steady. New dark and heavy styles have sold at relative full prices. We quote full-weight packages new-crop sound tobacco as follows:

	Dark and Heavy.	Burley.
Trash	$5 75@ 6 25	$5 00@ 5 75
Common lugs	6 75@ 7 00	6 00@ 6 75

Miscellaneous Items.

GOVERNOR KNOTT has granted a pardon to Frank Steele, sentenced to the penitentiary for life for the murder of Captain W. G. Welch, in Woodford County, two years ago. Steele served about one year in prison. While Welch and a brother of Steele were in a difficulty the latter shot him, thinking that Welch was about to take the life of his brother.

IN Jackson's store, Richwood Station, on the Southern Railroad, Jesse Gooley, colored, Ben Carpenter, Jr., and a number of others were discussing politics the other evening. Gooley made some offensive remark to which Carpenter replied. Gooley in wrath pulled out a 44-caliber bulldog pistol and shot Carpenter, the ball lodging in the lung. Death was almost instantaneous. Gooley made his escape, holding those present at bay by his pistol. A posse of fifty men was instantly got in readiness and started on the track of the fugitive. The country was scoured in every section, but the fellow was not found.

MOTHER ELIZABETH HAYDEN, ex-Superioress of the Lorettino Order, died of consumption, at the Mother-house, Loretto, a few days ago. She entered the Sisterhood in 1838, and for twenty years filled the office of Mother. She was sixty-eight years of age.

EASTERN capitalists are going to establish a creamery in Winchester with a capacity of five hundred pounds of butter per day.

NEAR Claysville, Harrison County, Thomas Montgomery had a difficulty with Wash Wolff and his son about some fodder, W. Wolff coming at Montgomery with a knife, when he hit Wolff with a clapboard, fracturing his skull, from the effects of which he died. The evidence is that Montgomery acted in self-defense.

MRS. DAN. LANNAHAN was burned to death and her husband's hands nearly burned off, at Louisville, the other night, by the woman's dress coming in contact with the fire which had been built in an open pan in their miserable apartments. Both were helplessly intoxicated at the time.

THE new public school building for colored children at Frankfort has been completed and is occupied. The building is a three-story, and is situated on a lot of two acres in area, affording ample play grounds. The cost of the lot and building was $9,300.

THE Gresham Hotel, Livingston, burned the other morning. The fire originated in the east end of the house, up-stairs, but it is not known what from nor how it originated. The larger portion of the furniture and household goods were saved but very badly scattered on the hasty rescue and through the excitement of the affair. It was occupied and being run by Sam Ward and owned by his sister, Mrs. T. A. Gresham, the widow of R. P. Gresham, who built and formerly occupied and operated it. It is probably the oldest hotel in that part of the State and widely known by all the traveling public, it being an old wagon-stand and lodging-place for drivers before the Knoxville Branch of the L. & N. R. R. was extended south of that place. Mrs. Martin, one of the guests, was still asleep in an upstair's room and was not rescued until the room she occupied was on fire. There was no insurance.

PATENTS to Kentuckians: Thomas R. Pugh and A. P. LeGros, Louisville, car door lock; Benjamin Teipel, Covington, trap for throwing targets; E. J. Roberts and W. W. Culbertson, Ashland, car coupling; James H. Farmer, Russell, snap hook.

THE State Horticultural Society will meet in Bowling Green on the first Tuesday in December, which will be the second day of the month, when a large number of persons from all parts of the State will be in attendance, hundreds of invitations having been mailed to those persons who are interested in that important institution.

EDWARD WHITFIELD, who was in the war with Mexico, as well as the late "unpleasantness," died suddenly near New Market, Marion County, a few days ago. A brother of his was accidently killed by a falling tree near that place about two months ago.

A FEW days ago M. D. Carter entered the bar-room of Daniel Grigsby and called for a drink, which was refused him on account of his being drunk. Carter then said he would kill the bar-keeper and run the bar himself, seizing a glass, which he threw at Grisby, but missed him. He then ran behind the counter and grabbing at Grigsby. Grigsby struck Carter several times with an ax handle, cracking his skull and bursting a hole in his side, from which he died.

THE vote in Louisville lacked 5,472 of being the full registration, which is 22,963.

MRS. BELVA LOCKWOOD received one vote in the Ninth Ward, Louisville.

COLONEL JOSEPH MULHATTAN has announced his intention of contesting election, on the grounds that the names of his electors were not placed on the poll books.

R. C. ENGLEMAN and Smith Baughman, young men of Stanford, shot each other a few days ago over an old grudge. Engleman was shot twice in the back of the shoulder, and Baughman once in the breast. Neither of the men are dangerously injured unless the wounds may prove to be more serious than is now thought. Politics had nothing to do with the affair.

JOSEPH HANLON, Shelby County Surveyor, took strychnine through mistake for morphine, from the effects of which he died in a few hours.

The Death of Captain Cook.

Among the gods of this people was one Lono, the worship of whom was directed to a long pole bearing the image of a human head at the summit. This Lono once resided on earth. Departing from his devotees in a canoe, he told them he would return in a canoe with wings. When the Hawaiians saw the English ship they concluded from the winged sails that their deity had come. Though of another color, Captain Cook was evidently a chief, and must surely be Lono. The strange part of the story is that Cook lent himself to the delusion. Acquainted with the habits of the Pacific Islanders, and observant of their modes of worship, he knew the forms of respect to himself were like those paid to a god. He permitted himself to be adored for worship, and submitted to their sacrificial rites. Nay, more, he let himself be placed between two idols, be crowned with garlands like them, and be bowed to in prayers like those there addressed to them. It is true, the old missionary told the writer, that the natives, who had ever since lamented the murder, charitably supposed after their conversion, that the Englishman was mad. This idea is somewhat borne out by the admitted fact that Cook had not long before received a sun-stroke. As to the death of the Captain, the native story runs that, as he had given orders for his men to furnish firewood for the ship by taking away the sacred fence round the stone temple, great indignation was excited at the sacrilege. It was this that excited the insulting clamor. Tradition goes on to say that one man in particular, half suspecting that Cook was not the divinity expected, struck him with a stick at the back of the neck to test the question. The Captain cried out with pain. Immediately the Hawaiian was satisfied he was only an imposition, for no god would feel the blow, and he struck him down with a mortal wound. Such was the story told the writer at Honolulu, the same that the missionaries heard from an aged actor in the scene forty-five years after the sad event.—The Athenæum.

Properties of Quicksilver.

One of the most curious properties of quicksilver is its capability of dissolving or of forming amalgams with other metals. A sheet of gold foil, dropped into quicksilver, disappears almost as quickly as a snow flake when it drops into water. It has the power of separating or of readily dissolving those refractory metals which are not acted upon by our most powerful acids. The gold and silver mines pour it into their machines holding the gold bearing quartz; and, although no human eye can detect a trace of the precious substance, so fine are the particles, yet the liquid metal will hunt them out, and incorporate it into its mass. By subsequent distillation it yields it into the hands of the miners, in a state of virgin purity. Several years ago, while lecturing before a class of ladies on chemistry, we had occasion to purify some quicksilver by forcing it through chamois leather. The scrap remained on the table after the lecture, and an old lady, thinking it would be very nice to wrap her gold spectacles in, accordingly appropriated it to that purpose. The next morning she came to us in great alarm, stating that the gold had mysteriously disappeared, and nothing was left in the parcel but the glasses. Sure enough, the metal remaining in the pores of the leather had amalgamated with the gold, and entirely destroyed the spectacles. It was a mystery which we never could explain to her satisfaction.—Fireside.

THE official canvass of the vote commenced in New York yesterday, and the Republicans hope to discover irregularities to overcome Cleveland's plurality which they claim to be very small. The New York Sun which was bitterly opposed to Cleveland, corroborates the Democratic claim of a clear plurality for the Democratic electoral ticket in New York. The Republican lease on the White House hangs by a very delicate thread. It seem that the time has come, and the administration has to change hands.

CABINET making is now in order.

BELVA LOCKWOOD is not elected that's certain.

OUR Florence neighbors jolified Monday night.

There was a fine lot of roosters displayed last week.

THE Democratic majority in Texas is said to be 100,000.

THE Republicans lose one of their Congressmen in this State.

MUCH Democratic powder has been burned during the past week.

ST. JOHN is getting a majority of the cussings while Butler is a good second.

THE Governor says that Bush must hang in Lexington on the 21st of this month.

A WHOLE nation in suspense as to the result of the election of its chief ruler is a trying ordeal.

THERE will be a very little change in the political complexion in the lower House of Congress.

THE Democrats have had a big jolification evon if they do get counted out of New York's electoral vote.

THE gallows this year has filled more graves than in any previous year in the history of the United States.

CARLISLE and Morrison, whom their political opponents choose to call "free traders," were re-elected to Congress.

THE French are talking of holding a Congress in Paris to forever settle the important question of what offenses domand a challengo to fight a duel.

SOME of our citizens have an attack of pleuro-politico. "Us fellows" know what it is, it having been a chronic trouble with us for many, many years.

A BILL was introduced in the Vermont legislature the other day, by the opponents of capital punishment by hanging, providing for the execution of murderers by electricity.

IN Warsaw, Colonel Landram's home, for Congress he received 128 votes and Carlisle, 210; Landram ran 6 votes behind the Republican electors, whilo Carlisle ran 14 votes behind the Democratic electors.

IN the Dearborn, Indiana, Circuit Court district, Bainbridge was elected judge by about 500 majority. The canvass was a very hot one, but the renegade Democrat whose cause was espoused by the Republicans, was snowed under.

THE Louisville Commercial, (Rep.) was conducted on higher principles through the campaign which has just closed, than any other political sheet that comes to our table. Dealing in scandal and known campaign lies was no part of its work.

IF receiving election returns from the several States was as slow business as it was fifty years ago, the suspense that would result would be followed by a thorough demoralization of all business interest from which the country would be slow to recover.

THOSE who encourage the building of bonfires in the streets of Burlington should bear in mind that the town has no firo department; neither has it much available water, and every time a stack of barrels saturated with coal-oil is burned in the street the town is endangered.

WHAT is the good of this Prohibition business any way? Prof. Proctor says there will be no water on the face of the planet in fifteen million years, so that the prohibitionists would have to give up their principles just about the time they were approaching success.—Siftings.

THE President of the Kentucky Press Association promised to take forty or more of the boys to Mexico this month and return by way of New Orleans, provided they would put up $60 each with which to pay expenses, but as it was $59 68 more than any one of them could control, the trip had to be abandoned.

IN the first Congressional district, Oscar Turner, the "Old Outlaw," as he is called, was defeated for the first time by W. J. Stone. Turner never would submit his claims to a primary nor convention, always having made successful independent canvasses.

REFERING to the Senatorial contest, the Warsaw Independent says it was the hottest one that has occurred there for many years. Captain McDanell was serenaded the night after the election. He responded in a brief speech from the Court-house balcony, saying "we are all friends and neighbors, and though we were divided in the race, we should still remain friends as heretofore."

BY reference to the vote of this county it is seen that the candidates for Congress each ran behind his national ticket, Carlisle running farther behind than did Landram. Burlington is St. John's banner district, while Walton leads the column for Gen. Butler. A large vote was polled in the county, considering the fact that there was no local contest to induce the people to come out.

THE fact that there was a very light vote cast at the primary election on the 4th inst., is attributable in the main to the very limited acquaintance of the candidates with the people of the county. This was one reason why the RECORDER advocated confining the primary to Gallatin county. Many of the Democrats gave as their reason for not voting that they were not acquainted with either of the candidates, and cared nothing about voting.

THE Democratic primary held in this Senatorial district on the fourth inst. to nominate a candidate for State Senator resulted in the nomination of J. H. McDanell, of Gallatin county, by a decisive majority over his opponent and townsman, Dr. Brown. Mr. McDanell has proven himself a sagacious business man, and being of mature years and commendable habits, he will, no doubt, make the district a good representative. He is no orator, but the manner of the man is calculated to make him an effective worker in a committee room.

THE Louisville Commercial says: "The entrance of W. C. P. Breckinridge into Congress is an event upon which the whole State may congratulate itself. Thomas A. Robertson richly deserved re-election without opposition in the fourth, and John G. Carlisle and Albert S. Willis ran ahead of their Presidential tickets in their districts. James B. McCreary enters the House from the eighth with a round majority, though the district might have gone farther in many directions without faring worse. Old Frank Wolford has probably set the woods on fire in the eleventh and completes the delegation, which is a creditable one in the main, with but two or three weak points."

THE annual report of the Eastern Kentucky Lunatic Asylum, just prepared and sent to Governor Knott, shows that at the beginning of the asylum year the number of patients in the institution was 639; received during the year, 90; treated during the year, 729; discharged, removed or died, 145; remaining on September 30, 584. This is about the full capacity of the asylum. The Superintendent again recommends, and is supported by the board, that instead of sending chronic patients back upon the reluctant communities, cottages should be built within the asylum grounds where they would be cared for. The receipts in round numbers have been $34,000, the expens, $54,000 (not including October claims), showing a deficit of about $20,000. To meet there is due about $35,000 from the State. Nearly all tho removals were harmless incurables, returned to their respective counties under the law providing therefor, to make room for active cases, of which over fifty per cent. recovered. For the past year the death rate has been the lowest known, being only about five per cent. of the admissions.—Ex.

ALL the Democrats here abouts have been very jubilant since last Wednesday, and more especially have the younger Democracy, which has indulged in much noisy demonstration. Last Saturday night there was quite a demand for barrels, when it became evident that tho town was to be painted red at night. A large flag was run out from the Court-house cupola, while a banner on which were the portraits of Cleveland and Hendricks and numerous roosters both large and small, was suspended over the center of the street in front of the Court-house. As soon as dark came in every direction empty barrels could be heard rolling, all tending towards the intersection of Washington and Jefferson Streets, where they were nailed to a poll, saturated with coal-oil, and being raised the match was applied. The fire illuminated the whole town, while it was surrounded by a large crowd of men and boys who nearly split their throats yelling for Cleveland and Hendricks. All were in a good humor and an occasional Blaine hurrah was soon drowned out by the deafening cheers for Cleveland. The supply of barrels was soon exhausted; and the bonfire feature of the jolification ceased, greatly to the relief of the property owners.

Among the Farmers.

Winter apples have nearly all been gathered and stored away, but their scarcity will bring the price very high this winter.

Joseph Aanlon, County Surveyor of Shelby county, through mistake took a dose of strichnine, in the place of morphine, from the effects of which he died in a few hours.

The County Court last week allowed Prof. Boone $40 per month for his services as County Superintendent payable monthly, instead of a salary of $300 per year as was first ordered.—Clark County Democrat.

David Orr prized and shipped the first hogshead of the new crop of tobacco this week. It was of an inferior quality and belonged to Robt. Payne, and was shipped to the Louisville market.—Warsaw Independent.

Louisville has always been the largest tobacco market in the West, receiving about two-fifths of the entire Western product sold on the market Her annual receipts vary from 23,000 to 72,000 hogsheads, in 1883-4 reaching the immense total of 70,098.

Mr. Jas. L. Neal, ono of our most intelligent farmers and tobacco growers, has found the weevil in some twists that he had been saving for his own use. It cuts a clean hole through the twists while in the grub form and then takes to itself wings and flies away.—Harrodsburgh Democrat.

The acreage of tobacco in Scott county the present season is 35 per cent. larger than in 1883, and the yield is 25 per cent. greater. Five per cent. was frosted, and 10 per cent. house burned. As to the character of the crop there is a larger growth, less trash and tops, but leaf not so fine in quality.

A gentleman who was out in the woods Saturday reports that the migratory birds have not yet fled—an indication that our sudden cold snap was not the forerunner of an early winter. Observers of tho weather indications tell us that so early a cold snap indicates an open winter. This is something to be hoped for by the many poor people who are at work.—Bourbon News.

All that the mountain people are now clamoring for is the development of their mineral and timber resources, which are now regarded worthless, because of a lack of easy transportation to the market of the world. Give us slack water from Frankfort, our State Capital, to the Three Forks, and you will see eastern Kentucky prosper as no country on this continent ever prospered.—Three Forks Enterprise.

In Jessamine county the tobacco growers are troubled over the recent action of the insurance companies in with-drawing their risks on tobacco barns. On Wednesday a number of policies in various companies were canceled, giving as their reasons that they could not risk the incendiary spirit of the infuriated labors, who have resorted to this method of warfare upon tobacco. The growers are now at the mercy of the barn burners, and are necessarily alarmed at the outlook.—Danvill Advocate.

Tho Court-house which is now being razed to the ground is a relic of early times, so far as this county is concerned. In 1837 a storm did great damage to a court-house which stood where the new court-house is now being built. This was then tho County seat of Gallatin county. The next year, 1838, Carroll county was created by the Legislature, and Warsaw became the County seat of Gallatin. Among the first things undertaken by the authorities of the new county was the building of a new court-house. So the building now in process was erected, the cost being between nine and and ten thousand dollars. It was finished in 1839 and consequently has served us forty-five years.

Mr. L. T. Smith, sold at Moody's sale last week a milch cow that has a record unrivalled by any we have heard of. He purchased her nearly fifteen years ago and during the time she was in his possession she gave on an average 2[illegible] gallons of milk per day, amounting to 13,280 gallons altogether from which was made 3,770 pounds of butter, or five pounds per week. He bought her for $50 and during the time he owned her, sold $90 worth of calves of which she was the mother, and sold her for $25. Calculating the milk at five cents per gallon and the butter at fifteen cents per pound, the product of said cow for little less than fifteen years would amount to $1,337.—Eminence Constitutionalist.

A correspondent of the Country Gentleman gives the following advice on this subject; When husking the corn, save the best brightest ears, with four or five husks attached. "When enough are husked to make a trace or braid two feet long, it is braided up, tied with a strong cord, and hung on the kitchen wall to dry. It hangs there till the kernels at the end snap off, then it is hung in a cold, dry place till planting time. The mischief with seed corn is, that the cob does not get dry, and the chit of the kernel moulds; so of course it will not germinate. Dry the corn thoroughly, and there will be no trouble about it sprouting unless it is hung where it gathers dampness during the winter, and gets black and mouldy."

EDUCATIONAL.

[Communications for this column must be addressed to Prof. T. H. Stephenson, Burlington, Kentucky.]

Having been solicited to contribute to the educational column of the RECORDER, and having always been an earnest worker in matters of education to the extent of my ability, always adding my mite where I thought it would do the least good, I can not decline helping in this good work. I can not keep still. I am somewhat like the old woman who shouldered the broom to go out to battle. When asked what she expected to do with the broom, said she would show them which side she was on.

Teachers, there is a great war going on in the grand old State of Kentucky, between ignorance and intelligence. The common schools are struggling for existence Newly born, they aro left half clad with half rations at the door step of charity to be taken up and provided for by private contributions of friends. Thero be enemies who number a host who want to jump upon and stamp to death, and kick the remains into the gutter. Teachers, where do you stand while this is going on? You are the guardians appointed by and paid by the State to take care of this child of the State born of politicians. Will you not take up the broom once? Must not something be done? The live educators of the State are calling long and loud for the teachers of the State to come out of their sholls and do some thing; to stand up and make one pull in one united effort. Most counties have responded by organizing county teachers' associations to meet as often as is expedient, and in different parts of the county to accommodate alike all the teachers and friends of education, especially to bring out and wake up trustees and patrons. Some of these county associations have selected delegates to attend the State association to convene at Louisville next Christmas for the purpose of considering the educational issues which most directly bear upon the welfare of the State and people; to consider what steps are expedient and to make a united stand for such measures as may be there adopted. Is old Boone, with all her wealth and boasted privileges to have no voice or representative in this body of intelligence? Have we teachers no interest that should be represented there? Are our schools in every respect a success? Is the school system, in all its ramifications, perfect? Do the people give it proper encouragement and support? Are you satisfied with your wages and the tools furnished you? Then "lie supinely upon your back and hug the delusive phantom," while the children cry for bread. If not, can we not hear from you in a more "substantial way than discussing tweedle twaddle and twodle-twoddle of the school-room curriculum. How many teachers will hold up their hands and say that such discussions have been an iota of advantage to them in former Institutes? We have heard you complain, but are you willing to take one step toward tho remedy, or in a different direction? I care not whether my child learns his letters before or after beginning to read, so it has the proper facilities at school, with an earnest teacher. I care nothing for a "new pronoun," for they will stop no holes to keep the wind away, nor ease the urchin's bones while shivering over his task.

The great problem, how can we bring the patrons in sympathy and working unison with us and their children? is momentus and uppermost and must be solved and made a reality, e're we can take one step in advance, or it would be expedient to suggest the slightest reform. And in what better way can we secure this result than in holding these meetings among the people—governed by uniform and zealous action? I am anxious to see such a move and to serve in its ranks. How many are with me? Speak out. Let us act. More in future. **

EDISON, the inventor, has made the following prediction: "As to the changes which will be effected by electricity within fifty years in the city of New York, I would say that I believe electricity will propel the cars of the street and elevated roads, light the city within and without its buildings, furnish power for all purposes, work telephones and burglar alarms, deliver the mail, convey parcels, detect and signal fires, operate fire engines, and possibly displace animal locomotion for vehicles.

HENCEFORTH there will be no difficulty to find candidates for the office of sheriff. Cleveland's first office was that of sheriff.

SOME ONE EXPLAIN.

To the Editors of the Recorder:

There seems to be an impression prevalent in some quarters, that our county finances have been badly conducted for several years past, and that the county indebtedness now amounts to somewhere between $6,000 and $8,000. The people of the county understand that there has been some trouble about the county levies for 1881 and 1882, and that it is probable that there was, in reality no county levy for 1882; yet, a levy for that year has generally been collected, while the deficit of the county levy for 1881, not accounted for to the county, reaches about $1,700. Now, let someone possessed of the opportunity, investigate the condition of the county finances, and then advise the people through your columns what the real indebtedness of the county now is, and whether in arriving at the aggregate amount of indebtedness the deficit of the levies of 1881 and 1882 are taken into account?

The taxpayers of the county are disposed to want value received for all the taxes they pay the county, and will see to it, when advised, that responsibility be placed where it belongs.

Again. the people have been hearing for some months that the county is involved in a law suit against the late Sheriff and his sureties for the recovery of $1,700 on the levy of 1881, and that the County Attorney has little or no faith in the suit. Yet, the case is being pushed. If this be so, who is advising the suit, and who is paying the bill? Does the County Court prosecute the suit against the County Attorney's opinion for the novelty of the thing? as it is understood the County Attorney has no faith in the case. SAMBO.

BUTLER has subsided. The Louisville Post says "he is remembered now only as a polecat is some time after the animal has passed through the lower part of the premises. There is a very unpleasant odor left, but then it is passing away."

On Wednesday night, a small crowd were jollifying in front of the Courthouse over the election returns, and in firing off a cannon that was brought here from Cincinnati, they charged it too heavily, and the result was an explosion. Fortunately there were very few present, it being a late hour, 11 o'clock. George Johnson, who fired the cannon, was knocked about twenty feet and remained insensible for nearly an hour. He was not seriously injured and is able to be about. The concussion and pieces of the cannon broke eleven windows in the Courthouse and two large window panes in ... Craig's establishment. Pieces of the cannon were thrown over a square, ... fortunately no further damage was done.—Warsaw Independent.

NOT GUILTY.

James Rogers and Sons Acquitted of the Charge Conferred Against them by Black Clarkson & Co.

A Bogus Detective in a Hurry to get out of the County.

A Conspiracy That Did Not Pan Out

Esquires Bannister and Norman, of Union, being members of the Union Detective Association declined to preside as an Examining Court for the investigation of the charges conferred against James Rogers and his two sons by Black Clarkson & Co., and last Wednesday morning they were arraigned before Esquires Oscar Gaines, of this place, and Joseph Wagstaff, of Florence, the Commonwealth being represented by County Attorney Tolin, and the defendants, by H. P. Stephens, of the law firm of Riddell & Stephens, of Burlington.

Owing to the gravity of the charges against the Rogers, they and their neighbors were anxious to have them thoroughly sifted, and three days of hard and wearisome investigation was necessary to complete the trial, which resulted in the exposure of one of the most infamous schemes ever concocted to ruin and bring down to disgrace any set of men.

The scoundrel who introduced himself to the Union Detective Association as a detective, was present at the examining trial according to his promise, but when put on the witness stand and subjected to a severe cross-examination it was soon plainly manifested that he was a bogus article, and is now strongly suspicioned of being one of Clarkson's "trusties," as none other would have been chosen to assist in such a daring scheme to falsly and maliciously implicate innocent parties in such rascality as that with which they accused the Rogers party.

It was shown on the trial that Anthony, the detective, and Black Clarkson were not strangers, as they claimed to be, but that they had spent several months working together for Thomas Cochoran in Carroll county. After Mr. Cochoran heard of that with which Clarkson had been accused he refused to allow him to stay when he proposed to commence work a second time.

On the trial Clarkson's movements, for some time in the past, were followed up, being related by some of the best men in Gallatin and Carroll counties, and he was generally in company with the two saddles found in the tobacco house on James Rogers' farm, having been seen with them but a few days before they were found and James Rogers and his son Beauregard were arrested.

All suspicion of a stolen horse's carcass having been buried or burned on James Roger's farm was wiped out by the testimony of Thomas Cochoran, of Carroll county who identified the four feet found in the sack at the time the saddles were found, as belonging to a large sorrel horse which Black Clarkson had sold to a tenant on his father's farm, in Carroll county. Mr. Cochran says that a few mornings after the tenant purchased the horse, it was found dead near the corner of a log stable from which one log projected some distance from the building. The horse's skull being broken and the end of the projecting log covered with blood, it was taken for granted that the horse had run against the end of the log during the night and killed itself. Black assisted to move the horse, and some days after, he (Cochoran) noticed that all the feet had been cut off, but thought nothing more about it. From the description Cochoran gave of the horse, a gentleman from near Nicholasville who had lost a horse and was present at the trial, said it was certainly his horse. The feet being shown to Cochran he was satisfied that they came off of the carcass on his father's farm, in Carroll county, while the Nicholasville gentleman recognized them as the feet of the horse he had lost. It is now suspicioned that the horse's death was not caused by colliding with the end of the log, but that it met with foul play.

Anthony and Sheriff Clutterbuck were paid by the Detective Association the $100 reward offered for the capture of Clarkson to divide as they saw proper. Clutterbuck took $25 and Anthony $75, and was soon on his way out of the county, pretending that he thought his life was in danger as long as he remained in Union.

The trouble into which Clarkson and Anthony precipitated the Rogers was certainly a desperate effort to place them in such a condition as to break down their efforts at prosecuting Black Clarkson in Nicholasville, for the theft of one of their horses some time since, but it failed to pan out, and the unexpected appearance of Mr. Danells, of Kenton county, on the scene was the first thing that occurred to disconcert their plans. It takes sharper men than Clarkson or Anthony either seem to be to successfully plan and execute as deeply laid scheme as that attempted on Rogers and boys.

The proof of a conspiracy was so conclusive that the parties were easily acquitted.

Mrs. Anna Grant, wife of W. E. Grant died Thursday morning of this week of consumption. This announcement will be received with sorrow by the many friends of this most estimable woman. Mrs. Grant was a grievous sufferer for many months, and had been, within the year past, to various health resorts, spending some time in Texas, in which place she found temporary relief; but alas, that deceptive disease, consumption, had too firm a grasp upon the frail form, and all that loving friends and careful nursing could do was to smooth her pathway to the grave. Hers was an exceptionally cheerful, sunny disposition, over looking on the bright side, it seemed to the observer, a woman of culture and filled with christian graces, her loss to her husband, father, mother and sister is irreparable. The remains were taken Friday to Boone county, the old home, for interment.—Carrollton Democrat.

The deceased has a very large circle of relatives in this county to mourn her loss.

The woods wear a beautiful hue—the blush of fall.

MURDER AT RICHWOOD.

Ben Carpenter Shot Down in the Presence of His Friends, who let His Slayer Escape.

Tuesday of last week a negro who lived on Hon. Reuben Conner's farm near Richwood, attended the election at Walton, where he became saturated with whisky, which made him troublesome. In the afternoon he returned to Richwood armed and rendered himself obnoxious to several persons in the store among whom was Benjamin Carpenter, son of Woodford Carpenter who also lives near Richwood. It seems that the negro and a man named Henry Wagoner were in conversation in the store, and Benjamin Carpenter also engaged in the conversation, but statements of witnesses differ as to what caused him to take part in the conversation. But few words had passed when the negro drew a revolver and fired, the ball taking effect in Carpenter's breast from the effects of which he soon expired. The negro leveling his pistol on those present, and threatening to kill the first man that offered to molest him, backed out of the storeroom, giving an ugly shrug and yelling like a demon when he passed out at the door. The awful deed so confused those present that the negro had some distance the start before any pursuit was commenced.

The news of the killing spread like wild fire, and the neighborhood was soon intensely excited, and had the negro been captured he would have been dispatched in short order.

As soon as arrangements could be made the county was scoured by armed men, but the murderer successfully evaded them and made good his escape.

That the negro was allowed to escape when so many were in the room where the killing took place can only be accounted for on the hypothesis that they were all thoroughly intimidated.

A reward of $500 has been offered for the capture of the murderer, whom it is supposed escaped to Indiana, a suspicious negro and one corresponding pretty well to the description of the murderer being seen going toward Rising Sun, to which place he was crossed by the ferryman at Rabbit Hash.

Florence.

The enterprising correspondent from Plattsburg wants to know the whereabouts of Gas Ometer. Well, here I am, and as full of gas as ever. The fact is, I have been aboard the grand old ship U. S., on a perilous voyage, and lost in the fog—not river fog nor ocean fog, but the great political fog that has hung about us like a black pall for several weeks, threatening to shut us out from the shores of civilization; but thanks to the brave captain and trusty pilot, we passed the dangerous Republican reefs, and Butler snags, and Prohibition traps, safely, and as the mist cleared away on last Wednesday morning, we heard that old Jacksonian cock away down in New York Harbor, crowing for Cleveland and Hendricks, and we put in and cast our anchor there. If any one don't believe Cleveland and Hendricks are elected, we can prove it by the official figures right here in Florence. The only difference is that our majority is larger than they made it in New York. We make a plurality of 10,000. I think we are correct. On the strength of this glorious news, we are going to have to-night, Monday, Nov. 10, one of the rousingist, noisiest, roosterest old fashioned Democratic jubilees of the season.

But I can't write with all the hurrahing and horn blowing in my ears.

We have had any amount of weddings of late, but they will have to go by default if left to me to describe, while the country is upside down. Just hurrah for Cleveland and Hendricks, and wait till this muss is over.

Things funny to see. For instance: An old Democrat voting for Blaine just to save his vote.

A prohibition man swapping his vote with a whisky man, or a Democrat swapping even with a Republican.

Ben Stephens, Tom Swetnam and Dr. Scott herding roosters.

Union.

Our village, after the exciting scenes of last week, consequent upon the examining court of investigation concerning the guilt or innocence of James Rogers and Beauregard Rogers, has resumed its ordinary tranquility, save an occasional shout for Cleveland and Hendricks.

In as much as the Rogers family is connected, by marriage and otherwise, with some of Boone county's staunchest and best people—people whose integrity and high standing no one will question, we deem it due to all concerned to say that for a plot to blacken the names and forever indelibly stain the character of that family heretofore unknown suspiciously as criminals, it equals, if it does not excel in diabolism, the quintescence of villainy and rascality. We are glad to say that this investigation has amply vindicated the character of these men, and their innocence, as to the charges preferred, is unquestioned by even the most skeptical.

JOHN TREVANION'S STORY.

They have laid him to-day in the church-yard old,
And I sit by myself in the twilight dim,
With thoughts going back to the earlier days
That I passed at the school or the play-ground with him.

Over half of a century memory leaps,
And brings the young life into being again,
When we were a couple of barefooted boys,
And to him I was Jack, and to me he was Ben.

Young Benedict Brown was a shoemaker's boy;
My father, the wealthiest man in the town;
But boys are not sordid, and soon we were known
As Damon Trevanion and Pythias Brown.

The two of us went to old Morris's school,
And were constant companions when school work was done;
But, mark you, though he was at head of the class,
In fishing I always caught two to his one.

While chatting together one day when half grown
We talked of the future, and what we should do
When each came to manhood; I said I would strive
To double my fortune before I was through.

Quoth Ben, "You'll have money to further your plan;
I have nothing but firm, honest purpose, and I
Intend to read law, win a name and respect,
And be member of Congress and Judge ere I die."

I laughed. "'Tis a very good purpose," I said;
"You aim pretty high, Ben; but think, after all,
How rocky and rugged and steep is the road,
How high is the hill, and how far if you fall."

He answered: "Though rocky and rugged the road,
Its length may be traveled by one with a will;
And up to the House they call Beautiful, Jack,
The Pilgrim must climb by the Difficult Hill."

His words brought the story of Bunyan to mind,
And the blood to my cheeks by my shame was impelled,
For I felt that the man with the muck-rake was I,
While he gazed at the crown by an angel upheld.

And I knew that, with honor and courage possessed,
He would follow the earnest career he had planned;
So I said "Well, my comrade, whatever your aim,
Count on Jack as your friend;" and I gave him my hand.

I left him for college, and Ben went to work;
He sat on the shoe-bench and hammered away,
Made enough to support him and buy a few books;
The night gave to study, to labor the day.

'Twas but in vacations I saw him for years;
He was there, while I read at my college afar;
But a week ere my bachelor's honors I took,
Young Benedict Brown had been called to the bar.

I crossed the Atlantic, and roamed foreign lands,
Was gone for ten years; and, returning again,
I sought for old friends, and among them I found,
Ranking high among lawyers, my school-fellow, Ben.

Not rich, but with comforts around him, and blest
With children and wife and his fellows' regard;
But he owned, as we sat after dinner and talked,
That the climbing of Difficult Hill had been hard.

He gained, in the end, all he aimed at and more—
Congress, Governor, then was Chief Justice at last;
And as I had become, as I wished, millionaire,
We often recurred to our hopes of the past.

Our friendship ne'er checked; you may judge what I felt
When the telegraph flashed me a message to come,
If I'd see my old friend ere his bright eyes were closed,
And the silvery voice, thrilling thousands, grown dumb.

I stood at his bedside; his fast glazing eye
Lit when he beheld me; though dying, and weak,
His lips moved; I bent to the pillow my ear;
And he managed, in difficult whisper, to speak—

"I go to the House they call Beautiful, Jack;
I have done with all climbing on Difficult Hill."
Then he smiled, and a glory came over his face,
And the heart of the Pilgrim forever was still.

ON SHORT ACQUAINTANCE.

A "Genuine Case" and Its Unfortunate Results.

CHAPTER I.

The scene in Avranches, the time evening. Two men are sitting in the public gardens listening to the band, which is practicing for the forthcoming fete. But neither of them seems to have more than a cursory attention to give to Auber's overture.

"Is it a genuine case this time, Ernest?" said the younger one.

"Why say this time? Have I ever owned to a genuine case before?"

"No," replied Charles, "I can't say you have. It's unfortunate that the first time it is genuine, there are difficulties in the way."

"There is an English proverb about that," said Ernest. "'True love never runs smooth,' or something to that effect. Fate is against me, and always has been."

"My dear fellow, that is doing fate an injustice. You have had plenty of successes—more than your share."

"It is that I complain of," said Ernest. "Had I been accustomed to disappointments, I might bear this one. I have had successes, when I have not cared a straw whether I succeeded or not; now that it is a matter of life and death I am doomed to have my wish unfulfilled."

Charles gave a light laugh.

"My dear boy, do you call a woman's love a matter of life and death?"

"It often has been," was Ernest's reply.

"Oftener to the woman than the man."

"Because it is the woman who is most often the disappointed one. In this case it is the man."

"But even supposing that fate is against you for once, is it wise to stake happiness on one thing?"

Ernest shrugged his shoulders.

"My dear Charles, it is easy for you to be philosophical. You do not love Suzanne."

"I will if you wish," retorted Charles, lightly.

"Let us go back to the hotel," said Ernest, shortly.

Charles put his hand on his arm.

"Forgive me; I spoke stupidly. I can feel for you, though I talk lightly. Is there anything I can do to show my sympathy?"

"Yes," said Ernest. "Let us get away from here; that band is too loud, and the people are getting thicker every minute."

He took his friend's arm, and they wandered slowly down the road that leads to the sands.

There was no one to interrupt them; the only passers-by were tired laborers on their way home, or an occasional carriage full of tourists, being dragged up the hill by the weary horses.

"I will tell you what you can do for me," said Ernest, speaking gravely and earnestly; "I want a friend now more than ever I have done before. I mean to see if you are one."

"You may take it for granted," was Charles' reply.

"I will. Suzanne, as you know, loves me; I love Suzanne more than life. Do you know why I can not marry her?"

"I've never heard the whole story. She was betrothed before you stepped in, was she not?"

"No; this the truth about it: Three years ago my elder brother, who was an officer, quarreled with her father. There is no doubt whatever that my brother was in the right; the quarrel was forced on him. A duel followed, and Suzanne's father was killed."

"I never heard of that," said Charles in surprise.

"No, it was hushed up, and my brother went to Algiers, where he died last year. Scarcely anyone knows the real cause of M. Devriere's death. You can easily imagine the two families saw little of each other afterward. It happened, however, that Suzanne and I met in Paris: she was ignorant of the whole story. I was loth to act as if there where any cause why we should not meet on friendly terms, the more so as I was greatly charmed with her. In a week the mischief was done. I was in love with her and could not leave her."

"And she?"

"She was not indifferent to me. But her aunt came on the scene, saw what was going on, and demanded an interview with me. I granted it, of course. She told me that either I must break off all intercourse with Suzanne or tell her the whole story. I naturally refused to do either. The result was that she told Suzanne herself."

"Why could she not hold her tongue?" asked Charles angrily. "It was no good to spoil more lives."

"She was the dead man's sister. I can not blame her. She told Suzanne, and ordered her never to see me again. But we had one more interview. I spent the most terrible hour of my life then."

Charles said nothing. Ernest recovered his calm, which he had for a moment lost.

"She confessed her love for me, but refused to marry me. Her aunt threatened that if she ever saw me again the whole world should know she was going to marry the brother of the man who killed her father. She could not face that."

"Poor girl!" murmured Charles.

"I don't blame her," continued Ernest. "It would be a terrible thing to do. So we have separated."

"Do you think her aunt meant to carry out her threat?"

"I am certain of it. I left Paris the day after I saw Suzanne; a few weeks later I heard that she was betrothed to M. Courtin. I know she detests him; she has often told me so. They are to be married next Monday."

"There is, then, no hope for you?"

"I suppose not," was the sad reply; "yet there is always a chance. She may be braver than she imagines. I shall not despair finally till she is married. If she breaks it off I shall know the reason, and nothing shall separate us then."

"What is it that you wish me to do for you?" asked Charles, bringing the conversation round to practical matters.

"This," said Ernest. "I start to-morrow for England. I can not stay here; I must travel—do something to try and get rid of the horrible monotony of my ordinary existence. I want you to send me word directly the marriage is over, or, better still, will you put an advertisement in the English Times? There is a column for that sort of advertisement. Berthin can tell you all about getting it in. Put it ambiguously, so that no one but I can tell what it means. Wherever I may be I shall be able to get a copy of the Times, I should think—especially if I keep where I can get one," he added, with a smile.

"That is more in your old style," said his companion. "Do try and pull yourself together; it's a bitter pill, but all isn't lost because you fail for once in your life."

"You are talking about what you don't understand," was Ernest's reply. "Let us go back."

There was very little conversation during the walk home, but when they were once more at the hotel, seated on a bench outside the salon enjoying cigars and coffee, Charles took up the talk at the point at which it had been dropped.

"Can't you make up your mind definitely where you are going?" he asked. "If you will, I will try and run over myself and bring you the news, and then, perhaps, we can see something of England together."

"You are very kind, Charles, but I won't trespass on your kindness to that extent; I shall not be the sort of companion any man could stand. Beside, I really don't know where I am going."

"But how about your business? Aren't you going to have your letters forwarded?"

"No."

"Will no one know your address?"

"My dear Charles, if I don't tell you, do you think it probable I shall tell any one else?"

Charles saw it was no use to press the point; he acquiesced with a shrug.

"And now, my dear fellow," said Ernest in a lighter tone, "let's have a game of billiards. I've bored you enough for one evening. Come indoors, and I'll promise you that you shan't have to complain of me any more to-night."

CHAPTER II.

The next morning Charles rose at nine and came down to the coffee-room to have his cup of coffee and roll. His friend was not there, but at that he was scarcely surprised, for they had sat up late the previous night.

"I half hope he won't take this mad journey, after all," said Charles to himself; "he was all right last night after we came in—quite his old self again."

However, Ernest did not come down, and Charles finished his breakfast alone. Just as he had finished a waiter brought him a note. It was from Ernest.

DEAR CHARLES:—I am off for England. Don't forget your promise.
Yours, ERNEST.

Charles was thunderstruck. But there was nothing to be done; he found that Ernest had started early in the morning, taking a carriage in order not to have to wait for the diligence to Pontorson. There were nothing for Charles to do but to pack up his things and prepare to return to Paris; his little holiday had come to an untimely end.

Meanwhile, Ernest Dumont was approaching Pontorson, where he intended taking the diligence. His only luggage consisted of a small valise. He was silent during the journey, to the great satisfaction of his blue-bloused driver, who was taciturnity itself. He neither demanded a pourboire nor gave any thanks when he received one.

Although Ernest had time enough on his hands, he yet was feverishly anxious to get to his destination, although he only vaguely knew what that destination was. The great thing was to get out of France. It would be easier to endure his anxiety when far away.

The boats and trains fitted well, and the same day that saw him leave Avranches saw him safely installed in a quiet hotel near Charing Cross. He entered his name as Eugene Dubois.

Once alone he entirely belied the assumed gayety which he had shown when last with his friend. He threw himself into a chair and seemed utterly and entirely miserable.

Now that he was far from all his friends he began to feel the want of them. He had voluntarily expatriated himself; he had intentionally cut himself clear from all his old ties. Not a soul on earth knew where he was. Few, he thought sadly enough, would care. He was alone; it had been his wish to be so for weeks past, and now that his wish was fulfilled he was more miserable than ever.

However, he had enough sense left to know that the only way to prevent time from dragging along interminably was to occupy himself. He had only been in London once before; suppose he were to have a solitary ramble? Surely in so busy a city there must be something to distract his thoughts.

He took his hat and passed out to the landing. Half unconsciously he began to descend the stairs. Not watching his footsteps carefully enough he thought he had reached the landing when there was another stair; the consequence was that he fell head foremost into the arms of an Englishman who was ascending.

The shock carried them both over, and Ernest received a hard blow on the head in the fall. He was half stunned for a minute; when he recovered his senses completely he found he was in the stranger's room.

"Hope you're all right?" said the Englishman.

"Thank, you, yes; a little dizzy, that's all."

"Confoundedly dark staircase," said the other, pouring out some brandy and offering it to him; "it's a wonder people don't break their necks."

Both men were full of apologies, for each had been careless. The Englishman, whose name was Seymour, saw at a glance that Ernest was French, and as he knew the language well he used it. Ernest was more glad than he would confess to find a sort of compatriot in the first man he had addressed on equal terms since crossing.

The two men chatted for some minutes, till Ernest said he had no further excuse for trespassing's on the other's kindness, as he was quite recovered. However, they found they were both going out, so they left the hotel together.

The streets were crowded and conversation was difficult. To add to their discomfort it began to rain. They discovered that neither had any fixed object for his stroll, so they adjourned to a cafe for a little shelter and a chat.

They talked for some time; each was in need of a companion. Seymour was on a visit to London from the North on business; Ernest wanted something to keep his thoughts away from himself. He was afraid to be alone now that he had come so far to be so.

The rain ceased, the clouds parted, and a white moon made the wet roofs and pavements glisten with a magical light. It was an enchanting scene, and the young men felt its beauty. There was no need for them to hurry home, so they strolled along the silent Embankment arm in arm. At last twelve o'clock struck, and they mounted the steps by Waterloo Bridge, preparatory to returning to the hotel.

"Come on the bridge and see the moon and the lights in the water," said Seymour. "It's a wonderful sight."

They strolled to the massive bridge, deserted except for an occasional passenger or a late cab. As they passed one of the recesses Seymour noticed a man leaning over the parapet.

He was quite still, gazing at the water intently. Seymour did not feel comfortable when looking at him, but did not consider himself justified in speaking to him. When he had passed him he looked round to see if he were still as motionless as before. To his surprise his companion leaped from his side and rushed to the recess. He was too late. The man was gone. A dull splash in the dark waters below told what had become of him.

In horror Seymour raised a cry for help. Fortunately, it was at hand; a police boat was passing, and the wretched would-be suicide was rescued and brought to land.

When he was in safety Seymour returned to his companion, who had watched the scene with peculiar interest.

"Let us go back," said Seymour; "that horrible affair has upset me."

"Is that the way you manage these matters in England?" asked Ernest.

"I'm sorry to say that isn't the first fool who has jumped off Waterloo Bridge, and I'm afraid it won't be the last. Don't imagine, though, that as a nation we are given to that sort of thing."

"I hope not, at all events in that way," said the Frenchman. "It is ridiculous, or would be so, if there were not a touch of tragedy in it. Why did he throw himself into the water when there are so many ways out of existence?"

"Perhaps he half hoped he might be saved after all."

"He had his wish in that case," replied Ernest. "What will become of him now?"

"I suppose he will go before a magistrate. The police have him in charge."

Ernest smiled.

"A romantic ending to a terrible story, is it not? We manage these things, at all events, better in France. I heard of a case the other day: A lover lost his mistress; he opened a vein in his arm and died quietly during the night without a soul being any the wiser. You say we are a theatrical nation, yet it is you who throw yourselves off bridges, while we—"

"For Heaven's sake, man, do stop your horrible stories! Let us get on to some pleasanter subject than that of leaving this world."

"As you wish. Here we are at our hotel. Will you come up to my room for an hour? I won't talk of suicides, I promise you."

Seymour was anything but inclined for bed after his recent adventure, so he gladly accepted.

Ernest sent for some refreshments, and it was past three before they separated, each delighted at having found a pleasant companion.

During the next three days they saw a great deal of each other. Seymour discovered that there was some mystery about his new acquaintance. He had apparently no object in being in London, had no friends, did not care an atom about the sights. Besides this, he had occasional fits of intense melancholy, and was often feverishly anxious for time to pass.

Nevertheless, he was generally an agreeable companion, and at his worst he was an interesting study. Seymour spent as much time as he could with him, especially in the evening. They seldom parted till the small hours.

One morning a small nephew of Seymour's came to see him, and greatly amused the two friends by his precocious ways. Ernest seemed to brighten more than he had done before, and laughed outright once at the youngster's grief at the fact that his father could not give him a watch yet. Seymour was delighted to see the melancholy Frenchman with so much life in him.

"Next day, however, all gayety had disappeared. He was feverishly anxious. It was Tuesday. He had gone out before breakfast to buy the Times.

There was nothing in it to interest him. He threw away the copy as soon as he had glanced down the column which was to contain the advertisement from his friend Charles.

That evening Seymour could do nothing with him. As a last resource he suggested a game of cards. Ernest instantly accepted, and urged high play; Seymour acquiesced against his will. Finally, the Englishman lost a few pounds, which Ernest refused to accept. He had only played for the excitement. Seymour, however, naturally insisted on paying his losses.

Although they sat up late, Seymour could hear Ernest pacing up and down his room long after they parted. Their rooms were adjacent. Ernest did not go to bed that night.

By daylight he was in the street. He knew now where to get an early copy of the Times. His first glance told him all. Suzanne was married.

He crushed the paper in his hand. For a minute or two he stood motionless; then, with a start, he began walking to the hotel.

There was nothing remarkable about him when he came down to breakfast in the coffee-room, unless a quieter demeanor than usual might be deemed so. He spoke to Seymour when he entered, and hoped he did not disturb him by his early rising. Seymour did not know he had risen.

"Yes; I went out for a stroll to Waterloo bridge. By the by, I hope you will let me give you your revenge this evening; that little game last night pulled me together wonderfully. I've been feverish the last few days."

"I'm not anxious for my revenge," said Seymour; "I don't often play."

"Nor I, and I am never comfortable until I lose. You will do me a favor if you will give me a chance. It calms my brain; it's as good as medicine to me."

Seymour laughed and promised. He saw nothing of Ernest the whole day, but they had appointed to meet at ten o'clock.

Ernest spent this afternoon in going through his possessions. He had nothing with him to declare his identity. His linen was only marked with initials, which stood equally well for his real and assumed names. The few letters in his pockets he tore up, with one exception.

This was in a lady's hand. He read it through slowly and carefully, kissed it, and then burned it to ashes. He then wrote a couple of letters, which occupied him till his visitior was due.

At ten o'clock Seymour arrived. Ernest welcomed him more gayly than usual.

"Have you seen little Tom to-day?" he asked.

"No; I'm going to see him to-morrow."

"Will you give him a little present from me? He wants a watch—do you think this will do for him?"

He held out his gold timepiece, with a chain attached. Seymour looked up in astonishment.

"You won't accept it for him? You must! I will not keep it. It was given me by a man who had just tried to kill my best friend in a duel; if you won't take it for little Tommy I will smash it with my boot, and then drop it into the river. Will you take it?"

Seymour made some ineffectual protests, but at last was forced to take it. He made up his mind, however, that his possession of it should only be temporary; the whole affair was absurd.

They began to play. Ernest had the luck at first; but it soon turned. Seymour won, and by midnight had more than recouped himself. In another hour he refused to play any more; he calculated he had won over twenty pounds.

"You won't go on?" asked Ernest. "Then I must fulfill my duty. I am a good loser, you see."

He handed over notes and gold amounting to over £40. The money included several napoleons.

"I have not won all this," said Seymour. "You have made a mistake."

"Oh, no; we were playing for the same stakes as last night."

"I did not understand that."

"But I did, and as I lost it is for me to decide. You taught me last evening to insist on paying my losses."

Seymour protested; but Ernest insisted. Seymour resolved to lose it to him again at the first opportunity.

Three o'clock struck as they parted. Seymour crept quietly back to his room, tired out, as he had had a hard day. He determined to have a good night's rest.

Ernest did not come down to breakfast next morning. Seymour waited about some time, hoping to see him, and at last told the waiter to go and call him, as it was nearly eleven.

The man was some time in returning. Obtaining no answer to his knock, he had opened the door to take in the hot water which was standing outside. On the bed he saw the Frenchman lying, his throat cut.

The waiter was a man of sense. He locked the door on the outside, put the key in his pocket, and went to tell his master what he had found.

Before a single person in the hotel knew what had happened a detective had the affair in his charge. The waiter told Seymour that M. Dubois was in bed and would be able to see no one. Seymour was obliged to go out to keep a business appointment; when he returned in the evening it was to find that he was arrested on the charge of murdering M. Dubois.

CHAPTER III.

After the first shock of surprise and horror was over, Seymour began to recognize his position. He sent for a solicitor, with whom he was acquainted, and told him the whole story. Mr. Fuller listened attentively. Fortunately for Seymour's peace of mind, he was entirely convinced of his client's innocence, though he did not hold out many hopes of being able to prove it easily.

"Appearances are terribly against you," he said. "You are known to have been on intimate terms with Dubois. You are found to have his watch and his money; there was absolutely none found on him. Assuming that he was killed for his money, it is to you that suspicion must point."

Seymour groaned.

"I was afraid sometimes that he had something on his mind," he said. "I see now why he gave me the watch and made me win his money; he recognized that I had been kind to him, and wished that what he had of value might benefit me."

"I wish to goodness he had found some other way of doing it," said Mr. Fuller. "I'm afraid a jury will not see things in their real light. Does any one know you played cards with him? If so that would help to account for your possession of the money, and we might suppose that he committed suicide because he lost so much to you."

Seymour was obliged to confess that no one had entered the room on either night that they played. Worse than that, it appeared that the waiter had seen him returning from Ernest's room on the night of his death, at three in the morning. The room in which they had played was a large one, with a bed in the corner; the rest of the room was furnished as a sitting-room.

Of course, every care was taken to gather every particle of evidence in Seymour's favor. The razor was Ernest's—a small point, perhaps, but worth nothing. Then there was no sign of a struggle. The natural answer to that was that Ernest was asleep. It unfortunately happened that there was not an atom of circumstantial evidence in the prisoner's favor which could not be met, while, on the other hand, were some of the most convincing facts that ever sent a man to the scaffold.

Perhaps the points on which Seymour's lawyers chiefly depended were his inexplicable conduct, supposing he were the murderer, and the hope of discovering who the dead man really was. It was to the latter point that Mr. Fuller bent his attention.

Seymour had lived in France a considerable time, and had numerous friends in Paris. Some of these were written to, and, as more than one had considerable influence in literary circles, paragraphs appeared in several journals detailing the mystery of the Frenchman's death. Advertisements were also inserted which, it was hoped, would bring some result.

However, more than a week passed, and nothing happened. Ernest had but few relations, and, as he was of a retiring disposition and reserved in his habits, they were not surprised at receiving no letters from him. Moreover, he had intimated his intention of passing a month in Normandy and Brittany, and that time was not yet up.

There was, however, one man who was on the lookout for news, and that was Charles. Unfortunately called to Germany the day after he had inserted the notice of Suzanne's marriage in the Times, he was, for more than a week, out of reach of French newspapers. The first that he saw on his return contained an account of Ernest's death.

He had not a moment's doubt that Dubois and Ernest were the same. If he had not jumped to that conclusion a letter which he found waiting for him on his return home must have dispelled all doubt.

It was dated, but bore no address. The post mark was London. It ran thus:

"I must thank you for keeping your promise. Suzanne is married. She is dead to me, as she has shown that she wishes never to see me again.

"I have nothing now to live for. As you know, I have few near relations, and dislike those which I have. No one will regret my exit from this life, except, perhaps, you and a few more. You will soon forget me. I am glad, however, to be able to do you a slight kindness. The inclosed paper will transfer to you my house in Paris.

"You see that my mind has been made up some time. I do not falter in the least. Before you receive this I shall be no more.

"I have not been alone in London as I anticipated. I have made a friend. He has charmed me by his kindness. To-night we meet for the last time, though he does not know it. I have a plan for making him easily console himself for losing an acquaintance of a few days' standing. From what he has told me he will soon be married, and I fear his means are not too extensive. So, when we play ecarte to-night he will rise a winner of sufficient to pay for his honeymoon, at all events. This is not generosity on my part. Of what use is money to me?

"Good-bye, my dear Charles. You will understand me, if the others do not. We have often talked of life together; you know my thoughts, and, though here they will attribute my action to insanity, you know it is the deed of a sane, hopeless man. Adieu!
"ERNEST."

Charles read the letter with mingled feelings. He did not, however, remain long without taking action. The paragraph in the paper stated that an innocent man had been charged with the murder of the unhappy suicide.

Charles knew little of English law, and for a moment feared that perhaps justice had overtaken her victim already. He ran to the telegraph office and even wrote out a telegram before he recognized that he did not know where to send it.

Sooner than not dispatch it, he addressed it to the Chief of Police, promising to come to England to explain it. It happened that he never glanced at the advertisement column of the paper, so that Mr. Fuller's appeal escaped his notice.

Thus it was that the first intimation that Seymour received of the possibility of proving his innocence was the entrance of Mr. Fuller with Ernest's letter to Charles in his hand.

The identity of the dead man with Ernest was easily established; the proof of Seymour's innocence was made abundantly clear. Before Charles returned to France he saw Seymour set at liberty.

One duty he had to perform before he left England, and that was to erect a memorial stone to his friend. Far from home and friends rested the remains of an unhappy man, whose very generosity to others seemed fated to bring them misery instead of happiness.—All the Year Round.

WHEAT AS FOOD FOR STOCK.

Directions as to How It May Be Profitably Used.

Commenting on the unprecedentedly low price at which wheat is selling in England, the London Live Stock Journal, in a recent editorial, advises the farmers of Great Britain to use it as feed for stock, instead of some of the grains ordinarily employed. A large quantity of English wheat has already reached the market, for a series of bad years has rendered money scarce among farmers. Those who are not in immediate need of funds are holding on, hoping for an upward turn in prices. But, says the Journal, if no appreciable advance should take place, what is to be done with the stocks of wheat? Is the grain, most of which is of exceptionally fine quality, to be sold at the very low figure offered for it, or can it be turned to better account in any other way? Wherever circumstances favor, it should be used in the fattening of stock. Wheat now occupies a very different position from what it did formerly. Sir J. B. Dawes, in his well-known table relating to manurial values of feeding stuffs, places the average price of wheat at £[illegible] per ton, that of barley at £8; oats, £7; Indian corn, £7, and linseed cake, £10 10s., per ton. So long as these relative advantages were nearly maintained, wheat could not be used profitably by the cattle feeder. But it is now selling at barley prices—34s. per quarter for good samples—hardly 15s. more than the average for oats! At this very low market value wheat may be advantageously substituted for the more costly foods which are purchased by farmers, notably, cotton and linseed cake. In comparison with barley also, it will be found, at the present relative prices, by far the cheaper food of the two, and, therefore, farmers should sell their barley and use in its stead wheat as food for stock.

Wheat contains about 12 per cent. of flesh-forming and about 68.50 per cent. of fat-forming matter. It exceeds, in these elements, barley by 3 per cent., oats by 4.50 per cent., rye by 5 per cent., Indian corn by 1.50 per cent., linseed cake by 7.50 per cent. and cotton cake by 7 per cent. Its manurial value is about the same as that of barley and oats.

It should, however, be used with caution, and never, under any circumstances, given to stock without being bruised. Its full fattening value could not be obtained if given whole, and its influence might even be destructive. Neither should it be substituted entirely for the feeding mixtures generally in use, as it has a heating and binding tendency. The allowance at the outset should be very small and increased as the animals take to it.—Country Gentleman.

A Boon Companion.

Mr. John Rolfe, Champion Bicyclist of Australia and England, writes to the Argus Melbourne, Australia, that in the six days contest for the championship, after riding eight consecutive hours each day, his limbs became stiff and sore, and he is positive he won the great race, and was enabled to ride another 100 miles against time immediately afterward, from the wonderful effects produced by the use of St. Jacobs Oil, in training and racing. He calls it his boon companion, and recommends it to all athletes.

BIBLE COMPETITION

$10,000 Gold Coin in Rewards!

GIVEN BY THE Pacific Coast Farm and Fireside Journal.

HIGHLY ILLUSTRATED WITH CALIFORNIA SCENERY.

CLOSING MARCH 1st, 1885.

The proprietors announce a magnificent list of rewards for correct answers to the following Bible questions:

THE BIBLE QUESTIONS:

1—Is Diamond referred to in the Bible? If so, state first reference.
2—Is Emerald made mention of in the Bible? If so, state first reference.
3—Is Sapphire spoken of in the Bible? If so, state first reference.

Now, anyone having a knowledge of the Scriptures ought to be able promptly to answer these questions with a little study, and so secure some of these rewards. Bear in mind everyone competing must send One Dollar with their answers, for which the PACIFIC COAST FARM AND FIRESIDE JOURNAL will be sent six months to any address. If you answer each of the questions correctly, and your answers are in time, you are sure to secure one of these rewards.

500 FIRST REWARDS, $3220.00.

1st reward, $400.00; 2d reward, $80.00; 3d reward, $160.00; 4th reward, $80.00; 5th reward, $120 00; 6 to 11, five rewards, $40 00 each, $200 00; 12 to 17, five rewards, $25 00 each, $120 00; 18 to 38, twenty rewards, $16 00 each, $320 00; 39 to 59, twenty rewards, $12 00 each, $240 00; 60 to 89, twenty Rewards, $6 00 each, $120 00; 90 to 100, ten Rewards, $28 00 each, $280 00; 101 to 300, two hundred rewards, $2 00 each, $400 00; 301 to 500, two hundred rewards, $2 50 each, $500 00.

The above five hundred rewards will be given to the first five hundred persons who send one dollar for subscription to the PACIFIC COAST FARM AND FIRESIDE JOURNAL, and correct answers to the Bible questions given above. Then come the

The $500 00 Gold Coin will be given to the person sending the MIDDLE CORRECT ANSWER of the whole competition, from first to last. The four hundred and ninety-nine rewards that follow No. 1 of these middle rewards will be given to the four hundred and ninety-nine persons who send the next correct answers following the middle or center reward that takes the $500 00 Gold Coin; then, that even the last ones may not feel that they are left out, the PACIFIC COAST FARM AND FIRESIDE JOURNAL will give a series of 250 CONSOLATION REWARDS, $2600.00.

1st reward, $80 00; 2d reward, $80 00; 3d reward, $75 00; 4 to 7, four rewards, $48 00 each, $192 00; 8 to 19, twelve rewards, $25 00 each, $300 00; 20 to 31, twelve rewards, $12 00 each, $244 00; 32 to 50, nineteen rewards, $17 50 each, $332 50; 51 to 69, nineteen rewards, $10 00 each, $190 00; 70 to 100, thirty rewards, $2 50 each, $75 00; 101 to 107, fifty-seven rewards, $2 00 each, $114 00; 108 to 175, eighty rewards, $6 00 each, $480 00; 176 to 200, twenty-four rewards, $12 00 each, $288 00; 200 to 250, fifty rewards, $3 00 each, $150 00.

This list of consolation rewards will be given to the last two hundred and fifty persons who send correct answers to the above Bible questions. Fifteen days will be allowed for letters to reach their destination. But bear in mind your letter must bear the post-mark not later than March 1st, 1885 (with one dollar inclosed for the paper) the closing day for letters from distant points to reach the office of the PACIFIC COAST FARM AND FIRESIDE JOURNAL. All letters are carefully numbered as they arrive and there can be no mistake. It contains sixteen pages illustrated and interesting matter for the farmer and the home circle—something to interest every member of the family. We could not afford to give these valuable rewards unless we were certain of your patronage in years to come, and we have adopted this way of giving the commission back to patrons in rewards instead of hiring canvassers and paying commissions to them. It is our aim to make it the leading family paper in the United States.

No information will be given to any one beyond what has been above stated. So don't waste time by writing, but send in your answers and money NOW.

Send one dollar money order, postal note or registered letter. Do not send stamps. If you do they will be returned to you. FARM AND FIRESIDE PUBLISHING CO.

A $25.00 WATCH FOR ONLY $5.27.

100,000 watches less than cost to make.

READ OUR OFFER: A CHANCE AND BARGAIN OF A LIFETIME.

Twenty-five Dollars FOR $5.27

What all newspapers must have to live is subscribers. A large subscription list brings heavy advertising patronage. This sale of advertising space is what pays the publisher, NOT THE SUBSCRIPTIONS to his paper. We have adopted the following honest and square plan to get 100,000 new subscribers. A contract is signed in which we have bound ourselves to take inside of 60 days

100,000 AMERICAN LEVER WATCHES.

The Watch is a Key Winding Watch with the Celebrated Anchor Lever Movement, Expansion Balance, Fully Jeweled. They are made of the best material and in the very best manner, so as to insure good time-keeping qualities. The Cases are made of the celebrated metal known as Aluminum Gold. This metal has a sufficient amount of gold in the composition to give the watch a genuine gold appearance. Indeed, it cannot be told from a Genuine Gold Watch except by the best judges. They are finely engraved or engine turned and are massive and strong and very handsome, making it just the watch for all who require a good strong watch and an accurate timekeeper. For trading and speculative purposes, it is superior to any watch ever before offered. They can be sold readily for $20 each, and traded for horses, cattle, etc., so as to double this amount.

CONDITIONS: How you can get this beautiful watch for less than cost. Read and profit by our contract. No such a fair offer was ever made before!

We will send this watch to any part of the United States by registered mail or to Canada by Express, upon receipt of $5.27. [This is less than cost.] Each and every person who takes this watch at this price ($5.27) must agree to show it to their friends and tell them how and where they got it. Positively this must be done, and upon receiving the watch must sign and return the following fair contract:

In consideration of the fact that the publisher of the Farm, Field and Stockman has sold me the American Lever Hunting Case Watch for $5.27, which watch I have received and find exactly as represented, therefore I promise in one year from date to send one dollar for the Farm, Field and Stockman, same being payment for the paper sent me during the entire past year.
Dated at ...., 1884. Signed, ...

NO MONEY REQUIRED ON THE PAPER TILL YOU HAVE HAD IT ONE YEAR.

In ordering the watch you must say in your letter that if it is as represented and after a thorough examination of ten days the watch gives satisfaction you will fill out, sign and return a blank contract like the above, which is sent with each watch.

Our loss your gain, and how we are going to make anything out of this transaction. Someone asks, "How do you make up your loss?" Simply this way. We lose money at first, but it will be good advertising. Every person who gets a watch will be a subscriber. "How do you know?" Why, a man that gets our watch will stay with us because he has got double what he paid for. On this lot of 100,000 watches we shall lose fifty thousand dollars, but this loss will secure us 100,000 new subscribers to our paper, which will make our subscription list over 250,000. With our present circulation of 150,000 subscribers, our advertising patronage is $40,000 a year, and we have 8,000 lines of space per month which, with our increased list, will make our receipts from this source alone $120,000 for the year. Deducting loss on watch, and current expenses, will leave us a profit of about $30,000 for the year. Furthermore, should our estimate on advertising receipts prove too large, we will have due us from subscribers $100,000, which we count good, as every watch will have proved so good that every man is sure to pay. You see now how we propose to lose money to make money and give every person a benefit and sell the watch less than cost to manufacture. We know this offer will demoralize the watch business of this country, but it is every man for himself in this age of newspaper war, and if we give our readers a watch THAT WILL COMPARE and is as good as any one hundred DOLLAR watch for $5.27 we propose to do it and give them the benefit of our capital. In this way we benefit our subscribers and by so doing help ourselves as well. It is no idle boast to say that this watch looks as well as a hundred-dollar repeater. Reader, there is an immense amount of satisfaction in displaying a beautiful watch. Here is an opportunity for you to show a watch as beautiful for $5.27 as your rich neighbor shows for one hundred dollars.

TO SHOW THAT OUR OFFER IS SQUARE we will send a copy of the paper and the American Lever Watch by express, C. O. D., subject to examination, upon receipt of $1.50 to guarantee charges both ways. The receiver accepting the watch will have to pay a balance of $3.77 and express charges to his place. Where $5.27 cash is sent in advance we prepay all charges and guarantee safe delivery. This is your opportunity. Don't let it pass; if you do you will regret it. The offer is open for sixty days from date. If you want to make husband, brother or friend a handsome present, this is your time. Send money by express, postoffice order, postal note or registered letter. Write and take 2-cent postage stamps. TOPICS OF THE DAY.

"FIGURES never lie," but they are wonderfully misleading sometimes.

MAINE has three hundred and twenty lodges and twenty thousand Good Templars.

FRANCE can not shake off her unwelcome guest. It looks as if the cholera had come to stay.

A GREAT truth for business men is, that an advertisement in a newspaper is worth two on the fence.

A MAN has actually been sent to prison in Nova Scotia for three months for lying in a horse trade.

YOUNG men contemplating matrimony can take courage. The indications are that sealskin sacques will soon be out of style.

THERE is no lack of brass in young America. It is stated that American babies swallow one thousand thimbles annually.

WEALTHY young men in New York now exhibit the latest nonsense—solid silver latch-keys, tied with a tiny bow of satin ribbon.

AGAIN the False Prophet is reported to be losing ground. But the British don't seem to be in any particular hurry to pick up what he has let go.

A FASHION paper says wooden buttons are preferred by English tailors. American tailors seem to prefer buttons of putty, sewed on with corn silk.

A JERSEY girl made a bet that she would vote at the recent election. She disguised herself in a suit of her brother's clothes and marched up to the polls like a little man.

THE Prince of Wales is one of the finest lawn-tennis players in England. He is also a splendid shot, and killed seven stags out of nine, a few days ago, at Glenderry.

SOME one who has dived into political history comes up with the information that the closest vote on record, in any of the States, for Presidential electors, was in 1852 when Pierce had only twenty-five plurality in Delaware.

NEAR Guilderland Station, N. Y., a crock of butter that dropped into a well fifty years ago, was recently rescued in fair condition. Patrons of cheap boarding-houses need not be alarmed, as there was only about a dozen pounds in the crock.

LORD LYTTON has had to call in the assistance of the law in order to suppress the publication of the love-letters written by his father to the woman whom he afterwards treated so badly, and he will, no doubt, be successful in his application.

THE complexion of the two houses of Congress is fairly well known. The Republicans will have a majority of eight in the Senate, and the Democrats will control the House by a majority which, after all contests are settled, will be in the neighborhood of forty. This is a healthful condition of affairs, as partisan legislation will stand a small show of success.

GOPHERS have become such a nuisance in some parts of Dakota that the local authorities in many counties make a standing offer of five cents for every gopher's tail. This has led to gopher's tails being used for currency. Shoppers ask for several tails' worth of calico; topers go into bar-rooms and throw down tails enough for a drink, and it is said that tails have even been put on the collection plate at religious meetings.

DR. HAMMOND remarks: "Perhaps there is no better test of a woman's health and beauty than her appearance at an early breakfast table. She is then more as nature made her than at any other period of the day."

THIS severe extract is from a newspaper published in the City of Brotherly Love: "The man who sits bias in the street-cars must be suppressed. He is a general nuisance. He occupies space enough for two passengers, and yet only pays one fare. The bias man is a selfish beast."

A MAN named Isaac Price, who lives in the town of Oxford, Me., and has a farm a few miles in the country, set out a young orchard last spring. The other day he went out to see how his orchard was getting along. He was astonished to find that his orchard had disappeared. During nights thieves had dug up every tree and carried them off, filling up the holes again. Mr. Price is now tying down his stone-wall, chaining his barn to a ledge of rocks and hiding the well under a brush-heap.

VERA FIGUER is one of the Nihilists lately condemned to death at St. Petersburg. She is described as of rare beauty. She is twenty-seven years of age, and has been active in all Nihilistic conspiracies since 1878. It was she who, with Sophie Porowskaja, succeeded in starting the propaganda in the army and organized terrorist societies in several regiments, including the Sixteenth Grenadiers. It is believed that the Czar will commute the death sentence to imprisonment for life.

SINCE July, 1882, the number of rolling mills and steel works in this country, have increased from 400 to 434. The annual capacity of rolling mills in finished iron and steel has increased from 7,000,000 tons to 7,600,000. In the same period the nail machines have increased from 4,030 to 5,395. The number of Bessemer steel works have increased from fifteen to twenty-one, the open hearth steel works from twenty-seven to thirty-two with three new ones in course of erection at present. This is a healthy showing.

A STRANGE ACCIDENT.

An Exploding Paint Keg's Fearful Work.

A Number of Children Fatally Injured at a Bonfire.

CHICAGO, November 16.—Runnell Poole, aged thirteen, and his ten-year-old brother, Adam, stole a keg containing a few gallons of paint Saturday afternoon, and a number of little boys and girls joined them, intent upon starting a bonfire. The keg was placed upon top of a lot of shavings. A quantity of kerosene oil was then thrown over the pile, and while young Runnell Poole stooped down to light the fire a dozen children joined hands and circled round him, singing election songs. Instantly the fire was kindled, the oil in the paint keg exploded with a noise like thunder, and a huge blast of flame swept about the children, enveloping them from head to foot in fire and smoke. An appalling sight was revealed a moment later. The smoke cleared away, and seven little children were seen stretched out upon the ground, hideously mangled and burned, and weltering in their own blood. Pieces of the paint keg were driven into the midst of the little ones with terrific force by the explosion. Then the flames caught their clothing and burned the heads, faces and limbs of the children so badly that most of them will die. Runnell Poole, who started the fire, was blown a distance of ten feet by the explosion. A blazing stone struck him on the head, fracturing his skull. He was also badly burned about the head, arms and limbs, and can not live. Adam, his brother, was burned about the face, body and limbs, and will also die. Eddie Burke, aged seven, burned about the head, face and hands, and can not live. His sister, Aggie, aged four, had her face, hands and body burned in some portions to a crisp, and will die. A two-year-old son of James Deley, was burned about the body, face and hands, and will die. Stephen Bassett, aged ten, fatally burned about the body. Annie Ward, aged seven, burned about face, head, body and limbs, and can not survive. A three-year-old sister of the latter died last night from burns received at a bonfire a week ago. Nearly all the children had homes on the street where the casualty took place, a district inhabited by laboring people. Their excitement for a while could scarcely be restrained.

Postal Affairs.

WASHINGTON, November 16.—Henry D. Lyman, Second Assistant Postmaster General, has submitted his annual report. It shows that the cost of inland transportations for the year was as follows: For 11,729 Star routes, aggregating 226,779 miles, $5,089,941; 117 steamboat routes, aggregating 15,591 miles, $596,573; 1,573 railroad routes, aggregating 117,160 miles, $15,012,003. Total, $20,699,117. A comparison with the last annual statement shows for the Star service an increase of 402 routes, a decrease of eighty-six miles, and an increase of $350,463 in annual cost; for steamboat service, an increase of two routes, decrease of 502 miles, and of $11,048 in annual cost; for railroad service, an increase of sixty routes of 6,952 miles, and $1,124,803 in annual cost. The Star service, in operation at the close of the year, exceeding in extent the average of the preceding five years, and was performed at diminished cost. An estimate of $5,900,000 is submitted for Star route service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886. The appropriation for steamboat service and mail messengers for the current year will be sufficient. Lyman says the amount provided for carrying the mails on railroad routs for the current year is entirely inadequate, and must be supplemented by a deficiency appropriation. He intimates that $15,684,205 will be required to defray the cost of railway transportation for the fiscal year 1886, including payments to the Pacific roads, and recommends that $260,764 be appropriated for special railway facilities, the continuance of which he says is required by the interests of the people.

London and the Cholera.

LONDON, November 16.—When will the cholera reach London? is the question that is now in the mouth of every one. The papers are devoting columns of space daily to dispatches from Paris and letters from Paris is urging hygienic reforms at home. It is now argued by all that it is folly to hope that London will escape, and few persons look to see the visitation postponed until next summer. The Soir and other Paris papers insist that London, for over a week, has been suffering severely from cholera, but this is, of course, mere nonsense. It would be possible, perhaps, to conceal one or two isolated cases, but a genuine outbreak in London no one could cover up. The world may be sure that when the pest visits London knowledge of it will become general.

Terrible Railway Accident.

BERLIN, November 14.—A collision of railway trains occurred to-day, near the depot in Hanow. Fifteen persons were killed and a large number wounded.

Jail Delivery.

BUFFALO, N. Y., November 14.—There was great excitement at the jail here this afternoon. About two o'clock three prisoners cut several small ropes from the windows, tied them to a cornice and got out on the roof. Two of them let themselves down to the wall of the jail yard, jumped off and escaped. The third, named Rogers, was about thirty feet from the ground, when the rope broke. He was found lying on his face and unconscious. One of his legs was broken, and the doctors say he sustained other serious injuries. A general alarm has been sent out for the two escaped, but they have not yet been recaptured.

Foreign Mails.

WASHINGTON, November 16.—The report of James S. Crawford, Superintendent of Foreign Mails, for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1884, shows the total number of letters sent from the United States was 33,328,014; received, 28,404,035; postal cards sent, 1,672,458; received, 1,288,673; newspapers and printed matter pieces sent, 20,712,464; received 21,747,784. The amounts estimated necessary for appropriation for foreign mail service for the fiscal year 1885-86 are $425,000 for ocean mail transportation, and $75,000 for balance due foreign countries, including the United States' portion of expenses of the International Bureau of the Postal Union.

Business Outlook.

NEW YORK, November 14.—The business outlook in the East is bad. Much space is occupied in the newspapers with reports of suspension of manufacturers, discharge of men, etc. The reports from the great manufacturing region of Troy, Cohoes, Waterford, Port Schuyler and thereabouts are especially discouraging.

Business Failures.

NEW YORK, November 14.—Bradstreet's report 107 failures in the United States for the week ending to-day.

DEATH IN A DITCH.

For Every Yard of Earth Turned Up in The Panama Canal a Death is Represented.

NEW YORK, November 14.—One of the passengers arriving from Aspinwall to-day by the steamship Colon was Geo. Mowbray, a Brooklyn machinist, who has been working on the Panama Canal. His health has been broken down by the Chagres fever. He describes the mortality among the laborers as really frightful. Nine-tenths of those attacked by the fever die in the hospitals. Unless the victims have money or influence their bodies are dumped into pits and covered with quicklime. There is a saying that every tie of the Panama Railroad represents a tombstone for some one of those who were engaged in its construction, and it may almost as truly be said that for every yard of earth turned up on the canal there is a death in the hospitals. These institutions are constantly crowded. It rains a great deal, and the soft banks of the pit are constantly being undermined, making re-excavation necessary. Mowbray brings several farewell messages from dying men to their friends in this country. He says skilled workmen earn $5.50 per day, and laborers from $3 to $4. The board, which is very poor, costs from $12 to $15 per week.

A FREAK OF DEATH.

The Life-Like Appearance of a Body Continues for Twelve Days After Decease.

CINCINNATI, November 15.—The case of Jacob Weber, who died in Newport, Ky., Sunday, November 2, and whose remains are still in the vault of the Evergreen Cemetery back of that city, is the talk of Newport. The deceased, while acting as Marshal in one of the Republican torch-light processions, contracted a cold which to all appearances terminated fatally on Sunday, November 2, after about one week's illness. On the following Tuesday, November 4, the funeral took place from the St. Paul's German Lutheran Church, and the body, in a wooden casket, was taken to the Evergreen Cemetery, three miles back of Newport, and placed in the vault with others yet unburied. Like all caskets of the present day, this one had the flat detachable lid at the head of the coffin that on removal would give a view of the face through the glass cover. Young Weber—he was but twenty-three—had hosts of friends, and since the funeral, ten days ago, many of them have paid visits to the cemetery, where Sexton Brown has kindly permitted them again to see his features. The parents of the young man went out daily. The life-like appearance of young Weber was commented upon by every one who went to the cemetery. A flush of health marked the face, and the lips retained the redness common to them in life. Not until yesterday morning did it begin to fade and the ashy pallor of death set in, accompanied by discoloration of the forehead and temples. The bereaved father was told in the morning by the sexton that, for obvious reasons, to-day's look must be the last.

Youngest Prisoner on Record.

NEW ORLEANS, LA., November 14.—The youngest criminal on record was brought before Recorder Ford to-day. Geo. Saranovitch made an affidavit yesterday against Edward Brooks, charging him with malicious mischief, and Officer Gordon was detailed to arrest the prisoner. To-day he produced him before the Judge in the person of a three-year old child, who came to the court in a baby-carriage guarded by the officer. The Judge ordered the prisoner to be supplied with a stick of candy in order to keep him quiet while the case proceeded. Saranovitch testified that Eddie had crawled through the fence and cut some flowers, which he interpreted to be malicious mischief. After hearing the case in full Judge Ford informed Mr. Brooks that he might go free, as the law did not consider himself old enough to be guilty of malicious mischief, whereupon he was placed in his baby-carriage and rolled off by his grand-mother amid laughter and applause. Eddie will not be four years old until next year.

A Baker's Find.

CHICAGO, November 14.—George W. Brooks built a fire in his oven to-day. He is a baker, doing business at No. 465 West Madison street. As the oven grew hot he heard a faint sound issuing from it, and on opening the door discovered a bundle. He took out the bundle on a wooden shovel, and from the midst of it a bright-eyed boy baby extended his hands. Mr. Brooks says he has no idea how the baby was placed in the oven without his knowledge, or to whom it belongs. He turned it over to the police, who sent it to the Foundling's Home.

Joined in Death.

DETROIT, MICH., November 14.—Several weeks ago John Downey and wife, of Windsor, Ont., being destitute, mutually agreed to drown themselves in the river. The wife did so, but the husband's courage failed him. He was arrested for murder when the wife's body was found, but discharged upon the true facts coming out. To-day Downey fulfilled his death contract by hanging himself.

Severe Earthquake.

LONDON, November 14.—A severe shock of earthquake, accompanied with a terrific explosive report, occurred to-night at Clitheroe, Lancashire, and about twenty-five miles from Manchester. The shock threw down horses on the streets, and caused great consternation and excitement among the inhabitants.

Congressman Dead.

GETTYSBURG, PA., November 14.—Hon. Wm. A. Duncan, re-elected to Congress in the Nineteenth Pennsylvania District, died to-day of consumption, at his home in this city.

Silent Looms.

PHILADELPHIA, November 14.—The striking weavers who left Clark & Keen's looms, by reason of the reduction of their wages, met again this morning and agreed to stand out for their claims until the revival of fall trade rather than submit to the temporary reduction. After the weavers in James Doak, jun. & Co.'s looms have finished their work now in hand they will also strike, it is reported.

Struck by a Train.

INDIANAPOLIS, IND., November 16.—A carriage containing three young ladies, Mary and Lizzie Sweeney and Miss Phelan, was struck by an Indianapolis and St Louis train this evening, a mile and a half west of this city, and completely demolished. Lizzie Sweeney, who is the daughter of a prominent liquor dealer, was seriously injured, but her sister and companion escaped miraculously, almost without a scratch.

Want a National Cattle Trail.

CAIRO, ILL., November 16.—A special car, containing thirteen cattle dealers from Waco, Texas, passed to St. Louis to-night. They are in favor of a National cattle trail from Texas to the British possessions, believing it would solve the cattle fever problem.

THE FIRST SESSION

Of the Cattlemen's Convention at St. Louis.

Nearly All the Cattle States, Mexico, Scotland and England Represented.

ST. LOUIS, MO., November 17.—The first National Convention of cattlemen ever held in this country opened its session at half-past eleven this morning, in the east nave of the Exposition Building, which was handsomely fitted up and decorated for the occasion. Delegates were present representing nearly all the Western States and Territories, several Eastern States, Mexico, England and Scotland. Colonel R. D. Hunter, of St. Louis, originator of the project called the convention to order, and announced as the object of the gathering the formation of a national league of cattle interests for mutual good. After urging unanimity of action, he introduced Colonel C. C. Rainwater, of St. Louis, temporary Chairman. On motion of Ex-Senator Dorsey, of New Mexico, delegate Thos. Sturgis, of Wyoming, was made temporary Secretary. Mr. Sturgis then read the call issued in January last, pursuant to which the convention met. Mayor Ewing and Governor Crittenden delivered addresses of welcome. Among other things Governor Crittenden said: "I think Congress should set aside public domain sufficient for a national or international trail from the Red River on the North to the Red River on the South, and wide enough to accommodate a million cattle. Now is the time to memorialize Congress to that end." General Sherman was loudly called for and made a brief address of a general nature. He concluded as follows: "I used to regret to see buffalo, elk, and antelope disappearing from the plains, and to see in their stead a race of scrawny, long-horned Texas cattle. I can now see, however, that it was a decree of nature, and that you gentlemen have reared a race of twenty millions of fine breeding cattle, which supply the world with meat." A very pleasing and amusing feature of the convention was a cow-boy band, of Fort Dodge, Kansas, twenty men strong, in full frontier costume. They played several selections during this morning's session eliciting great applause. The leader wields, in piece of a baton, his silver-mounted derringer, nearly a foot long.

War Relics.

CAIRO, ILL., November 17.—When Columbus, Ky., was evacuated by the Confederates the water battery of heavy guns was dumped into the Mississippi River, and they remained out of sight until this November 12, when in consequence of low and changing channel, the butt of two guns were discovered. One was secured, placed on a barge and taken to the incline, where it was placed on a flat-car and drawn to the top of the bank, where a rude carriage was waiting. It was a sixty-four-pounder, United States iron gun, and had a loaded shell in it. Five other pieces have been discovered at the same spot, and will be recovered. One of them is known to be much heavier than the one taken out.

Preparing for Cholera.

ALBANY, N. Y., November 17.—The State Board of Health is sending out circulars to all the local boards notifying that they will be held strictly accountable for the exact performance of their duties, and that no neglect or evasion on their part will be tolerated; also, that experience has shown that the cholera poison does not extend where no filth favors its multiplication, and that the only way to arrest its march is to remove all sources of pollution of soil or water. In excremental contamination especially lies the greatest risk. All such conditions must at once be removed.

Trouble in Mexico.

LAREDO, TEXAS, November 17.—Rumors are current of serious revolutionary outbreaks in various points in the States of Nuevo Leon and Coahuila, especially at Sabinas Hidalgo, in the former State. The Central Government is taking active measures to suppress the outbreak. General Trevenoire is reported arrived at Lempasas, on the Mexican National Railroad, with troops.

Leaned Out of a Car Window.

LANCASTER, PA., November 17.—As the Niagara express, on the Pennsylvania Railroad, was crossing the Pequea Bridge, near Leamen Place, a passenger named Carr leaned out of the window, and was struck by one of the bridge supports, dragged bodily through the window to the track, and instantly killed.

Burned to Death.

CAMERON, MO., November 17.—While playing around a pile of burning trash the clothing of Allie Gerhart, a nine-year-old girl, of this city, caught on fire and she was burned to death.

Cholera Abating.

PARIS, November 17.—There was a heavy frost again last night, and reports concerning the cholera epidemic are growing more favorable.

Cholera on a Vessel.

BOSTON, November 17.—The ship Anahuac, owned by the William F. Weld estate, is lying at Sourabayn, bound for Australia. It is reported that Captain Freeman and the first officer have died from cholera, and that a new commander will be sent from here to take the ship to her destination.

Death of a Centenarian.

CINCINNATI, O., November 17.—Mrs. Margaret Reardon, a native of County Cork, Ireland, died this afternoon at the residence of her daughter, Mrs. C. McCarthy, on Concord street, Walnut Hills. She was one of the oldest women in Cincinnati, and was in the one hundred and third year of her age.

THE COMMONWEALTH.

Louisville Leaf Tobacco Market.

The market has been firm for all types, with the demand for domestic styles in excess of the supply. Burley leaf has been decidedly in favor of sellers, and prices for fillery styles are about $1 to $1 50 per 100 pounds higher than at the beginning of the month. Lugs are also higher. Dark and heavy styles have been offered sparingly, and prices have ruled more favorably to sellers both for lugs and leaf. Redried Green River fillers have been in good demand, selling at good and satisfactory prices. New dark and heavy tobaccos are selling 50c. to $1 higher than a year ago, but there has been very little test of the value of medium or good grades. We quote full-weight packages new-crop sound tobacco as follows:

	Dark and Heavy.	Burley.

Miscellaneous Items.

A FEW nights ago a fire was discovered in the cellar of Jos. W. Miller's frame building, Millersburg. The flames soon reached the roof, and, being in the middle of the square, all hopes of saving anything were soon despaired of. They have no fire department, and, of course, were compelled to fight with buckets, and water was very scarce. The following are estimated losses: Smedley & Butler, dry goods, $20,000, insurance, $12,000; Wm. Ingles, residence and store-room, $10,000, insurance, $2,500; Wm. Nesbitt, total loss of household effects; Jos. W. Miller, dwelling and three store-rooms, valued at $15,000, insured for $2,500; W. T. Browning, groceries, $3,000, total loss; George Porter, undertaker, total loss, $1,000; W. H. Burdine, tin-store, $1,000, insurance, $500; Wm. Brown, total loss of household goods; Frank H. Adair, druggist, building and stock of goods, $5,000, insurance, $2,500; Dr. Hurst, dwelling and household effects, $4,000, insurance, $1,500; Bowlden & Currant, groceries, $6,000, insurance, $4,000; Odd-fellow's Hall and store-room, $5,000, insurance, $1,500. This is the second big fire this little city has had in the past few weeks, and both on the main business streets of the town. It is supposed to have been the work of an incendiary.

THE grist and saw-mill and carding-machine of the Trappist monks at Gethsemane Abbey, four miles from New Haven, burned a few days ago. The building was erected a few years since at a cost of $30,000, and was presented to the monks by Baron De Hodimont. Origin of the fire unknown.

WHILE shooting the cannon recently at a Democratic ratification in Shelbyville, William Bryent, an old gentleman of eighty-four years, was passing in front of the piece, when it was discharged, hurling the old man several yards and burning his face and jarring him considerably. Owing to his extreme age it is feared he will not get over the shock.

THE postoffice at Slotter, Ballard County, has been abolished.

THOMAS J. TULLY has been commissioned postmaster at Cabin Creek.

THE hog killing season has opened at Louisville. Prices firm; crop small but in good condition.

JAMES BENNETT, a stone-cutter, became intoxicated, and laid down upon the railroad track on the south end of the approach of the Rockcastle River bridge, near Livingston, and was run over by the engine on the L. & N. south-bound freight train, but luckily was unhurt, with the exception of a broken nose, and the loss of his boot-heels. It is certainly a miracle.

NEAR Murphysville, Patrick O'Donnell and Joseph Wood got into a dispute about a fence, which resulted in O'Donnell being shot and dangerously wounded.

THE Court of Appeals of Kentucky affirmed the death sentence of William Neal, who was a partner with Ellis Craft and George Ellis in the Ashland tragedy.

MIDWAY, in Woodford County, was the scene the other night of a Democratic ratification. A number of special policemen were appointed, and while the procession was passing through the streets Jos. Meaux, of color, had a difficulty with a white man. Jack Cogar, a policeman, endeavored to quiet Meaux, but he seized the officer's club and struck him several blows, whereupon Cogar drew his revolver and shot him, inflicting what is supposed to be a mortal wound.

JAMES ENNIS, while returning from the Democratic jollification at Versailles, was thrown from his buggy and killed.

THE Kentucky delegation to the next Congress stands ten Democrats and one Republican.

JAMES EMORY has been convicted of the murder of his wife and sentenced to the penitentiary for life by the Lincoln Circuit Court.

THE decision of the Owen Circuit Court was affirmed in the case of John M. Palmer, who was convicted and sentenced to the penitentiary for twenty-one years for the murder of B. F. Crutchfield.

JOSEPH KECK, confectioner, of Louisville, was found by his little son, hanging to a clothes line attached to the gas-pipe in the rear room of the store, and the front doors were closed. An alarm was given and Coroner Miller found this note in deceased's pocket: "My daughter ran away from me. I am ashamed to live longer. I am sorry to do this, but my heart is broken, and I had better make an end of my life. Good-by to all my friends." Since the death of Mrs. Keck, nineteen months ago, the old man has let his stock run down to nothing. His daughter married James Mershon, a saloonist, a few months since, and her absence from his household furthered this disconsolation. After kicking a chair from under himself, he stooped in order to complete the job, as his feet were on the floor. How long he had been hanging is unknown.

A FEW nights ago the jailer and turnkey at the Covington jail heard sounds of a struggle issuing from a cell occupied by Sandy Grant, who was taken in on the charge of drunkenness. An investigation found him dangling from a rope made of strips from a torn-up blanket. He was choking pretty fast, and would soon have ended his existence, had he not been cut down. Grant belongs to a highly respectable family.

THE other morning, while attempting to arrest a burglar caught in the act in Newport, policeman Joseph Edgar was fatally shot. The burglar escaped.

C. W. FOUSHEE and W. E. BOSWELL, of Clark County, made the following agreement before the election: If Blaine was elected Foushee was to paint Boswell in the "ebon hues of night." If Cleveland was elected Boswell was to paint Foushee in the color commonly called "Hell on the sky."

PAYTON, who killed Hall at Pleasureville, has been arrested.

TWO YOUNG lady canvassers called on the Russellville Herald-Enterprise man, who thus refers to them: "They are bright, pretty, and possessed of a cheek that fadeth not away."

Does Death Sting?

Dr G. L. Beardsley, in the Medical and Surgical Reporter, concludes that the dread of dying is quite as intense as the instinct of self-preservation. Indeed, it is not improbable, adds the doctor, that numbers would care less about living were the modes of leaving the world a theme for happy contemplation, or an innovation to the routine of plodding that was agreeable. One is remarkably exempt from the crime of hasty induction if he affirms that there is no sane or healthy mortal who anticipates his extinction with any degree of pleasure. The function of dying is absolutely vegetative—we fall to pieces like a flower. This very fact, that the process is chemical, confirms us in the conclusion that the final "throe" is as painless as the inconvenience is nothing to the fœtal pilgrim when he touches on daylight. A moment's examination of the way we are to die will show marks of goodness in our "taking off." The degree of sensibility is proportioned to the integrity of the tissues. An inflammation heightens it; age depreciates it. Any defect in nutrition disturbs the comfort of the individual until the carbonic acid generated in the devitalization of the blood becomes fixed in the cells or is no longer displaced. The sensory ganglia everywhere part with their irritability by virtue of this poison, and cease to conduct currents. The criteria of death are being satisfied, and the process is consummated when this extinction of sensibility prevails at the ultimate filaments. During the progress of this dissolution of the nerve force, this creeping on of the numbness of death, the individual is rapidly passing into a condition of repose, and instead of torture or pangs, a degree of self-satisfaction oft approaching to enthusiasm is realized. The sensations peculiar to the therapeutical operation of opium, hasheesh, ether, etc., are not improbably akin to the mental activities of the dying. Barring the hallucinations experienced in the stupor as it gains on the subject, the moribund is familiar with naught that borders on suffering. This carbonic acid has poisoned or narcotized the several ganglia, and reflex productions are interdicted. A consummate analgesia prevails. In short, the notion of pain is forbidden the instant that any stimulus fails to excite a response. The condition to this irritability is that the nerve center and track be sound. If this vigor vanishes, reflex phenomena are at an end, and suffering, physiologically speaking, is impossible, because of the arrest of the function of the sympathetic.

Fortunately, for a wholesome study of one's demise, there are assurances abundant, from vivisection, the testimony of those who have been restored to consciousness, and the affirmations of the dying, that there is no physical recoil from death. Burney tried hard to resist the efforts made to resuscitate him from drowning, so bewitched was he by his prolonged slumber. Dr. Solander, the traveler, was so delighted with the sensations of excessive cold, that he was the first to lie down in the snow to realize the luxury of such a death. Wm. Hunter was sorry he was not able to "write how easy and delightful it is to die." Infants die as serenely as they breathe, and not a few among the advanced in years treat death as a friend to their infirmities. Hanging is naturally rated, next to crucifixion, a most distressing procedure. But it is reported of those who have been saved from strangulation, that the agony promised to be brief, and was rapidly replaced by hallucinations of a fascinating variety.

One would fain believe that the kind God who suffered us to feel no sigh in coming would take no delight in turning our farewell into writhing—nay, he does not quit us at the last. He is our great benefactor in allowing us to sleep out of weariness. Death is assuredly no tax collector: its "jaws" are not the clutches of an assailant; there is no "victory to the grave;" the ghost speeds away from us as it entered, with no ruffle. The sense of death, as Shakespeare has it, is most in apprehension. It is the fear of the lonely night, not the throes of nature, that makes the leaving painful.—Scientific American.

Arctic Fascination.

It is announced that one of the recently rescued Arctic adventurers wants to go again. There seems to be a fascination in this quest that almost invariably draws men back to it who have once attempted it. Their hardships and sufferings always evoke great sympathy. The heart of the Nation is wrung for them. But their desire to plunge again into the perils out of which they have been rescued suggests the possibility that there are personal compensations in this venture which render so much sympathy misplaced. There must be some charm about the free life in the Arctic regions which greatly mitigates the personal experience of hardships. It used to be the fashion to waste a good deal of sympathy on missionaries from New England to the East; and they got a great deal of credit for their abandonment of home and voluntary exile among foreign races. But it was noticed that whatever the hardships, and they were many, of their foreign residence, they in time liked the life and clung to it. And when it was realized that the escape from the New England climate into one genial the year round, and into conditions where living was much easier than here, was some compensation for missionary devotion, the supporters of missions could devote their whole energies to forwarding the work of evangelization without wasting so much sympathy on the agents of it.

If people like to go into the Arctic regions from love of adventure and a free life, there is no objection to their going, if they can raise the means. To get nearer the geographical pole than anybody else is as noble an ambition as for a boy to go out farther on the limb of a gigantic oak than any other boy. We all appreciate acts of daring. But we think think that this Arctic business might as well be considered a personal matter, and not a case for so much sympathy on the part of those who are fond of it, and find it more fascinating than a hum-drum, industrious life at home. It does not appear that the people generally are to gain anything by it, or that it is the sort of adventure that the Government ought to engage in. The idea of establishing a weather bureau in the highest attainable latitudes seems to be abandoned as of no practical value, and no commercial advantages are possible in sending a vessel occasionally to get caught in the ice and abandoned. That some men can endure the rigor of an Arctic winter, and that the most can not has been sufficiently demonstrated. We know the whole dreary story. The incidents of one Arctic expedition are much like another—frost, darkness, dogs, Esquimaux, seals, blubber, canned meats, freezing of limbs, hunger to the point of starvation—the latest expeditions add no new incidents. The career may be fascinating to some men, but the public has ceased to think it remunerative to anybody.—Hartford Courant.

THE ELOPEMENT EPIDEMIC.

A Statistician Gives Some Figures on the Subject.

He was a seedy-looking man, seedy from the toes of his unpolished boots to the top of his shabby old beaver, and even his hair, which came down on his coat collar behind, looked as if it had run to seed also. He was in the newspaper room of the Mercantile Library and was reading a file of the Denver Tribune. When he had finished he pulled out a note-book and jotted something down. "Do you take any interest in statistics?" he asked, turning to a man in the next chair.

"Not much. Why?"

"Well, I'm devoted to 'em, especially to female statistics; that is, of course, to statistics concerning the gentler sex, and I've been a week looking up some figures on this elopement epidemic that seems to have taken the country by storm. Would you like to hear some of 'em?"

"Yes."

"I started with the 1st of September, and since then the papers have had accounts of 311 runaway matches, 261 of the women being under 20 years of age, and of that lot 238 were blondes, so you see that light-haired girls are most romantic; my figures say so, and figures never lie. Of the other 50 who skipped off 29 were under 25 years old, 14 between 25 and 30, and the other 7 ranged from 31 to forty-six, the last being an old hen who eloped with a young man who turned out to be feeble-minded. One old girl started and changed her mind, and went home again for fear the papers would print her age. Only nineteen did the thing in real out-and-out style, ladder, midnight, moonlight, and carriage waiting at the garden gate business, and the rest just went off to the parson's as if they'd been going to the butcher's or the grocer's, or skipped off by train after telling some fib or other about going to pay a visit to their aunt or their cousins or a friend; 121 of the lot came back with their husbands, and were forgiven; sixty-two stern parents have played the hard-hearted Morosini racket, and there are no returns so far from the rest of the list. Boston seems to have had the fever worse than anywhere else, and there have been seventy odd—let's see—here it is, seventy-three cases from that place; but girls'll do almost anything to get away from there; then comes Chicago, then ——."

"How many of the women ran off with coachmen?"

"Oh! I'm not sure; about 275 or 280, I think, but that's not in my line; female statistics exclusively is my hobby, and the coachman don't come in under the rules."

And, pocketing his precious note-book, the seedy statistician went away.—Philadelphia Record.

DANGER FROM CATS.

Diseases Caused by the Breathing of Infected Air.

Few people are aware of the diseases which result from breathing air infected with the excrements of the domestic cat. Nature, recognizing the morbid influence of this noxious matter, has endowed all the feline tribe with an instinct for burying their fœces. M. Charles Richet has recently communicated to the Academie des Sciences the principal conclusions at which he has arrived. He shows that various phases of blood poisoning are directly traceable to the cause just referred to. Numerous patients were treated by him in the Paris Infirmary for certain cutaneous diseases which only yielded to long and skillful treatment. Over ninety-five per cent. of these he traced to quarters of Paris where cats were kept for absentees, and also for their skins. Most of the occupants of tenements where cats were lodged he found afflicted more or less with cutaneous or glandular disorders, some of whom had died in the hospitals. Some powerful facts were also brought forward from experiments made with dogs and rabbits. Two weeks' confinement in infected compartments caused these animals to become feeble and sickly, the cutaneous nerves becoming inflamed and coated with a species of bacteria. "In habitations contaminated with this noxious effluvium, Richet recommends the use of chloride of lime or dry earth as remedial agencies; the latter having the advantage of not being expensive. When it is considered that the state of the blood depends mainly on the condition of the air that is received into the lungs at every respiration, it would be needless to enlarge upon the baneful effects of an atmosphere impregnated with fœcal matter which repels even that foulest of all scavengers, the blue-bottle.—London Lancet.

Lightning Rod Profits.

"I have seen the time I could make fifty dollars a day putting up lightning rods. Drive up to a house and talk with a man about rodding his barn at so much a foot, and he would figure that it would cost, say sixteen dollars, and he would sign an order. Before the ink was cold I would have seven or eight men, with ladders, all over that barn. They would go over it like cats on a back fence, and put points on every corner, and conductors down every side. The farmer and his family would look on in amazement, and be so pleased at the improved look of the old barn that they would not kick at the number of points. Then we would go off without collecting the bill, and in about a week our collector would come along with a bill for $387.47, and the farmer's note, all signed, and demand the pay. The farmer might faint away, but he had to pay it. Oh, of course, if he seemed hurt, we would throw off the old cents, just to show a Christian spirit. But the condemned newspapers have kept talking about highway robbery under the disguise of lightning-rod peddlers, until it is as much as a man's life is worth to go through the country on a lightning-rod wagon. Actually, they chased me out of Dodge County two years ago with dogs. At least, I thought they were after me. I found out after I got out of the county alive that it was a pack of hounds belonging to Van Brunt, of Horicon, after a fox. But I want to say to you, in confidence, that when I heard those hounds and saw the men on horseback, no streak of greased lightning ever made better time than I did with that lightning-rod wagon."—Farm and Fireside.

LUNATICS.

Where They Come From—Professions Yielding the Largest Number.

For many years past we have made statistics our especial study. We revel in statistics of such an entertaining character as those relating to bankruptcy, criminals, rainfall, atmospheric pressure, railway rates, thunder-storms, duration of sunshine, etc., but we have never hitherto found anything so much to our taste as the statistics of insanity and occupation. Some one has gone to the trouble of compiling a list of statistics showing the particular occupation followed by the inmates of the different public and private lunatic asylums in England before their incarceration. From this it appears that the professional and commercial groups yield by far the largest proportions, varying from five per 1,000 in soldiers to 3.4 in civil engineers, and 2.4 in artists to 1.0 in the teaching and lecturing class. In the commercial group, travelers stand high, 1.3 per 1,000. In the agricultural, farriers and veterinary surgeons head the list, 1.3; while shepherds and gamekeepers are the lowest, 0.5. Of manufacturers, paper-makers are lowest, 0.8; while of handicrafts, plumbers, painters, and glaziers, are highest, 1.9. The group of persons employed in the heavier kinds of manual labor yields a lower proportion than any other, 0.48, miners being the lowest of its constituent classes, 0.3. We can understand soldiers going wrong in the head, because they have frequently to go into burning hot climates, where they are exposed to sunstroke and other evils. We can also understand artists getting astray in the upper story when their pictures are rejected, but we cannot understand the civil engineer, who, as a rule, has about the pleasantest occupation among the profession, unless it be a struggling and unrecognized man. Plumbers, painters and glaziers, of course, go wrong through remorse at the way they have served a confiding public, while, as a rule, the lower class of laborers have not brains enough to get out of order. It is especially pleasing to find the percentage of journalists and parsons is too small to be recognized. This is doubtless due to the highly moral lives led by these two branches of the intellectual professions.—London Sportsman.

MR. EDISON'S SEARCH.

He Is to Devote Five Years to the Elimination of the Steam Engine.

"The great secret of doing away with the intermediary furnaces, boilers, steam engines and dynamos will be found, probably, within ten years. I have been working away at it for some months and have got to the point where an apparently insurmountable obstacle confronts me. Working at the problem now seems to me very much like driving a ship straight for the face of a precipice and when you come to grief picking yourself up and trying it again to-morrow. There is an opening in the barrier somewhere and some lucky man will find it. I have got far enough to know that the thing is possible. I can get quite a current now directly from the combustion of fuel. Jablochkoff tried his hand at the same thing some years ago, and so did some Germans, but the results were laboratory curiosities only. I give myself five years to work at it and shall think myself lucky if I succeed in that time.

"The unscientific world has no conception of what such a discovery would mean. It would put an end to boilers and steam engines; it would make power about one-tenth as cheap as it is now; it would enable a steamship to cross the Atlantic at a nominal cost; it would enable every poor man to run his own carriage; it would revolutionize the industrial world.—Philadelphia Times.

ALL the papers are suggesting cabinet officers for Mr. Cleveland, and it is noticeable that Allen G. Thurman, of Ohio, is not left off of a single slate. Both parties are unanimously of the opinion that he would make an excellent cabinet officer.

AN interviewer who attempted to extract from Gov. Cleveland some information as to the course he would pursue as to appointments, had to leave without achieving anything further than that the Governor is a man with a mind of his own.

IOWA claims to be the greatest pork-producing State in the Union, and the claim is sustained by the last census, which credits it with a grand total of 6,000,000 head of swine, while Illinois has 5,170,266 and Missouri 4,558,133. The hog cholera is said to be prevailing in the two first mentioned States.

MR. BLAINE is quoted as saying that he made a good fight, and that he gracefully bows to the verdict of the American people. He will take up his residence in Washington in a few days, and resume work on his "Twenty Years in Congress," the second volume of which will be ready for publication next June.

New corn is selling at $2 50 per barrel or 50 cents per bushel. There have not been many sales at present but while nearly all consider the above price a good one, yet they are inclined to hold for an advance. The crop is much better than was expected, and while it may not prove an average in yield it will reach that [illegible] in quality.—Warsaw Independent.

THERE is no use of creating any uneasiness among the colored people by telling them that when the Democratic party comes into power that they will be returned to servitude. The colored population will receive as much protection under Democratic as under Republican rule.

AMONG the causes assigned for the defeat of Blaine are a useless expenditure of the campaign funds in some of the Southern States; the declaration of Rev. Berchard as to "rum, Romanism and rebellion," and the St. John vote. It strikes us that the principal cause was the want of Blaine votes.

THE last election is the closest seen in New York for at least fifty-six years. In 1828 New York gave a plurality for Jackson of 5,350, in 1844, 5,106 for Polk, the lowest of which we have a record there. The pluralities for twenty years are as follows: In 1864 Lincoln carried it by 5,767; Seymour had just 10,000 in 1868, and Grant 53,455 in 1872; in 1876 Tilden carried it by 32,738, and Garfield had a plurality in 1880 of 21,033.

MR. CARLISLE when approached on the subject of a cabinet position said that he had received no intimation that he was being considered in such connection, and had no idea such a position would be offered to him; but if it was tendered he should have to decline it, greatly preferring the position he now holds. "Besides" he added, "I am not a rich man, and [illegible] afford to entertain in the manner expected of any Cabinet officer whose post I would take, if requested.

AN Indiana correspondent to the Cincinnati Enquirer tells how the rooster was adopted as the Democratic emblem of victory as follows:

"In 1842, after the Harrison campaign, there was great doubt as to how Indiana had cast her vote. The situation was similar to that in New York to-day in every respect. An editor named Chapman conducted the Democratic newspaper at Indianapolis, and, as is often the case in boasting over a victory, his editorial rejoicing over the result was termed "crowing." In a day or two, when some of the back counties were heard from, and the Whig organ came out giving late returns showing Democratic defeat, and in the head line was the expression, "Crow, Chapman, crow." This was intended as a taunt and must have been felt, for a few more counties yet to hear from again turned the tables, and showed that the Democrats had won. It was then that the rival editor hoisted at the head of his columns a magnificent rooster and printed under it "We Crow."

It made a palpable hit. The passion for roosters spread, and from that day to this the bird immortalized by the Hoosier editor has been the emblem of Democratic success."

A MAN's caliber is estimated by his rise and progress in this world. Taking that as an index to President-elect Cleveland it points to the single conclusion that he is an extraordinary man—one whose equal is rarely found in this age of the world. Going back only seven years he is found an obscure lawyer in New York practicing his profession in the Courts of the Justices of the Peace. His business tact and honesty soon gained for him the confidence of the people, and he was elected to the office of Sheriff in Buffalo. As Sheriff he never deviated from the line of his duty however disagreeable. His executive skill and official integrity thoroughly tried while Sheriff, so endeared him to the people, that immediately upon the expiration of his term of office they were ready to award him further and placed him at the head of their city government. As Mayor of the city of Buffalo his friends were not disappointed in the very high grade of government he gave them, bringing about many needed reforms.

When the time came for the two great parties in the State of New York to select their candidates for Governor, the Democratic party in that State had learned to recognize in Grover Cleveland, Mayor of Buffalo, a great and good man in whose care they were willing to risk the ship of State. The Republicans put up Charles J. Folger, one of President Arthur's cabinet officers, and the result was the election of Cleveland by 194,000 majority. Cleveland took charge of the affairs of the Empire State over which he now presides. Soon after his inauguration as Governor of New York, so unparalleled had been his advancement in politics, that many of his friends at once commenced advocating his availability as a Presidential candidate.

When the National Republican convention met in Chicago and nominated James G. Blaine, their magnetic and able statesman, whom they considered it folly for the Democratic party to oppose, but at the same time showing that Samuel J. Tilden and Grover Cleveland were considered their formidable opponents, the Democrats placed their banner in the hands of Cleveland, the man to whom defeat is unknown, and he triumphantly carried it through, leaving the magnetic Plumed Knight and his party sadly disappointed in his political prowess.

If there is nothing in the man how is it that his advancement has been so rapid, while meeting and conquering the greatest political opponents that the opposite party contains?

HAIL DEMOCRACY.

After a lapse of twenty four years Democracy returns triumphantly to power again, having ruled successively as well as successfully from the inauguration of Jefferson in 1801 to the inauguration of Lincoln in 1861, a period of sixty years, the single administration of Harrison being excepted. Historians frequently class all of the administrations as Democratic, from the founding of the government to the administration of Lincoln, with the single exception of that of John Adams. Washington, though generally styled a Federalist, shared the sentiments of both of the prevailing parties. He chose a cabinet and placed in other government offices, persons, a majority of whom were of the Jefferson school in politics.

Adams, the most scholarly of all of the early Presidents, a man of vast experience in politics, of the most eminent service during the Revolutionary period, an earnest advocate of the Declaration of Independence and the ablest champion of the Constitution, was a Federalist. He was haughty and had inherited some of the straight-laced notions of the Puritans that rendered him intolerant; led to an exercise of arbitrary power, legalized by the Alien and Sedition Acts; rendered himself unpopular, and resulted in removing the Federalists from power.

Harrison, dying in one month after his inauguration, was succeeded by Tyler, a Virginian of the State Rights school in politics, and whose administration was supported by the Democrats. He was President of the fruitless Peace Congress in Washington in 1861, cast his lot with the Southern people, and died in the Confederate Congress in 1862.

With these short lapses the Democratic party have ruled from the foundation of the government to 1861. At this latter period the Democracy was divided. There were in all, five Presidential candidates, enabling the Republicans to obtain a plurality for Mr. Lincoln. From that time till the present the Republicans have ruled the country.

On the fourth of next March the mantle falls on the shoulders of the Democracy. We hope that they may long deserve to wear it; that it may rest becomingly on them as in the eventful past.

From a small cluster of States on the Atlantic cost in the beginning of Jefferson's administration till Pierce's in 1850, we have extended our area from ocean to ocean, embracing about three and one-half millions of square miles. The first increase was the purchase of Louisiana under Jefferson in 1803, containing 757,000,000 acres at about the cost of 3½ cents an acre. Next came Florida in 1819, embracing 38,000,000 acres at about 17 cents per acre, during the administration of Monroe. In 1848, during the Polk administration followed the first purchase from Mexico of 334,500,000 acres at about 4½ cents an acre. The second Mexican purchase, known as the Gadsen purchase was made in 1853 under Pierce, and contained 29,000,000 acres and cost about 34 cents an acre. The same political party that helped to frame the Constitution of the county; that has increased its area until it includes nearly half the continent; that shaped its policy and gave it most of its laws presently steps into its former place and resumes the work which has been temporarily suspended. If the Democratic party shall display that wisdom and integrity in the future that have marked its career in the past, it may justly expect a long and glorious career. But if it should prove itself unworthy of the trust, or fail to keep pace with the enlightened progress of the age, or fail to appreciate and accept the living issues of the day, the people will demand a change. Parties, like people, have their sins of omission and commission. The Alien and Sedition laws, and the exercise of arbitrary powers under them, was the sin of commission which hurled the Federalists from power. Slavery, an institution interwoven with the fiber of our government, was the rock on which Democracy split. They refused, for constitutional reasons, to interfere with an institution which the sentiment of the age characterized as an evil, and demanded its extinction. When the royal prerogative in England trameled the progress of the nation, the Puritans came into power, lopped off the excrescences, grew unpopular, passed from power, and have never been influential in the government since. Perhaps the Republican party has finished its mission and will quietly pass to the shades of rest. ***

THE Cleveland Rolling Mill Company will resume work in all its departments on Monday, except in the soft steel mill. Not since the strike of 1876 has the mill run its full capacity. The new move gives work to 3,500 men, an increase of 1,700 over the force formerly employed.

GRAND

DEMOCRATIC JOLLIFICATION

—AT BURLINGTON, KY.—

Friday Eveni'g,

— At 3 o'clock —

November 21st, 1884.

Speaking, Fireworks, Music, &c, &c.

Hon. JOHN G. CARLISLE is invited and expected to be present to address the crowd.

Everybody invited to attend and take part in rejoicing over the triumph of the Democratic party at the polls on November 4th, 1884.

THE official count of the vote cast for President in New York has been made and Cleveland's plurality stands between 1,100 and 1,2[illegible]. [illegible] material changes were made in the figures which the New York Sun gave the country a few days after the election. The Presidential election being settled, the country will now resume business, and proceed after the 4th of next M[illegible]h about as it has for some time past.

A Calcutta forger was captured in Louisville the other day, and turned over to an officer who had come for him.

Among the Farmers.

New corn delivered in Lexington is worth $2 per barrel.

Corn is worth $2 50 per barrel in the Winchester market.

The goose bone has been heard from; it says the winter will be warm and dry.

The potato crop though small is of fine quality. Dealers are paying 40 cents per bushel.

The best feeding cattle are selling throughout the bluegrass region at 5 cents per pound.

The tobacco is rapidly being sold, at lucrative prices, in this part of the country.—Adairville Siftings.

Twenty-three deaths occurred at Cynthiana in the space of a week and no epidemic raged there either.

Mr. C. Deweese sent to this office last week two very fine sweet potatoes of his own growing that weighed, one 4½ and the other 5 pounds.—Milton Free Press.

Turkeys are being sold at about an average of 80 cents a piece and our farmers say they will bring more clear money into the county than the hog crop.—Clark Co., Democrat.

At Eminence, corn is selling at $2 25 a barrel at a season when it not unfrequently sells at $1 25 to $1 50 per barrel, indicating that there is a very short crop in that section of the State.

Colby Dunn sold last week to Mark Furguson three acres of the new crop of tobacco now stripped and hung in the barn and supposed to contain about 4,500 pounds for $363 or about 15 cents per pound.—Clark County Democrat.

While a man named Davis was blasting out an ice house on Wm. Woodford's farm in Bourbon county, the blast not going off, he descended the hole to relight the fuse, when an explosion took place, which hurled him into the air, broke one arm, and blew both eyes out. He will probably recover.

Last April lightning struck a very large green elm tree on the farm of J. M. Todd, near Smithfield and set it on fire in the top. The tree continued to burn until since the November election. The tree is almost wholy consumed, the stump being about four feet high. It burned continuously about seven months. Mr. Todd would verify this statement underneath if necessary.—Eminence Constitutionalist.

EDWARD MCPHERSON, Secretary of the Republican Congressional Committee, thinks that Mr. Carlisle will be sustained in the next House by re-election to the Speakership.

A report reached here last week that the negro who shot Bennie Carpenter at Richwood had been captured at Point Burnside on the Southern Railroad, but it proved to be a mistake. We understand that $1,100 reward, divided as follows, is now offered for his capture: By the Governor, $500; by Hon. Reuben Conner, $100; by Woodford Carpenter, father of the murdered boy, $500.

While "hugging" the fence corners along a steep bank the other day, the bank gave way, precipitating Dr. Furnish and his horse some 10 or 12 feet to the branch. The doctor says when the bank commenced sinking he commenced trying to think of the good deeds he had done in this world, but up to the apparent danger's disappearing he had not succeeded in recalling a single one.

The preparation for the entertainment is progressing satisfactorily, and you must keep your eyes open for the programme. It will evidently be the most interesting and attractive entertainment ever given in Burlington. Mr. Joe Reed, the manager, is sparing neither time, money nor labor to furnish attractions which will consist of musical and dramatical production both comic and pathetic to be produced in the most striking manner.

The Burlington literary society was organized last Friday night with M. T. Garnett, President; C. L. Crisler, Vice-President; cabinet officers, H. P. Stephens, Secretary and S. W. Tolin, Treasurer. The following question was chosen for discussion next Saturday night: Resolved that the manufacture and sale of spirituous, vinous and malt liquors should be prohibited. T. H. Stephenson, —— Mack and H. P. Stephens affirm; S. W. Tolin, J. G. Furnish and W. L. Riddell deny.

Rev. R. N. John, State Missionary of Indiana, will assist the pastor in a series of meetings at the Universalist church in Burlington, beginning Friday evening before the fifth Sunday in this month, and continuing over Sunday. There will be preaching Saturday morning. The series will not begin on Tuesday evening as announced, on account of a Thanksgiving service at Newtown, Ohio, which was partially arranged for, but which was not thought of, or the exact time of which was not known when the announcement for Burlington was made. Beaver Lick.

Well, it may be a little late, but nevertheless, we want the unterrified Democracy of this glorious country to know that Beaver gave the news of Cleaveland's election the confoundedest jollified reception that laid in the expansive bounds of her undisputable ability. We yelled louder than a steam whistle and shot off anvils bigger'n the fourth of July, we did. Then we gradually calmed down close together and attempted to realize the immensity of the glowing fact that we had really participated in the general expression of gratification over the election of a Democratic president. Kind readers it's a big thing—but I must desist ere I become patriotic and unconsciously announce myself a candidate for governor.

Beaver wasn't for Brown as the returns will amply substantiate. We are sorry, but wasn't he done up Brown?

'Squire Norman, Doc Riley and Col. Len Frazier, a trio of Union's best sportsmen, in company with an intellectual canine, with decisive bird proclivities, came down to Ed Williams' one evening recently for fun. The next day with Ed as guide, they spent pleasantly hunting the toothsome game that is reputed to infest the beautiful shrubery and brambles that flourish on the glens and dingles of the historic regions of Big Bone. They reported their success as follows: "We got some, and some we did'nt."

We hear of some tobacco having been sold in this neighborhood alrea[dy], rather new fangled manner. It is sold at so much per stick, the purchaser to strip the same. That which has been sold brought a tolerable fair price considering the quality, which, at any rate, reached as low as medium. B. L.

Union.

We have passed through a tremendous Cleveland jollification, and it's a wonder that anyone is left to tell the tale. The ball was opened early in the afternoon of Saturday by a brigade of young ladies, Misses Laura Norman, Jennie Taliaferro, Sallie Bannister and May Norman, commanded by the gallant Col. W. M. Rachael, who cantered through the principal avenues on fiery steeds, making the welkin ring with cheers for President Cleveland, later on becoming more enthused the male portion of the population took up the refrain, and with guns, pistols, anvils, bonfires, bells, horns, hurrahs, and hard cider, night was truly hideous. After an approach to several gory encounters and a general good time, every one left the scene and quiet reigned supreme. Hurrah for Cleveland!

Mrs. Sarah Huey is visiting at her father's near Warsaw.

Miss Katie Kennedy, of Hamilton, is the guest of Annie Anderson.

R. O. Hughes, one of Richwood's popular young men, was here Saturday.

Mrs. J. B. Thornton is entertaining her mother, Mrs. Wilson, of Indiana.

Mr. and Mrs. B. Johnson, of Walton, visited friends here Saturday and Sunday.

L. Wilkie and wife, of Covington, were the guests of his parents here last week.

L. L. Bristow, of Florida, and J. E. Bristow, of Banklick, visited relatives here last week.

Dr. Skillman will preach at the Baptist chapel here on the evening of Thanksgiving, Nov. 27th, and probably on the Friday morning following.

Bellevue.

The wharf commissioners have called two meetings lately to see what means could be raised to buy the property of Jonas Clore above the landing on the river and unite it with the public landing and avoid making a straight fill to the low water line; and by using the curved road to the river, secure a much better landing. After a second trial to raise the means, and not more than two-fifths of the amount subscribed they gave it up. They will now use the remainder of the original subscription to secure the work that has been done on the old landing. Individual parties will complete the upper landing and control it. We believe some of our prosperous citizens will see their mistake in the matter after awhile.

Since our last our little city has made several improvements, among them W. T. Grant has remodeled and roofed his residence; Sebern Berkshire has torn down the old blacksmith shop on the corner of his lot in front of Corbins' store where it had been an eye-sore to the public for so long and converted it with other material, into a substantial barn on the opposite corner adjoining Dr. Piatt's stable. This improvement adds very much to that locality.

One day last week Judge Huey, with a shovel brigade, succeeded in building a dam across the street in front of the brick church. We have not been able to learn the object of it, but suppose it is intended for a fish pond or a skating rink. The water to be supplied from the public well when rain falls to meet the demand. The Blaine men say it is intended for a fortification. We shall keep a sharp lookout on that mysterious works.

We understand from the committee that had charge of the construction of the well that they are behind about $14 yet, and to supply the water trough and complete the well it will require an addition of $10 or $12. We hope enough of our citizens will respond to the committee and place the means in their hands to complete the work at once, which they have so well performed.

The Republicans are packing up and making arrangements for their "Salt River" trip next March. Capt. Pepper will have charge of the "Grand Old Tub." We will give particulars hereafter. The Democratic roosters can't stop crowing, and we say let 'em crow.

The last we heard of Jas. Rogers and party they were in the wilds of Missouri knocking deer and bears right and left, playing the wild man generally. Hoopee! Big Injun!

The farmers are busy gathering corn which they say is not much over a half crop in most fields. It is selling for 50 cents per bushel.

Mrs. Bettie Rice, B. F. Corbin, T. J. Clore and the Baptist parsonage have enlarged their celars and walled them with stone.

We have been having beautiful Indian summer the past two weeks—winter comes next.—[It has come.—Eds.]

Andy Cook and family, of Burkworth, Indiana, were visiting Joe Birkle and family last Sunday.

The basket makers are cutting their willows which have made a fine growth the past season.

Mrs. Bettie Aylor and son has moved to W. H. Ryles to keep house for him.

The Baptist begin a protracted meeting here next Wednesday evening.

Mrs. Morgan Rice was visiting relatives here last week.

McVille.

Weather fine and farmers busy gathering corn and stripping tobacco.

They are still hurrahing for Cleveland and Hendricks down this way.

Mr. D. G. Rice has been very poorly for some time with a severe cough.

There was one addition to the Christian church in Bellevue last Sunday.

C. H. Acra moved to McVille last Saturday, and on Monday he took control of the ferry.

Our village store is doing a prosperous business with John Humphry behind the counter.

Prof. Bell and family are boarding at Green McMullen's; he and his wife are teaching the Bellevue and McVille district schools.

Mr. Mock's new store house is about completed. He talks of building him a dwelling and moving here to spend the remainder of his days.

GIVE OVER COAXIN', NEIGHBOR.

Give over coaxin', neighbor, for I'll go out no more,
Unless to walk about the farm once in a while I try.
'Tis not because I do not feel as friendly as before
She left me. But there, sit you down, and I will tell you why.

You see, when she was here—it's now some fifty years ago
Since I first brought her home—how glad and proud I was that day!
I never went abroad but that, as sure as truth, I'd know
She was keepin' lovin' count of all the hours I staid away.

And when the gate latch clicked, and she again my footsteps heard,
Wide open would the house-door fly, and her bright face appear,
And in a voice as sweet to me as song of any bird,
With smiling lips and smiling eyes, she'd say "You're welcome, dear."

You know our sons have sailors been since they were naught but boys,
And that our only daughter when a child was called above,
And so we two were left to share each other's griefs and joys,
And we loved each other, neighbor, with a good, old fashioned love.

And think a moment, neighbor, how very sad 'twould be
To come back from an outin'—how my poor old heart would pain!—
And find the house-door shut, and no dear wife awaitin' me:
'Twould hurt almost as though I saw her die again.

Give over coaxin', neighbor, for now you understand
I'll leave my home no more until I'm summoned where I'll hear,
At Heaven's door wide opened—she'll be there with outstretched hand
And smiling lips and smiling eyes—her say: "You're welcome, dear."

A GENTLEMANLY BOARDER.

Mr. Romney - Romney's Little Scheme, and How It Ended.

Mrs. Harrington William's was well known as one of the most fashionable and comfortable boarding-houses in Folkestone. It stood close to the Lees, with a large semi-public garden at the back, and a glimpse of the sea in front. The house had whatever might be called a "superior" air. Mrs. Harrington Williams herself was the widow of a country parson of good family. From him she derived an un... ...ection of pictures, furniture, and household effects generally; including a quantity of old-fashioned plate, bearing the Harrington Williams crest, and a pair of massive silver candelabra, which, on special occasions, gave her dining-room a distinguished air, beyond the ordinary style of boarding-houses.

Although, however, the house was nearly always full, and the guests mostly of a good paying class, the business did not return a large profit. The expenses of an establishment of this kind, especially when conducted with such liberality as Mrs. Williams', are necessarily high. Added to this, Mrs. Williams was encumbered with three daughters, the youngest of whom was now eighteen, and neither she nor the young ladies had much notion of economy. After three or four years, therefore, at Virginia House, Mrs. Williams' position had begun to cause her some anxiety.

The Misses Williams were stylish, good-looking girls. They added immensely to the attractions of Virginia House, and secured an unfailing supply of bachelor boarders of a peculiarly profitable kind. In the course of a season they would have half a dozen promising flirtations among them; but somehow they had never yet got beyond flirtation. This was a disappointment to Mrs. Williams, who, when she condescended to start a boarding-house, had been greatly influenced by the prospect of finding an opening in life for her girls; and the disappointment was specially keen in the case of Miss Bertha, the eldest, and, in point of looks, at least, the flower of the flock. Bertha, indeed, had made one conquest. When Messrs. Filey & Tapeman were professionally engaged in the settlement of the Rev. Harrington William's affairs, Mr. Frank Bartlett, their managing man, had been much smitten by Miss Williams' charms, and had subsequently, on two occasions, spent his summer holiday at Virginia House. But though a good-looking fellow and a promising solicitor, Bartlett was far from being an eligible party in the eyes either of Miss Williams or her mother. There were obvious reasons for encouraging him up to a certain point, but the young lady took good care that that point was never passed.

Some little excitement was consequently caused among the Williams's, when, toward the end of August, a letter was received, dated from a first-rate West-end club, inquiring whether accommodation could be a at at once provided for Mr. Stuart Romney-Romney and one servant. An answer in the affirmative was promptly dispatched, and a couple of days later the three Misses Williams, from the shelter of a convenient curtain at an upper window beheld Mr. Stuart Romney-Romney drive up, accompanied by a highly respectable man servant and an enormous pile of luggage. The new arrival turned out to be a gentlemanlike man of two or three and thirty, with keen, dark eyes, and fairly good features, rather spoilt by a low forehead, across which his hair was brushed flat. His manners were at first somewhat distant and reserved. This, however, wore off on closer acquaintance, and after a few days he was unanimously voted a decided acquisition to the house.

From the first there was naturally a good deal of speculation as to who Mr. Romney-Romney was. It happened that there were then staying at Virginia House two maiden ladies named Horncastle, sisters of a prosperous banker in the West of England. Miss Horncastle, being not only wealthy, but coming of a county family on her mother's side, was looked up to as rather an authority on questions of social status. In consultation with her sister, Miss Emilia, she had discovered the possibility of their new acquaintance's connection with a certain family of Derbyshire Romneys. Mr. Romney-Romney's answers to a few questions delicately put to him on the subject confirmed this theory; and when, after this, Mrs. Williams reported that her new guest's dressing and traveling paraphernalia were not only lavishly mounted in silver, but emblazoned with a deerhound's head and the motto Prisca phides, the matter was settled beyond much doubt. Miss Horncastle was particularly gracious to the newcomer, and in his honor the two old ladies even went so far as to display from time to time the various installments of their family jewelry, hitherto reserved from the gaze of all but a select circle of female friends up stairs.

But the most satisfactory thing was that from the first Mr. Romney-Romney paid obvious attention to Miss Williams. It was at once noticed that he generally contrived to have Bertha for a partner at lawn-tennis, and that more frequently than not he was at her side when he walked with the ladies on the Lees of an afternoon or evening, or when music was going on in the drawing-room after dinner. And it was quite certain that these attentions met with no discouragement from any quarter.

About a week after Mr. Romney-Romney's arrival, Mr. Frank Bartlett came down for his annual holiday. Within the last few weeks Bartlett had been admitted to a partnership in the firm of Filey & Tapeham, and he now arrived with some hope of inducing Bertha to share his improved lot. It did not, however, take him long to discover the state of the case. Had he been wanting in the natural readiness of a man in his condition to detect a rival, he would have been quickly enlightened by the changed demeanor of Miss Williams and her family. Hitherto he had at least been treated with considerable friendliness; now, no doubt owing partly to the inopportune time of his arrival, he found himself received with marked coldness.

It was natural, therefore, that Bartlett should not take very cordially to Mr. Romney-Romney. This, however, was not due solely to jealousy. Before he had been many hours in Folkestone an idea crossed his mind that he had seen his rival's face before—he could not recall when or where, but the idea became more confirmed every time he looked at Mr. Romney-Romney, and, working on his natural prejudice, caused him to entertain vague suspicions as to that gentleman's antecedents. After he had been a couple of days at Virginia House, his doubts took more definite shape, and a plan occurred to him for setting them at rest, for assistance in which he determined to apply to Kate Williams. Kate and he had always been on friendly terms, and, from one or two chance expressions, he suspected that she was by no means charmed with her brother-in-law in prospect.

"Kate," he said, taking the bull by the horns, "I want to ask you a question about Mr. Romney-Romney. Who is he? What does your mother know about him?"

"As much as she knows about most people who come here," Kate replied. "He gave a good reference, and he pays his bill regularly. Come, Frank, you may not be fond of him, but you can't deny that he is a gentleman."

"Gentleman or not," said Bartlett, "there is something about him that puzzles me. Don't laugh—I am perfectly serious, and I have come to you because I want your help."

"My help!" asked Kate, in surprise.

"Yes I want you to get me his photograph. I have a notion that I have met him before, and I should like to ask my partner, Tapeham, if he remembers him."

"Mr. Romney has not got a photograph," answered Kate. "Mabel was asking him for one the other night, and he told her that he had never been photographed since he was a boy. He said quite seriously he had such a nervous horror of being taken that he could not sit."

"Fiddlesticks!" ejaculated Bartlett.

"But I tell you what we have got," Kate went on, evidently taken with the idea of unraveling a mystery. "Mabel took a sketch of his head one evening while he was playing bezique with Bertha. It's a splendid likeness—quite as good as a photograph. She put it away somewhere, and I have no doubt I could find it."

Bartlett said he should like to have it, and, to his delight, a little later in the evening, Kate took an opportunity of handing the picture to him privately. It proved to be a rough but characteristic likeness of the original, and the same evening Bartlett posted it to Mr. Tapeham, with a short statement of the circumstances which led to his sending it.

Mrs. Williams had felt rather annoyed with Bartlett for intruding himself at this crisis in Bertha's fortunes, but it really seemed as if his arrival had stimulated Mr. Romney-Romney's attachment. On the day after Bartlett's arrival, which was Sunday, Mr. Romney-Romney escorted the ladies to church, and walked home with Mrs. Williams. On the Monday they were together all the morning upon the beach, watching the arrival of the Boulogne boat. When, on the same evening, Frank Bartlett was holding the above conversation with Kate Williams in a corner of the drawing-room after dinner, every lady in the room was aware that Bertha and Mr. Romney-Romney were sitting tete-a-tete in the conservatory downstairs. Presently they were observed to go out together on to the Lees. They walked up and down for an hour in front of the sea, and ten minutes after they came in Mrs. Williams knew that her eldest daughter had promised to become Mrs. Romney-Romney.

By breakfast-time next morning the news was known all over the house, and Bertha was receiving the congratulations of her friends. Miss Horncastle came among the first. Bartlett came too, and managed to put a fairly good face upon the ceremony.

Now that the blow had fallen, Bartlett found himself undergoing a certain revulsion of feeling towards Mr. Romney-Romney, and it was not long before he even found himself hoping that nothing unfavorable to that gentleman would come of his letter to his partner. He could not help seeing what a grievous disappointment it would be to the family if their prize should not turn out to be all it was taken for. This view struck him all the more after he had exchanged a few words with Kate on the subject of the engagement. During the last day or two he found himself a good deal in the society of the second Miss Williams. She was a lively, amiable girl—the best of the three, most people thought—and her mother's right hand in the management of the house. Bartlett was quite surprised to find how blind he had hitherto been to her good qualities.

Consequently, when Mr. Romney-Romney confided to him over their after-dinner cigar, that he was thinking of taking the Misses Williams and their mother to spend a day at Boulogne, and invited Bartlett to be of the party, Frank entered into the scheme without any reluctance.

"I see from the time-tables that either of the next two or three days will suit us," Romney remarked, "but Thursday will give us the longest time there. I shall invite some more people to join us, and we will have a regular big party in honor of the auspicious event."

The scheme was further mooted at breakfast-time on the following day. Unfortunately for Mr. Romney-Romney's idea of "a regular big party," it appeared that a large portion of the company, consisting of Mr. and Mrs. Boxall and their three children, had already arranged to go to Canterbury by coach on Thursday. The Rev. Septimus Macrory, with his wife and sister, were going with them, and their places on the coach were already booked. Miss Horncastle, however, after some little persuasion, consented on behalf of herself and sister to honor the party, always provided the weather and the sea were propitious. The last two visitors Mr. Huntley, a middle-aged bachelor of jovial disposition, and Mr. Octavious Prout, a vacuous youth from the Stock Exchange, at present hopelessly victimized by Mabel Williams—promised to join the excursion as a matter of course.

This was the second day since Bartlett had written to his partner. No answer awaited him, however; and as time went on, and he found himself, under the influence of Kate, more and more interested in the happiness of the Williams family, he began to hope devoutly that he would hear no more of Mr. Romney-Romney's portrait.

On the Thursday morning, which dawned bright and calm, and everything desirable, the Boulogne party were on the move early. The Louise Dagmar, which was to carry them for their trip, started at 9:30, and it was desirable to be on board in good time, in order to secure places before the arrival of the tidal train from London. Consequently, there was rather a scamper over breakfast. Frank Bartlett came in late from his morning swim. A note for him lay on the table. He recognized his partner's handwriting, but in his hurry was obliged to slip the envelope in his pocket unopened. Before he had done breakfast, carriages came to take them down to the harbor, and in the bustle of getting away, and the anxiety of looking after Kate Williams' cloak and parasol and other small belongings, his letter for the moment slipped his memory.

They found themselves in capital time. When they reached the boat, and comfortable places had been secured for the ladies on deck, it still wanted twenty minutes to the time of starting. Mr. Romney-Romney was then seen whispering something to Bertha, and presently he hurried off on shore.

"Where has he gone to?" asked Mrs. Williams.

"To get some flowers," answered Bertha. "I told him not to go, but he said there was plenty of time. Oh, I hope he won't be late! Mr. Bartlett, do you think he will?"

"He need not," said Bartlett. "There is a shop just across the harbor. He could go there and back in ten minutes if he chose to run."

Shortly after the train from London came in, and for the next ten minutes they were all busy watching the Continental tourists swarming on board. When, however, at the end of a quarter of an hour Mr. Romney-Romney had not returned, the ladies manifested considerable uneasiness. The passengers were all on board; the pile of luggage on the quay was being rapidly reduced: and yet he did not appear. As the harbor clock struck the half-hour, and the steam whistle roared out lustily, Bertha Williams stood up and looked towards the quay, biting her lip nervously. Then the last portmanteau came thundering down on deck, and the gangway was drawn up. There was an interchange of signals between the captain and the shore, a shout or two, and a splash as the cables were cast off, and then a quiver ran through the boat, and the quay suddenly appeared to move away, and Bertha dropped back in her chair with a sob which would not be repressed, for they were off, and Mr. Romney-Romney was left behind.

"Don't be frightened," said Bartlett to the ladies generally. "Perhaps he has slipped on board and gone below. I will go and look."

He had not much faith in his own theory, but he moved away as he spoke, and looked through every part of the steamer. He was soon convinced that their friend was not on board. At this point he suddenly remembered the letter in his pocket. He hurriedly broke the seal, and read as follows:

DEAR BARTLETT:—I was playing truant yesterday, or should have answered yours sooner. The portrait you send looks uncommonly like our old friend Harris, alias "Rominy," of the South-Eastern Bank case. I have sent the picture on to Scotland Yard for further inquiry, and will let you know the result. Meanwhile, keep your eyes open, and don't let Mr. Romney-Romney give you the slip. He is pretty sure to know you.

Yours truly, LAURENCE TAPEHAM.

"Confound it all! he has given me the slip," muttered Bartlett to himself. He remembered Mr. Romney-Romney well enough now, and as his mind ran over the events of the last few days, he began to have a general idea that something was wrong, though he was unable to see clearly in what direction. The first suspicion, however, which crossed his mind led him to go at once to Kate Williams and inquire privately who was left in charge of Virginia House.

What he learned from Kate gave his suspicions more definite shape. It appeared that "James," Mrs. Williams's man-of-all-work, had gone out for the day, taking with him Maria, the upper housemaid, with whom he was keeping company. Mr. Romney-Romney himself had arranged this, like the rest of the excursion. He had made presents to all the servants in honor of his engagement, and had condescended to ask, as a profound favor, that James and Maria might be allowed to go and visit friends at Dover. There remained the cook and the under housemaid, and, of course, Kate added, Walters—Mr. Romney-Romney's man.

"Ah, I forgot him!" said Bartlett to himself. "That makes two to reckon with. And as likely as not they have murdered the two women, and are now rifling the house at their leisure, while we are hung up on board this confounded steamer."

There was just one chance of being even with Mr. Romney-Romney yet. While he was looking regretfully at the English coast, now rapidly dropping down astern. Bartlett bethought him that the morning steamer from Boulogne was due to start somewhere about the time that the boat from Folkestone came in. He at once made his way to the Captain of the Louise Dagmar, and interrogated that officer as to the chance of catching the boat back. If they were up to time at Boulogne, the captain said, there would be ten minutes before the other steamer started. Unluckily, however, they had been five minutes late in getting off and had lost another three minutes through a smack passing across their bows coming out of harbor. On the other hand they had one of the fastest boats on the service, and a good tide under her. With luck, the captain told Bartlett he might do it.

After that, there was nothing to be done but to return to the ladies and endeavor to beguile the next hour with small talk. It was as anxious and exciting an hour as Bartlett had ever passed, and he found himself continually relapsing into vacant silence, as he mentally timed the stroke of the engines or measured the seemingly endless distance between the ship and the French coast. When at last Boulogne harbor came in sight he was fain to bolt away from his friends, and take up a position in the bows. From that point of vantage he descried to his relief the smoke of a steamer within the harbor. A moment later he learned from one of the crew that the Louise Dagmar, after one of the best passages on record was in nearly five minutes before her time.

Bartlett never quite knew how he got on board the other steamer, still less what excuse he made to his party for this second desertion. All he clearly remembered was his arrival, perspiring and breathless, on board the Folkestone boat about half a minute before she cast off.

It was hardly one o'clock when he found himself jumping again in Folkestone Harbor. In the meantime, he had planned his next operations very carefully. The first step was to drive to the police station and obtain the assistance of an inspector and constable in plain clothes. The three alighted just before they came in sight of Virginia House. After sending the constable round to watch the house from the back, Bartlett and the inspector advanced to the front door. Contrary to custom, it was shut, but Bartlett had a latch-key in his pocket, and they effected an entrance without difficulty or noise. They at once became aware of a large pile of luggage in the hall, portmanteaus, trunks and packing-cases being heaped up indiscriminately; so, on seeing this, the Inspector changed his plan of operations. Upon a sign from him, they retired cautiously, closing the door again noiselessly behind them, and took up their position in a narrow side street immediately adjoining. They were none to soon. Scarcely were they out of sight, when Walters drove up in a large roomy fly. He led the way into the house, and was soon busily engaged, with the help of the flyman, in removing what Bartlett's companion spoke of as "the swag." As the boxes and portmanteaus mounted up, Bartlett became impatient; but the inspector bided his time. At last, Mr. Romney-Romney appeared on the steps, arrayed in a traveling suit of a fashionable cut, and carrying a rather pretty traveling bag, which Bartlett recognized as his own. Then, at a given signal, the two policemen darted forward, and, just as he was directing the coachman to drive to "Shorncliffe Station—Dover side," Mr. Romney-Romney found himself, with his confederate in the grasp of the law.

An hour or two later the cook and house-maid came back in a state of considerable agitation. They had been escorted down to Sandgate by the affable Mr. Walters, who, after sitting them down to a lunch at a small inn, had suddenly left them to speak to a friend who was passing down the street, and had forgotten to return. They assisted Bartlett to unpack Mr. Romney-Romney's luggage.

Miss Kate is now Mrs. Bartlett, but Miss Williams is still unmarried, though from her altitude towards one or two gentlemen boarders, there is reason to suppose that she is not inconsolable for the loss of Mr. Romney-Romney.—London Truth.

CAUSES OF DISEASE.

How Life is Shortened and How It May Be Prolonged.

The causes that shorten life are twofold, namely, first, those that are pre-natal, or influences that form and develop in the infant before its birth; and second, post-natal, or those that act directly upon the child after it has been born. The first-class of influences produce tendencies to disease from the ill-conduct or misfortune of some ancestor. A poor constitution, a scrofulous diathesis, a strong tendency to certain maladies, may be transmitted through several generations. Character and ability in a child may begin to germinate and develop at the pre-natal outset of its existence. Nearly all able and noble men had able and noble mothers. These remarks may show that tendencies to good or bad in morals, to good or bad in health, may have pre-natal causes, and that the great mortality of infancy may have pre-natal tendencies. Many infants die from having vitiated blood transmitted to them through several generations. These several generations of ancestors may have disregarded natural laws. They may have been poorly nourished, exposed to hard toil and adverse circumstances. A peculiar group of maladies exists among those who work in mines, away from the influences of the sun; or others are spent in unhealthy and filthy places, in poorly ventilated shops, where they are constantly inhaling vitiated air, and are not well supplied with digestible and nutritious food. Such conditions gradually impair health and produce an early death, or, if the subjects live, they transmit their feebleness to posterity.

Bad habits of various sorts deteriorate the blood. Scrofulous diseases are in this group, and the wasting diseases of infancy. They all and some others indicate vitiated blood. If this vitiated blood does not destroy life in infancy or childhood, its influence is not destroyed in after life, but introduces diseases in various forms. This group, too, includes those infants who are really starved to death. They eat enough, but their food does not nourish them, so that they really do not eat at all. Those articles of diet only are nutritious that are digested and assimilated, and find their way into the veins and heart, forces it into every section of the limb and body.

Diseases of the digestive organs form another group that cut short the thread of life in infancy. Diarrhœa, dysentery and cholera are all marked by looseness of the bowels. They all have the same general causes—the emanations from excremental filth polluting the air, soil and water. The peculiar character of cholera infantum, cholera morbus and malignant cholera may be induced by excessive heat. Infants are considered susceptible only to cholera infantum. The mucous membrane of the waste canal is the secreting surface to which nature directs a portion of the impurities which enter the stomach, but are eliminated for lack of use. The kidneys and skin remove other parts. The lungs inhale putrifying germs that induce diarrhœl maladies. To these germs we may add the effect of heat that really develop them. Infants, not yet hardened to the influences of excessive heat, nor able to repel the germs of maladies, readily yield to them, and they sicken and die and pass away like dew before the dispersing influences of the Summer morning sun.

Some diseases are peculiar to degenerated families and races, and to pre-natal causes. These causes are not necessarily vices, but may be excesses and imprudences. If the children of a degenerated parentage escape the perils of birth and early infancy, they feel in after life the effects of degenerated or vitiated blood. Lack of proper food, or food that can not be converted into nutritious blood, either pre-natal or post-natal, is a leading cause of degeneration. It is the great source of rickets and its associates. One sad result of adulterated food is, that the food adulterated loses its nutritious value. Infants need all the cream or fat that milk naturally contains. Depriving infants of this element, deprives them of the means of living, starves them, and ultimately kills them. Physicians are often called not as much to medicate infants, but to nourish them.

Food is not the only thing that promotes growth and strength. The air the infant breathes, the water it drinks, and the soil on which it lives, contribute largely to its life and vigor. The houses in which the infant spends its days and nights are often full of polluted air. Evil spirits hide themselves by day, but stalk abroad by night. We have been called to visit the palaces of the rich and the hovels of the poor, and found them full, more or less, of vitiated air from the water closets, the gas burning, and body emanations and wash bowls of the one—and the cesspools and body emanations of the other. Very few houses have efficient means for the outlet of stale air and the inlet of fresh. They are so badly drained and are so poorly furnished with the means of removing filth, that the fresh air once in is quickly laden with the poisonous gases of putrifying organic matter. Such homes are sure to have illness and deaths, that might have been prevented.

After some years have passed away, the soil adjacent to the appendages of a rural home so arranged is saturated with filth. The rains come now and then and remove the putrid or putrifying matter into the adjacent wells, and the gases formed within the soil rise and mingle with the air and ultimately come into dwellings and bring disease and death. So numerous indeed are such causes of disease, that we cease to wonder that so many infants die, and only wonder that so many infants live.—C. H. Allen, M. D., in Western Rural.

HOME AND FARM.

—For seed, pick out big potatoes with big, plump eyes.

—It is easier to fatten stock in moderate than in cold weather.—Troy Times.

—Many of the afflictions that visit our poultry yards are the results of neglect and filth.

—A Wisconsin farmer claims to have discovered a specific remedy for the ravages of the potato bug. He plants one or two flax seeds in every hill of potatoes, and says that by so doing the bugs never trouble the crop.

—One egg cake: One egg, one large spoonful of butter, two cups of sugar, one small cup of milk, two and a half cups of flour, two small teaspoonfuls of baking powder, nutmeg or lemon to flavor.—The Household.

—The Homestead says that there is something wonderful in the fertilizing properties of clover. It is astonishing that the farmers do not realize its inestimable value for the improvement of the soil. It should never be omitted in a systematic rotation of crops.

—The greater the number of fowls in a place the greater the chances for loss from disease and accidents. While one man may own a great many fowls, he can not succeed unless he manages to give about as much care and watchfulness to every twenty or thirty as he would to a single flock of that size. It is just there that most ambitious poultrymen, aiming to do something large, make their mistake. —Albany Journal.

—Baked ox tongue: Put the tongue into an earthen pan and lay on the top of it a few slices of butter; then cover the pan with a flour-and-water crust and bake, according to size, in a moderately hot oven. When done take off the skin and straighten the tongue on a board by means of skewers at the tip and root. When cold glaze it, ornament it with a frill of paper, vegetables cut into shapes and curled parsley.—Exchange.

"S. R." asks how codfish can be kept soft and light when cooked in milk. The secret of success in this process is that the fish must be picked in fine pieces, and soaked in cold water for at least an hour; then pour hot water over it, and after draining it put it into the milk which you have thickened with flour; let this cook just long enough to cook the flour, and the fish will be done. A minute or two before taking it from the fire, add some well-beaten eggs.—N. Y. Post.

—Turkeys do not require as warm quarters in winter as do other fowls. However cold the weather, they should be allowed to run out of doors every day, except, perhaps, in very stormy weather. If confined in warm quarters and not allowed to run out of doors, they usually show signs of indisposition, lose their appetite, become dumpish and inactive, and not infrequently die. They are very hardy birds and easily wintered. About all they require is a place to roost at night where they will be out of the wind, plenty to eat and drink and their liberty during the day.—Chicago Journal.

SLEEPING DEPORTMENT.

Girls Should Slumber With Their Mouths Shut, and Never Wear Night-Caps.

Teachers of deportment are common enough in the persons of dancing masters, but their instructions relate entirely, so far as I have known, to the waking moments of their pupils. But I have come across a trainer of sleepers. She is the principal of one of New York's many "finishing" schools, where girls are presumed to get the final touches of polish to fit them exquisitely for society. Having been informed that she included in her course of lectures one on the art of slumbering presentably, I begged her to tell me about it. "I see no objection to that," she responded, "and it is simple enough. We try here to so train our pupils that they will become thoroughly agreeable ladies. Did you ever consider that a third of your time is, or ought to be, spent in sleep? And, if you did, it is highly improbable that you have had a thought as to how you looked when sleeping. Well, it doesn't make so much difference in a man, perhaps, but a girl owes it to herself to be at all times as handsome as she can, irrespective of her natural expectation of becoming a wife. Therefore, I have introduced the study of slumbrous comeliness. The main fault to be corrected is that of sleeping with the mouth open. Very many girls do it. It is a habit carelessly acquired, but often hard to eradicate. Dreadfully unfeminine snoring is a consequence. I teach my girls to close their lips snugly before dropping asleep, and to avoid throwing their heads too far back on the pillow, so that their mouths won't fall open as soon as the muscles are relaxed. I conjure them, too, to prepare a toilet as careful, though less elaborate, than that for the day. Their night clothes should be neat, well fitting and adapted to their individuality. They should regard a night-cap with horror. Their hair should not be unbecomingly done up in a tight knot, but adjusted with a view to both comfort and presentability. Their poses on the couch should no more be awkward than those of their waking hours. and I instruct them to so habituate themselves to gracefulness in bed that it will become instinctive. That's about all there is of the system."—Boston Herald.

VELVET BONNETS.

Some Novelties in Embroidery Which are Pretty and Fashionable.

Small bonnets and round hats of medium size make up the most general style of millinery importations. The decided feature of the bonnets is the pointed front, with the brim pinched to a narrow point just above the forehead; this is seen on small capotes and on pokes, and the same effect is given to round hats by extending the upper edge of the brim in a flat point with trimming. The small bonnets are made to wear above high coiffures, and are therefore very narrow, and are not long in the crown; these, it is anticipated, will be chosen for dress bonnets; while small pokes in the fish-wife shape, with sharply pointed brim, will be used for shopping, traveling, etc. Velvet will be used for dress bonnets, and felt and cloth bonnets will be chosen to match woolen costumes, for autumn and winter. There are several different kinds of velvet shown, such as plain frise, repped, beaded and eiscle, but the special novelty is embroidered velvet, with small sprays, flowers or leaves wrought all over the bonnet instead of merely on the crown or brim, as it was last winter. This embroidery is in many instances done by hand, but the machine-work copies hand embroidery so closely that it is difficult to distinguish them; and, being much less expensive, will no doubt be very popular. The embroidery is in self-colored silks, or in all the hues of the flowers represented, or in beads, or else in silver or gold threads, especially the spiral twisted gilt threads used in gilt epaulets and other decorations on military clothes. The fashion of making triangular clusters of three beads, is continued, and is so easily done that ladies who do their own millinery will adopt it, massing three small gilt or jet beads on black or brown velvet, or else powdering pale grey velvet with steel or silver beads.—Godey's Lady's Book.

Antiquity of the Spoon.

The use of the spoon is widespread, and dates from remote antiquity. The form which we use at the present day—a small oval bowl, provided with a shank and flattened handle—is not that which has been universally adopted. If we look into the manners and customs of some of the people less civilized than we—the Kabyles, for example—we shall find that they use a round wooden spoon. Romans also used a round spoon, which was made of copper. We might be led from the latter fact, to infer that the primitive form of this utensil was round, and that the oval shape is a comparatively modern invention. But such is not the case, for M. Chantree, in making some excavations on the borders of Lake Paladan, the waters of which had been partially drawn off, found, in a good state of preservation, wooden spoons which in shape were nearly like those in use at the present day, the only difference being in the form of the handle, which was no wider than the shank. The Neolithic people used oval spoons made of baked clay.—London News.

Not Good at Conundrums.

His heart was full of a burning desire to say something not only complimentary but brilliantly suggestive, so after revolving the matter in his mind during a ten-minute burst of silence he said, gazing into the crackling fire:

"Ah, Miss Eunice, why is the andiron so like myself?"

And Miss Eunice, looking so solemnly demur that the clock stopped, said that she didn't know, unless it was because it had a brass head.

He was groping blindly for the front door before she could catch her breath, and it didn't appear to relieve him a bit when she followed him down the hall to tell him that she wasn't good at conundrums, anyhow. He only went out into the starlight and held his throbbing temples by the bits, and wished that he had died when he was a laughing, innocent babe.—Burlington Hawkeye.

—A crown of oak was considered by the Romans worthy of the highest emulation of statesmen and warriors. To her who had saved the life of a Roman soldier was given a crown of oak leaves, one indeed which was accounted more honorable than any other. In Coriolanus, Volumnia says: "He comes the third time home with the oaken garland." And again: "To a cruel war I sent him; from whence he returned, his brows bound with oak."

—A couple of confidence men were neatly taken in by a Boston broker the other day. They induced him to go around to a house of their selection to play cards, and in their anxiety to bag their game they loaned him $75 to begin playing with. The broker was taken with violent cramps after he had bet $10, and succeeded in getting outside and away with the other $65 in his pocket.—Boston Herald.

—Gingham was first manufactured in the United States by Erastus Bigelow, at Clinton (a town founded by him), in Massachusetts, about 1846. It was the first attempt to manufacture gingham by machinery, and enable the American manufacturers to compete successfully with the English.—Boston Budget.

—London is the great fur market of the world, and the great bulk of all skins are shipped there. There are two large sales of furs, one in October and one in March, at each of which the skins are bought by agents for American account.

DR. ROBT. NEWTON, late President of the Eclectic College of the City of New York, used DR. WM. HALL'S BALSAM very extensively in his practice. He always said that so good a remedy ought not to be considered merely as a patent medicine, but that it ought to be prescribed freely by every physician as a sovereign remedy in all cases of Lung diseases.

Woman's Suffering and Relief.
Those languid, tiresome sensations, causing you to feel scarcely able to be on your feet; that constant drain that is taking from your system all its former elasticity; driving the bloom from your cheeks; that continual strain upon your vital forces, rendering you irritable and fretful, can easily be removed by the use of that marvelous remedy, Hop Bitters. Irregularities and obstructions of your system are relieved at once, while the special causes of periodical pain are permanently removed. None receive so much benefit, and none are so profoundly grateful, and show such an interest in recommending Hop Bitters as women.

Gents' Scarf Pins, Lockets, Fans and Chains, and 92,421 other presents, valued from 20 cents to $1, makes a grand aggregation of 100,000 presents, thus guaranteeing a present to each and every new subscriber who sends us 50 cents. All of the above presents will be awarded in a fair and impartial manner. Presents will be sent to any part of the United States or Canada. The 50 cents which you send us is the regular price for three months' subscription, and therefore we charge nothing for the present. Our profit will be in your future patronage and the increased rate we will get for our advertising space. Your Subscription Free. Get five of your friends to join you by cutting this out and showing it to them. Send us $2.50 and we will send you the ILLINOIS AGRICULTURIST for three months, and one numbered receipt for each of your subscribers, and one extra for your trouble. No postponement. Send ten subscribers with $5 and we will send you 12 subscriptions and thirteen receipts. FOR 60 DAYS ONLY. This offer will hold good for sixty days only, as we shall limit the number of new subscriptions to 100,000, so we would advise all our friends to forward subscriptions at an early date, as in no case will they be received later than January 1, 1885. THE ILLINOIS AGRICULTURIST is the best and oldest edited paper in the country and already has a circulation of 20,000 copies, and only requires 80,000 more to get the desired number. It contains eight pages.

Read How You Can Get This Elegant Gold Watch For 50c.

500 GOLD WATCHES FREE!
In making up the above list of $50,000 in Presents, we decided to reserve $8,000 to be divided equally among the first 500 subscribers received. If you send 50 cents you will be entitled to one receipt good for one present, and if your letter is among the first 500 received you will be entitled to this beautiful watch. We will print in full in the February issue of the ILLINOIS AGRICULTURIST the names and addresses of the winners of the 500 Gold Watches. This offer is bona fide and will be carried out to the letter. Send now, don't wait. The ILLINOIS AGRICULTURIST is so well established, having already 20,000 subscribers, and is backed by ample capital, so that every one of our subscribers may be sure of getting what we promise. Indeed we could not afford otherwise with a paper that has already secured 20,000 subscribers on its merit. Undoubtedly some who read this new departure will think an offer to give away $50,000 in presents is most unreasonable and unprofitable; but let us say to all such persons that it costs anywhere from $25,000 to $150,000 to secure a large circulation to a paper. We know of a publisher that spent $50,000 in one week in giving away free copies and advertising his paper, and the money was well spent, for it secured for him an established circulation that paid good interest on the investment. Publishing nowadays must either be done on an extensive scale or not at all. It costs just as much for matter, and just as much for illustrations, electrotypes, editorial services, rent and for setting up the type for a paper of 100 circulation as it does for a paper with 800,000 circulation. On small editions, each one of the above items swells the cost of a single paper alarmingly, but on very large editions, the expense is spread over so many papers that it is almost entirely lost; thus you can see that large profits can be made only by doing a large business. This is precisely what we propose doing with the ILLINOIS AGRICULTURIST.
We will send a printed list of the Awards Free, and all Presents will be forwarded to Holders of Receipts as they may direct. Our Old Patrons and Subscribers, whom we number by the thousands, should at once go to work and help us to increase our list, by this grand and generous offer.
Only 50 Cents Secures the ILLINOIS AGRICULTURIST three months, and one receipt good for one present. One number of the paper is worth double the subscription price. As to reliability we refer those who do not know us to any Bank or Mercantile Agency.
☞ REMEMBER these are Presents to our Subscribers given to them absolutely Free. (2-Cent Postage Stamps taken. Money in sums of $1 or less may be sent in an ordinary letter at our risk; larger sums should be sent by Registered Letter or Postal Note, and addressed ILLINOIS AGRICULTURIST, 162 LaSalle Street, CHICAGO, ILL.

BOONE COUNTY RECORDER.

VOLUME X. BURLINGTON, KY., WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 26, 1884. NUMBER 4.

TOPICS OF THE DAY.

ALEXANDER SELKIRK and Mr. Friday were witnesses before the Albany Canvassing Board the other day.

ST. LOUIS, which has more trouble with her pavements than any other city in the country, it is said, is now trying one of prepared gumwood, which is to be laid on a foundation of concrete and glazed with coal tar.

GENERAL SHERIDAN writes an interesting account of army operations during the past year. Aside from a few insignificant Indian eruptions, peace has prevailed everywhere. Target practice has been the main business of the boys at all frontier posts.

A PREMIUM of thirty thousand dollars has been offered by the Mexican Government to anyone who will establish in that country a paper mill at a cost of $150,000. The Government will also concede the right to all cactus plants on the State lands.

IT is stated that the French Government is in the way of sustaining a considerable aggregate loss this year from the operation of the railways owned by the Republic. It is estimated that a deficit of $39,000,000 must go on the budget next year to make up deficient dividends.

A SEVERE winter is predicted by the knowing ones from the fact that squirrels and mice have made their nests unusually thick and strong, and squirrels have buried their nuts at an unusual depth. Corn husks are notably thick and the gum on horse-chestnut buds is especially abundant.

THE greatest depth so far discovered in the ocean is 26,850 feet, five miles, or about 2,200 feet less than the height of the world's loftiest mountain peak, Mount Everest, one of the Himalaya chain, which is found to be not less, and apparently a little more, than 29,000 feet above the sea level.

THE school population of the United States is estimated at sixteen millions, but of this number less than two-thirds, or about ten millions, are enrolled on the list of the public schools. The public school system costs over ninety-one million dollars a year, and employs two hundred and ninety thousand teachers.

THE locomotive engine as a weapon wherewith to fell game, is increasing in popularity in the Northwest. A large moose deer was recently brought down at the first shot, on the Canadian Pacific Railway near Mattawa. The antlered monarch was obliging enough, however, to get scared and stand still to be hit.

IN spite of the spread of education, it is said drunkenness is greatly on the increase in England, especially among women. Out of thirteen drunken persons brought before a London magistrate a few days ago, ten were women, and of 17,000 persons apprehended during twelve months in Liverpool, 7,000 were women.

A SAN FRANCISCO gentleman contributes $5,000 for the erection of a drinking-fountain in the city of Dubuque, Iowa, as a memorial of the heroism displayed by Miss Shelly, who crawled across the long high trestle of a damaged bridge one awful night to save the approaching train upon which the gentleman was a passenger.

IT matters little to the public how many men vow never to cut their hair or shave their faces until a candidate of a certain party is elected. They can do as they please in the matter. There is one thing, however, that the people at large take an interest in and that is, they don't want the country to indulge in many close shaves in its Presidential elections.

THE Philadelphia Bulletin can not understand why people on entering a church pew cling to the end next to the aisle, and require those following to climb over them. Possibly they are thoughtful people, and wish to get out quickly when they see the collection box coming. Besides they get home to dinner a full minute sooner than those who select the other end of the seat.

A PHYSICIAN, in the Canada Medical Record, says he has greatly relieved attacks of epilepsy by treating with nitro-glycerine, but has effected no entire cure. It has been the general impression that nitro-glycerine, administered in heavy charges, generally cures anybody and everything within reach. Perhaps the doctor administers light doses, and reserves the heavy charge until the bill is sent in. Then if it is not promptly paid he will show its great power, and collect from the estate.

THERE can be little question that the continued close covering of the head with hats and caps is one very constant cause of baldness. Women seldom lose their hair except from sudden causes, and among those nations where the head is habitually left bare, or but slightly covered, baldness is practically unknown. The beard, which is of the same class of hair as that of the scalp, does not fall with age. A reform in our style of head-gear is very desirable, but it is not at all likely to be accomplished.

RECENT statistics on the comparative longevity of the sexes shows that under fifteen years there are more boys than girls, over seventy-five years there are more women than men, and from the ages of ninety to one hundred the proportion is in favor of women. This is a little rough on the girls, either way. Under fifteen, when boys are most numerous, she isn't apt to care much for them, and from seventy-five to a hundred she has to go lonesome for a lack of their society. But at that age she is rather in different.

STRAY LETTERS.

Information About Dead-Letters and How to Diminish Them.

Some Interesting Figures From the Dead-Letter Office.

WASHINGTON, D. C., November 23.—The whole number of letters received at the Dead-Letter Office during the last year was 4,379,108, or an average of 14,172 for each working day. Of these 3,346,357 were sent there because they were not called for at the Post-office to which they were directed. Seventy-eight thousand eight hundred and sixty-five were returned to Post-offices by hotel-keepers, and thence sent to the Dead-Letter Office because the departed guests for whom they were intended failed to leave a new address; 175,710 were sent there because they were insufficiently prepaid for mailing; 1,345 because they contained articles forbidden to be transported in the mails; 280,137 because they were erroneously or illegibly addressed, while 11,979 bore no superscription whatever. The number of parcels of merchandise, books, clothing, needle-work, jewelry, etc, received during the year was 96,808. The total number of dead letters which were mailed abroad was 400,808. These were all returned to their respective countries of origin unopened. Of the domestic letters opened 15,301 contained money amounting to $32,647.23; 18,095 contained drafts, checks, money orders, etc., to the amount of $1,381,964.47; 66,837 contained postage-stamps; 40,215 contained receipts, paid notes and cancelled obligations of all sorts, and 35,160 contained photographs. Every letter and package is delivered to the owner if possible. Misdirected letters are sent unopened to the persons addressed if practicable. Of these 31,834 domestic and 9,821 foreign were so delivered during the past year. Letters and parcels which can not be delivered to the persons addressed are opened and if it is possible restored to the senders, the former free of charge and the latter upon receipt of the return postage. Every opened letter containing an inclosure of value is carefully recorded, and those for which no owner can be found are filed away subject to reclamation at any time. Letters without remittances of obvious value are not recorded, but are returned to the writers if practicable, otherwise they are destroyed. A large proportion of the most valuable parcels sent to the Dead-Letter Office are addressed to foreign countries and detained because they contain dutiable goods or exceed the limit of size and weight. In all such cases, if the name of the sender does not appear, the addressees are notified that the package will be forwarded by express at their expense or returned to the sender if they will furnish the proper address in this country. The articles received in parcels which can neither be delivered to the person addressed nor returned to the sender are finally sold at auction, and the proceeds deposited in the United States Treasury. Letters are only read to ascertain the name and address of the writer, or to see if anything which was originally inclosed is missing. Information obtained from letters in the course of their official treatment in the Dead-Letter Office is never divulged.

IN RUINS.

The Grand Opera-House at St. Louis Destroyed by Fire.

ST. LOUIS, November 23.—This afternoon fire was discovered in the box-office of the Grand Opera-house, on Market street, between Fifth and Sixth, near the heaters. The alarm was turned on promptly, and for a time it was supposed that the flames could be confined to the front of the building, but they spread rapidly, and within ten minutes had spread to the roof. The firemen worked energetically, but the fire spread in spite of their efforts, and soon reached the stage, where it licked up inflammable scenery with irresistible power. Every one was driven from the building by the blinding smoke, and within an hour afterward the whole interior was gutted. The building is a complete wreck.

Jollification Accidents.

NEW CASTLE, PA., November 23.—At a Democratic jollification last night, a sky-rocket struck a man named Douglas McIlvenny on the chin, and when he was picked up the rocket-stick was found protruding from the back of his neck. His chin was almost entirely torn away, and he will probably die. About the same time Jimmy Mooney was hit on the chest by a rocket, and one of his lungs burst. He cannot recover. Dan Gunsley, a boy aged thirteen, was struck on the thigh and dangerously injured. The physician pulled a section of rocket stick from his leg. Chas. Shaffer, a small boy, was knocked down by the crowd and had one of his legs fractured in two places. A small boy named Warren was knocked down and had his right side crushed. His arm and shoulder were broken and badly crushed. A man named Black had one foot fractured badly.

Sixty Persons Poisoned.

VIENNA, November 20.—Sixty persons have been poisoned, many of them being in a dangerous condition, in the outlying village of Hernals, owing to the carelessness of a corn-dealer in mixing rat poison with flour.

Warming Atlas Powder Cartridges.

WORCESTER, November 21.—While workmen were warming Atlas powder cartridges in a kettle of hot sand, this morning, an explosion occurred. Mathew Fahir had the top of his head torn off, causing instant death. John Madigan and Andrew Wickman were slightly injured.

Trouble Feared in Paris.

PARIS, November 24.—At a demonstration here to-day of workingmen and Socialists several advocated massacre and robbery of the rich. Two speakers who advocated moderation were kicked into the street. Shop-keepers in the vicinity of the meeting closed their places, fearing violence and pillage. The police were unable to disperse the assemblage, and were obliged to call on the military. Troops then took possession of the streets.

Severe Storms.

SCRANTON, PA, November 23.—A severe wind-storm all afternoon culminated in a heavy rain, accompanied by a violent gale about six o'clock. The wind reached a velocity of nearly eighty miles an hour. Roofs, signs and windows were broken and telegraph and telephone wires blown down. Streams are much swollen.

WILKESBARRE, PA., November 23.—A terrific storm, accompanied by high winds, set in here this afternoon, and continued to a late hour. The rain was tremendous. Dwelling houses on low lands were flooded, and the occupants compelled to leave their homes.

—A young lady is said to be "of age" only when she is married.

FRIGHTFUL ACCIDENT.

In Firing a Salute Several Young Men Severely Injured—One Fatally.

HALSEY VALLEY, N. Y., November 21.—A peculiarly sad accident occurred here last night, by which several young men were severely injured. One has died. It was the outcome of an attempt to celebrate an occurrence which has been the subject of a great deal of gossip about here. Some days ago a disturbance arose between two families living close together. The husbands and wives of both families separated. On Friday last the quarrel was made up and matters went on as before. A few young men got together and choose Saturday evening to give the parties a salute. They fired a cannon four times, and the affair adjourned until last night. Then they met again, and three volleys were fired. They were reloading for the fourth shot, when the powder in the cannon became ignited, a terrific explosion followed, and when the smoke had cleared away a sickening sight was revealed. Ellsworth Kirk, who had been pounding the wadding in the cannon, lay with his eyes blown out and the blood oozing from his face. He was alive, but insensible. Shortly afterward he died. Others suffered the loss of eyes and fingers. The sufferers were conveyed to their homes, and medical aid summoned. The list of the injured is as follows: Fred Kirk, brother of Ellsworth, badly burned about the eyes; George Hess lost both eyes; Henry Evlys was badly burned about the head and body, and his legs were burned to a crisp; Sumner Rosebrooks lost an eye and a finger; Al. Winters and Elijah Bostron were burned about the face and neck.

A TRAGIC INCIDENT.

A Minister and Child Devoured by Wolves—The Wife and [illegible] from Fright.

VIENNA, November 21.—A tragic incident is reported from eastern Hungary. A clergyman, with his wife and child, were driving in a sledge from Crasnisora to the neighboring village of Kis-Lonka, when a pack of ravenous wolves pursued them. The mother, terror-stricken, let the child fall from her arms. The father thereupon leaped from the sledge to save the child. The father and child were at once fiercely attacked by the wolves. The father fought desperately and killed two wolves, but was at last overcome, and both he and his child were devoured. Meanwhile the horses had rushed onward with the sledge, still bearing the agonized mother, and in her agony of terror she gave premature birth to a child which died. The terrible shock, with all she had suffered, proved too much for the poor woman, and when the sledge reached Kis-Lonka she, too, was dead. So the whole family perished inside an hour.

An Aged Pedestrian.

WASHINGTON, November 23.—Captain Robert W. Andrews, the ninety-three year old pedestrian who passed through Washington in May last on his way afoot from Sumter, S. C., to Boston, arrived in the city again yesterday on his homeward journey. He walked to Boston and thence took a pedestrian tour through Massachusetts and through New Hampshire and Maine, as far as Portland. He walked all the way back to the city, with the exception of about one hundred miles, where the roads were so bad that he was forced to take to the more usual modes of travel. During his trip he wore out six pairs of shoes. Captain Andrews retains full possession of his faculties. He averages twenty-two miles a day when on the tramp. Having spent a life of hard work as a carpenter and farmer, he is now giving himself up to the pleasures of life.

Reduction of the Surplus.

WASHINGTON, November 23.—There is every reason to believe that in his coming message, President Arthur will repeat the recommendation he made two years ago in favor of the repeal of all taxes on manufactured tobacco, cigars, cigarettes and snuff. Secretary McCulloch has frequently declared himself to be in favor of wiping out all these tobacco taxes, and it is confidently expected here that he will join the President in urging Congress to take this step. The total receipts from the internal taxes on tobacco, cigars, snuff and cigarettes amounted to a little over twenty-six million during the fiscal year of 1884.

Discovery of Beautiful Caverns.

KINGWOOD, W. VA., November 23.—A remarkable cavern has just been discovered on the Cheat River, near this place. A very small aperture leads to a series of chambers, the smallest of which is seventy-five feet long by forty broad and thirty high. The caverns have not all been explored, but are believed to be very extensive. The formation is rock crystal, exceedingly beautiful, and the explorers believe they will equal in grandeur the celebrated Luray caverns.

Declines a Senatorship.

ROCHESTER, N. Y., November 23.—The Democrat and Chronicle to-morrow will contain a letter to the editor from Whitelaw Reid, editor of the New York Tribune, positively declining to be a candidate for U. S. Senator.

Business Failures.

NEW YORK, November 21.—The business failures throughout the country the last seven days in the United States were 248; Canada 29; total 277. This is a striking increase as compared with last week, when the total was 236, and the previous week 214. The increase is mainly in the Western and Southern States.

Meeting of Congress.

WASHINGTON, November 21.—The next session of Congress will begin on Monday, December 1; but, after deducting the two weeks usually appropriated for the Christmas recess and the Sundays, there will remain only about seventy-five working days.

The Last Count.

ALBANY, N. Y., November 21.—The State Canvassers met at noon, all being present. Secretary Wood announced the footings of the tables as follows: The highest Democratic Elector, Priest, 563,154; highest Republican Elector, Carson, 562,005. Plurality, 1,149 Lowest Democratic Elector, Ottendorfer, 563,048; lowest Republican Elector, Harris, 561,972. Plurality, 1,077. Highest Prohibition Elector, Miller, 25,006; lowest, Ellsworth, 24,948. Highest Butler Elector, O'Donnell, 17,004; lowest, Campbell, 16,751. After the announcement the members of the board signed the tables and certificates.

Earthquake in New England.

CONCORD, N. H., November 23.—A slight shock of earthquake was felt at half-past twelve o'clock this morning, followed sixteen minutes later by a very heavy one, lasting several seconds, during which large buildings were shaken. The second shock was accompanied by a heavy rumbling noise sufficiently loud to awaken the people. Shocks were felt in various parts of the State.

THE OLD WORLD.

Chinese Reported Beaten in Several Small Engagements.

Cholera Almost Disappeared in Paris, but Increasing at Toledo, Spain.

PARIS, November 24.—Advices from Tonquin say that as reprisal for the attack made by the Chinese upon the French gunboats Claire and Tremer, on the 18th inst., on the Claire River, while they were victualing the garrison at Tu-Yen-Quen, General Briere De Lisle telegraphs that Col. Duchesne was sent to attack a force of Black Flags and Chinese regulars intrenched in fortified works near that place. The French forces captured the fortifications, the enemy fleeing. The French lost eight men killed and twenty-five wounded. The Chinese have evacuated the Song-Kan Valley. A later dispatch states that Colonel Duchesne next day stormed without loss three fortified villages, and destroyed or captured all the enemy's supplies. The enemy were in full retreat, taking refuge in the mountains and forests.

PARIS, November 24.—There were nineteen deaths from cholera in Paris yesterday. In twelve hours ended at noon to-day there were only three deaths. The publication of bulletins is abandoned. In the eighteen hours ended at 6 o'clock yesterday afternoon, there were fourteen deaths from cholera, all but five occurred in hospitals. From midnight Sunday to 6 this evening there have been six deaths in the city from cholera.

MADRID, November 24.—There were twenty-seven cases and seven deaths by cholera in Toledo yesterday. The authorities have established a military cordon. At Oran, Algeria, during the forty-eight hours ended this evening, there were eleven deaths from cholera.

BERLIN, November 24.—Max Hambargher, a merchant, doing business in New York, Paris and Berlin, yesterday visited his mother's grave and there took his own life.

Secretary McCulloch's Report.

WASHINGTON, November 24.—Secretary McCulloch finished his report to-day, and this evening the revised proof-sheets received his approval. In passages upon the tariff, silver coinage and National banking questions will be read to the Cabinet meeting to-morrow. With regard to the indebtedness of the Pacific Railroads he will advise an extension of time, on condition that the roads are allowed no further loop-holes by which they can escape paying the regular installments to be thus provided for. He has taken especial precautions to prevent the men who have had the printing in charge from betraying the contents. The work has been done in the Treasury Department printing office.

Dedication of the Washington Monument.

WASHINGTON, November 24.—The demonstration proposed for the dedication of the Washington Monument includes salutes from the war ships, to be stationed on the Potomac; a grand parade, in which the members of Congress, the various military organizations, both resident and visiting; the Masonic bodies, the fire department, and a large number of bodies in associate capacity will participate, all headed by the officers of the Monument Society, to whom it is expected the care of the structure will be relegated. These officers include by virtue of their official position the President of the United States, the Governors of all the States and the members of the Supreme Court.

"Becky" Jones' Case in Court.

NEW YORK, November 24.—Arguments were heard to-day by Judge Barrett, in the Supreme Court, in the case of "Becky Jones," the witness who refused to answer questions in the Hamersly will contest, and was sent to jail by the Surrogate, a few days ago. Ferdinand Ward, the financier, has interested himself in Becky and employed counsel to obtain her release. The Court intimated that it would deny the action, but took the papers. When "Becky" was committed to prison by the Surrogate she stated that she would remain in jail till "resurrection day" rather than disclose family secrets obtained in her capacity as household servant.

Selecting a Site for a National Foundry.

PITTSBURGH, November 24.—The Congressional Committee, inspecting the facilities for manufacturing steel for heavy guns and ship armor here, visited several steel works. The Common and Select Councils in a body called upon the committee at their hotel and placed before them Pittsburgh's natural advantages as a location for a National foundry. The committee expressed themselves as well pleased. To-night they are being entertained at the Duquesne Club, by business men, and to-morrow morning they leave for Johnstown and Harrisburg.

Saloon Destroyed and Proprietor Killed.

NEWARK, O., November 24.—The village of Blandensburg, fifteen miles northeast of this place, up to Saturday night contained a single saloon. A large concourse of the anti-liquor element proceeded to the saloon, and after stoning the place for some time gained admittance. Then one of the party threw a stone at the proprietor, a man named Chapin, the missile striking him on the head and fracturing his skull. All the liquor that could be found in the place was thrown into the street and burned. Physicians were summoned to the aid of the wounded man, but when they arrived he was dead.

Postal Clerk Arrested.

DETROIT, November 24.—Charles H. C. Rynd, of Adrian, son of the late Dr. Rynd, a prominent physician and politician of this State and son-in-law of Judge Comstock, of Kalamazoo, a Postal Clerk on the Michigan Central, was arrested to-day, at noon, by a Post-office Inspector, at Monroe, for stealing from the mails. He was brought here, and, in default of $2,000 bail, was sent to jail to await trial. He had been suspected, and decoy letters led to his arrest.

Policemen in the Role of Thieves.

NEWARK, N. J., November 24.—Policemen Grant and Devines have been committed to await trial on the charge of highway robbery and attempted shooting. While drunk on duty last night they attacked a man, robbed him and fired several shots at him while he was endeavoring to escape. Two other policemen who failed to arrest the guilty officers were suspended by the Mayor.

—A sharp trick was played upon a Lambertville citizen a few days ago. He gave a tramp a pair of old pantaloons and was surprised shortly afterward by the chap returning and giving him a five-dollar note, which he said he had found in one of the pockets. So pleased was the citizen with the tramp's honesty that he presented him with a silver dollar, but imagine his rage upon discovering shortly afterward that the bill was counterfeit.—*Trenton (N. J.) THE COMMONWEALTH.

LEE PRICE, of Shelby County, was killed by a runaway horse.

ISAAC WEDONOER was killed at St. Mathew's Station by a train.

THREE drunken men attempted to cross the Ohio River at Hickman's Landing, one mile above Warsaw, the other night. One of them capsized the skiff, and before assistance could reach them two of them, James Grimsley, aged nineteen, and George Logan, aged thirty-five, were drowned.

A KENTUCKY correspondent of the Scientific American recommends the curing of bacon by hanging it up, after salting, in a tobacco barn. He says this process makes a sweet and perfect cure, with no necessity for smoking, and leaves no taste of tobacco in the meat.

MRS. TABITHA DUNNING, who now lives with her daughter in Allen County, is one of the oldest persons in that entire community, being one hundred years of age. She lived in that county for seventy years moving to her present home about twelve years ago. She can remember as far back as the Revolutionary war times, and is still remarkably sprightly and active; never has used spectacles, and has good eye-sight yet.

BOWLING GREEN has a tobacco stemmery in full operation.

URIEL POWERS, seventy-six years old, fell dead near Crofton, Clinton County, a few days ago, while chopping wood.

W. B. KAVANAUGH, brother of the late Bishop Kavanaugh, and Mrs. Virginia Russell Stonestreet were married a few days since at Sulphur, Henry County. The groom is seventy-four years of age and the father of eleven sons. He has twenty-five grandchildren and one great-grandchild, and bids fair to live several years in the enjoyment of health and happiness.

MR. S. B. BOWMAN, son of Bishop Bowman, was married in Covington to Miss Mary Walden, daughter of Bishop Walden, all of the M. E. Church.

THE salary of the County Judge of Madison County has been increased a thousand dollars.

R. B. JAMIESON, of Auburn, Logan County, has invented a draw-head which obviates the necessity for a brakeman going between cars to couple or uncouple. A lever is used which can be manipulated from either the top or side of a car. Mr. Jamieson will endeavor to form a stock company in Bowling Green for the manufacture of these draw-heads.

A MISS BURK was visiting Mr. Frederick Ahrens' family, living out on the Taylorsville pike, thirteen miles from Louisville. While rummaging about an unused garret she discovered an old flint-lock pistol. She snapped the lock of the old relic several times, and as no explosion followed she took it for granted that it was not loaded. She afterwards took the weapon down stairs, and, confronting Mrs. Ahrens, playfully presented the muzzle at the lady's head and snapped the trigger. As Mrs. Ahrens is of a very nervous temperament, and is at present in a delicate condition, the shock produced by the unthinking girl's folly drove her into hysterics. Mr. Ahrens, coming at noon, asked for his wife, when Miss Burk, who was greatly shocked at the serious result of which she had been the unintentional cause, explained the matter, at the same time displaying the pistol. On his asking permission to examine the weapon she passed it to him. The weapon slipped from his grasp, however, and fell to the floor, when the concussion caused it to explode, burying a large ball in his right groin. A physician, who was hastily summoned, dressed his wounds and pronounced it not necessarily fatal, although dangerous in the extreme. By the advice of the physician Ahrens was taken to a neighbor's house and cared for, lest the shock to his wife on hearing of his wound would prove fatal.

A PROBABLY fatal affray took place at Lynn Camp, Eastern Kentucky, the other evening, in which Joe Minton, formerly of Williamsburg, was seriously wounded by N. R. Cummings, hotel-keeper at the camp. Minton was shot twice in the body, once in the head, and had his throat badly cut. Cause of the fight, an old feud.

SAMUEL J. TILDEN, a fine blooded trotter belonging to Joseph Wallace, living near Nicholasville, had his leg broken by the kick of a mule, and had to be killed.

AT Olympia, Capt. L. W. Snyder and Pat McGinnis fell out over a small account which the latter alleged the former owed him. McGinnis knocked Snyder down with his fist and was proceeding to use him up generally, but Snyder managed to get out his knife and stabbed his assailant several times in the breast, inflicting perhaps fatal wounds.

AS the Cincinnati lightning express train approached St. Mathew's Station, near Louisville, the other afternoon, the engineer discovered a man sitting on the end of a cross-tie at the side of the track. An effort was made to scare him away with the whistle, but he paid no attention to it, and was struck by the engine and hurled fifty feet through a plank fence into a field. Information of the affair was left at the station, and when the agent visited the scene a corpse and a basket of notions was all that was found to tell the story. Coroner Miller was notified and visited the place to hold an inquest. The man was evidently a peddler, and was apparently about fifty-five years old. He was a Hebrew, named Isaac Wedinger, and a dealer in notions, but nothing else concerning him was learned. The jury decided that his death was accidental, and that no blame could be attached to the engineer of the train.

DR. W. M. FUQUA, of Hopkinsville, the author of numerous papers on surgery and practical medicine, has been elected to the Chair of Anatomy in the Memphis Medical College.

Two oxen ran into the engine of a freight train at Rankin, Henderson County, a few days ago. The oxen were killed and several cars ditched, causing a delay to trains.

NEW corn is selling in Gallatin County at $2.50 a barrel.

SALLIE DYE is under arrest at Athertonville, Larue County, for child murder.

LEE PRICE, a Shelby County farmer, was thrown from his horse and had an arm broken.

THE Superior Court of Kentucky has affirmed the decision of the Kenton Circuit Court in the case of M. P. Smith against the City of Covington. Smith sued the city for superintending the work of building the jail, and the lower court decided in favor of the defendant.

MR. ED. MAGOFFIN'S tobacco barn, near Harrodsburg, burned; supposed to be incendiary. Loss above insurance $1,000.

BUSINESS is reported as picking up all over the State, and everybody is wearing a smile.

THE Coon Hollow distillery and warehouse, located near New Hope, Nelson County, with 1,491 barrels of whisky, burned the other night.

THE barn of Dr. France, near Bowling Green, with 15,000 pounds of tobacco, burned. The fire occurred while the Doctor was attending a Democratic rejoicing.

AT Mt. Sterling, the other day, William V. Potts had his hand crushed in the machinery of a planing mill, so that the thumb and index finger had to be amputated.

GLASSWARE.

An Interesting Account of the Manufacture of Different Kinds of Glass.

Bohemian glass is made with carbonate of potash, as pure and as rich as possible. Hydrate of potash of 54 to 56 degrees is the best for use. Potash used for glass making is extracted from the residuum of beet-root sugar making. In Bohemia a potash extracted from wood ashes comes from Hungary. America also furnishes a good article. All potash used in glass-making should especially be free from soda, as it tends to give glass a green color.

Soda has taken the place of potash to a great extent. It is used as a carbonate or sulphate. Carbonate is yet used in the manufacture of table ware, but in the making of plate and window glass, bottles, etc., the sulphate is almost entirely used, owing to its cheapness. By adding a small quantity of charcoal to sulphate of soda it is decomposed much more easily.

In the manufacture of flint glass lead is used in red oxide form, or sometimes a litharge, but the red oxide gives the best results. Red lead furnishes oxygen, which escapes in melting, and serves to refine the glass and burn the organic matters which may be contained in the mixture of materials. Red lead is prepared from the purest of leads coming from England and Spain, which are comparatively free from the oxides of iron, copper, etc. Lead is used in this country for glass making, by those manufacturers who make a superior quality of glass.

In the manufacture of plate, window or white glass, lime is used as a carbonate or slaked.

It is important that sands should be selected with care, as impure silica has the most detrimental effect upon the color of glass. This is especially important in the manufacture of fine tableware, plate, and window glass. All sands should be free from iron, as this is the fruitful source of the green coloration of all glasses. In Bohemia quartz is used instead of sand. It is first heated, then thrown into water; this breaks it into many pieces, which are subsequently reduced to fine powder by mechanical action in wooden mortars with quartz pestles. By this means the introduction of iron is avoided.

France and Belgium, for the manufacture of fine wares, uses the Fontainbleau sand, not far from Paris; also the sands of Nemours, Chantilly, and from the province of Champagne. These sands are used for flint, plate, and first quality of window glass.

English sands contain a considerable proportion of iron. Silex is sometimes used instead of sand for fine wares. For plate glass making sand from the Isle of Wight is used, but for the best qualities of glass the English manufacturer has to import sand from France and this country. Bottle manufacturers, on the contrary, seek sands containing iron and clay, on account of the elements they contain acting as a flux.

Silica is found in the shade of quartz, rock crystal, sand-stone, and quartz sand in the crystalline form; in silex or flint stone in the amorphous state. Silica is one of the most abundant natural substances; it is insoluble in water; and resists the action of most chemicals. Among the acids only one, hydrofluoric acid, is capable of decomposing it; this acid decomposes and dissolves glass entirely. Silica, although infusible at the highest temperature of furnaces, has nevertheless been fused by the use of the oxhydrogen blow pipe. Silica combines with all bases, alkalies, such as potash, soda, and with metals, lead, and bismuth. These give it the property to form vitreous compounds. Lime, magnesia, alumina, form with it infusible compounds; the latter, however, mixed with silicates of potash, soda, or lead, furnishes compounds which are suitable for the work of the glass-blower. It is glass proper. If two infusible silicates are mixed together, they nevertheless produce fusible glass. Fine plate glass has been made with a compound of sand, slaked lime, and carbonate of baryta. This glass, as fine as ever made, contains, on being analyzed: Silica 46.5, baryta 39.2, lime 14.3; total 100.

To produce a glass requiring as little fuel as possible, the glass-maker should introduce as many bases as possible in his mixture, such as potash, soda, lime, magnesia, alumina, oxide of iron, these, however, more particularly in bottle-glass, where color is not so much an object as cheapness. Per contra, in making pots the clay should be as free as possible from a mixture of bases. Simple silicates, such as silica and alumina, are preferable.—Glassware Reporter.

THE NEW ANÆSTHETIC.

Interesting Experiments With the Discovery in Albany.

Dr. C. S. Merrill, at his college clinic yesterday afternoon, after presenting to the students several patients which he had before treated or operated on, lectured briefly on the nature and effects of the hydrochlorate of cocoaine, and used it on some of the cases in the presence of the class. The doctor stated that the drug was prepared from the leaves of the cocoa plant, and had been used in the throat clinics of Vienna for about a year—the throat and larynx being brushed with it to produce anaesthesia of those parts for operative work, and that the first knowledge we had of its action as a local anaesthetic for the eye was from a paper by Dr. Kollar, of Vienna, read at the Heidelberg Congress of ophthalmologists on the 15th of September, and Dr. Koller had only discovered its peculiar properties two weeks before that meeting.

The doctor took a young lady who was to be operated on for a closure of the tear passage, and put eight drops of the cocoaine solution into the eye. Ten minutes later the eye was found to be so thoroughly anaesthetized that it could be grasped with forceps and pulled around without causing pain. He then did the operation without the person experiencing any pain, although the operation without an anaesthetic is exceedingly painful. In another case an old man over seventy years of age, who had long suffered from a severe inflammation of the deeper parts of the eye, was placed on the operating table and the cocoaine used as in the other case, but it did not produce entire insensibility of the parts, nor did it in another case where there was severe inflammation of the deeper tissues. The Doctor concluded from these two cases that were there was such severe inflammation more of the drug should be used and a longer time allowed for its effect to be produced. He stated that he had used it in normal eyes and sensation had been abolished in from ten to fifteen minutes, and returned in about thirty or forty minutes. By using it Dr. Merrill had been able to do an operation for a squint, to remove foreign bodies from the cornea, and, in case of an abscess in the middle ear, to lance the "drum membrane" without causing pain.

The drug is a rare one, and at present very expensive, what the Doctor used costing at the rate of $420 per ounce or $6,720 per pound. No doubt, as the demand for it increases it will be manufactured in larger quantities and become much cheaper. It is to be hoped that it will be produced in such quantities as to permit of experiments being made with it in other portions of the body, for we are justified in anticipating that it will render many of the general surgeon's operations painless.—Albany Argus.

OLD-TIME SURGERY.

When It Was Thought a Wonderful Thing to Shorten a Jaw.

A number of years ago there lived in Wheeling a certain Dr. Hullien, who became famous as a surgeon. Some of his operations were very brilliant and decidedly awe-inspiring among the common people. One case in particular was thought to be unparalleled at that time. A young lady belonging to one of the best families in Eastern Ohio was terribly disfigured by a protruding lower jaw. Hearing of Dr. Hullien's skill as a surgeon she prevailed upon her father to allow her to go to Wheeling and see if anything could be done to improve the shape of her face. She went alone, and nothing was heard of her for two weeks except that she arrived there safely.

One evening as the shades of night were gathering, a really handsome lady drove up to the gate in front of the farm house and asked if she could get lodging for the night. The well-to-do farmer said they did not keep a hotel; besides, they were expecting their daughter home at any time, so they could not keep her. She said she guessed she would stay anyhow, and hopped out of the buggy. The farmer thought she was an escaped lunatic, and was about to shut and lock the door in her face when the house dog came along and recognized the lady as his young mistress.

It was impossible to satisfy her parents and sisters of her identity, so remarkable was the change in her appearance. In her pocket she had two sections of jawbone, each containing three teeth, which explained how the change had been made. The operation is quite common now, but at that time it was rare. In this case there were three more teeth on either side of the lower jaw than usual, and as they grew they caused the jaw to project forward. At birth the lower jaw was but little longer than the upper one. The surgeon merely resected the jaw on both sides by cutting out a section on either side containing the extra teeth, cutting out one in front to make the jaw narrower and bringing the ends of the bones together. It was simple enough, but the country people laid awake of nights thinking and talking about it.

Another young lady who, when a mere child toddling around, had her neck badly scalded by pulling the coffee-pot off the breakfast-table, and afterward carried her head greatly to one side, went to see the doctor. Without so much as asking her consent he severed the contracted muscles; snipped a piece out of her shoulder, fitted it in, tied up the wound, and told her if she would hurry she would catch the next boat for home.—Pittsburgh Dispatch.

ST. SAVIOUR'S AT MOSCOW.

An Enormous Cathedral Which Cost More Than Twelve Millions of Dollars.

Twelve million dollars is a large sum to expend in building a single church, but the new cathedral of Moscow cost more than that sum. It has been nearly half a century in constructing, but the wonder is not that the time is so long, but rather that it has been so short. Very few of the famous cathedrals of the world have been erected and completed within the limits of a single life-time. Wars have interrupted the building, or funds have failed at times, in most such cases.

The great cathedral of St. Saviour's is erected as a memorial of the deliverance of Russia from Napoleon Bonaparte in 1812. Less than three months after the retreat of the French the Emperor Alexander I. issued a decree that the church should be built, and a few years later the foundations were laid.

Jobbery is the curse of all Russian Government-work, and after those who had this matter in hand had spent and squandered about $3,000,000, the church was abandoned, a new site selected, and the work was begun all over again.

The work of laying the foundations of the great structure was completed in July, 1838. It took twenty years to erect the building and cover it in, and the scaffolding was taken down in 1858. This scaffolding alone cost $200,000.

Since that time the interior has been nearly finished, and the cathedral will soon be consecrated. It is a wonderful structure, with five great gilded copper cupolas, surmounted by crosses, the central one of which stands three hundred and forty feet from the ground.

The whole building is faced with marble, and the interior is pronounced the most exquisite in its decoration in Europe. There are magnificent paintings, elegant windows, costly candelabra, and the floor and walls are inlaid with many varieties of marble in the best taste.

One hardly knows whether to be more astonished at the grandeur of the edifice or at its exceeding richness. For there is hardly anything in the world to equal the gorgeous splendor of the altar and its accompaniments: and yet one is startled to hear that the cathedral covers seventy-three thousand square feet and will accommodate comfortably in its central area—for it is in the form of a Greek cross—ten thousand worshippers.

The bells for this church cost seventy five thousand dollars; the largest weighs twenty-six tons, and the smallest only thirty pounds. There are a great many bells, as there always are in Russian churches.

Only by the resources of an Empire ruled as Russia is, by a single will, could such a church have been built within so short a time.—Youths' Companion.

THE TWO ASTORS.

Contrast Between the John of To-Day and the John of Yesterday.

The original John Jacob Astor may have had, at some time or another, a carriage, but I never heard that he did. It would have been contrary to the habit of his life to spend a dollar for personal comfort or ease, while a cent devoted to the procurement of any kind of luxury would have been a waste so grievous as to cause tears of bitter regret to flow down his brazen cheek. Now, mind you, the present John Jacob Astor is a very nice man. There is nothing special about him, one way or another, except his wealth. I don't mean to imply that he leads in any sense a shoddy life. On the contrary, his entire course is that of a plain, practical, methodical man of business, devoted to the accumulation of shekels, and much more interested in a phase of social prosperity which would warrant his raising the rents of his vast establishments five or ten per cent. than in any possible improvements in the condition of the race, or any great problem, financial or political. The contrast, nevertheless, between the John Jacob Astor of to-day and the John Jacob Astor who peddled knicknacks about Beaver, Wall, and William streets is so tremendous that no mere word-painting could presume to present its picture. The one lived in a hovel, the other in a palace. The one fed on crusts, the other on the best the market affords. The one was looked upon with suspicion, as a miserly old grub: the other is regarded as the great landlord of the day, intent, to be sure, upon making and saving money, everywhere respected as one who keeps his word and cares for the protection of his property. The one utterly unfamiliar with the inside of a comfortable dwelling, the other accustomed from his earliest days to social courtesies in what are called our best families. The one probably never saw a festive dance in all his life; the other is conspicuous for his attendance at the society balls and festive developments of the season. The one walked through the streets with a heavy pack upon his back; the other lumberly lolls along Broadway, conscious of his position and proud of his wealth, or else trundles down-town in a heavy family coach, drawn by the most respectable span of horses in the province. Oh, yes, it is a great change, a vast distinction, and very natural was the thought suggested by the appearance of the latter-day Astor.—Cor. Boston Herald.

A DOMESTIC ROW.

Dispute in a Printing-Office, in Which the Shears Were Not Even Mentioned.

One morning the Washington Hand-Press in a Printing Office suddenly flew its Frisket and called out in a loud voice:

"Hear ye! hear ye! But for me the Banner could not be issued each Week!"

"Just hear that! sneered a Case of Burgeois over by the Window. "Where would be the Paper but for its Type?"

"And they never Printed a Paper yet without ink," added the Roller in a Glue and Molasses voice.

"Well, I don't want to Appear Egotistical," observed a Bundle of White Paper lying on the floor, but if you knew how hard it was for the Editor to raise the Cash to buy me, you'd Imagine I was of some little Account Around here."

"Gentleman," added the Imposing Stone, in a marble voice. "I don't claim to own all the corner lots in Town, but if the Chases, Shooting-Stick, Mallet, Quoins and myself were to go on a Picnic I'd like to see the Banner go to press—I would!"

The Gordon Jobber, Box Stove and several of the Galleys were getting ready to chip in when the Editor entered and asked the cause of the Row. The matter was explained by the Card-Cutter in a Calm and Unbiased manner, and the Editor replied:

"Each and every one of you are valued in your Respective Places, and all combined go to help issue the Leading Newspaper of this county—circulation (when a circus agent comes along) 6,000 copies—Wood Received on Subscription, as Heretofore."

Salt Lake City and Mormonism.

To the Editors of the Recorder:

Salt Lake City is not, as many imagine, inhabited exclusively by Mormons, at least one-fourth of her 25,000 people being Gentiles—which term applies to all not members of the Mormon church. The officers of the Mormon church in order of their authority are as follows: President, first and second counsel, three presiding High Priests, twelve apostles, an indefinite number of Bishops and Elders and bodies of men in each ward termed the Seventies. The President exercises almost unlimited power over the church not only in Utah but everywhere. All revelation must come through him, and the actions of the Saints (?) from the greatest down to the least are governed by his unalterable commands. He is almost as infallible as the Pope of the Roman Catholic church. However, we were informed that since the death of Brigham Young his successor, John Taylor, does not inspire the same reverence and awe among his followers that characterized the regime of the most notorious Mormon of them all.

The President is assisted in his official duties by the first and second counsels who act in a capacity similar to that of our cabinet officers. At present Geo. Q. Cannon and Jos. F. Smith are respectively first and second counsel. The three presiding high Priests must oversee the workings of the Apostles, Bishops and Elders, but are required to do no preaching themselves. The Apostles are expected either to preach the gospel to all the world or to see that such is done by the Bishops and Elders. In each of the 21 religious wards into which the city is divided, is a body of 70 of the leading men who attend to matters of charity and education, preserve order and secure the systematic workings of the minuter portions of the church machinery.

The above is a very brief synopsis of the Mormon church government. The buildings will have cost on completion several millions of dollars, and will be used for the performances which are for the benefit of the dead and are performed for them by their relatives and friends still living.

To form an idea of the Tabernacle imagine a gigantic tortoise 233 feet in length, 133 feet broad and 70 feet in height. This building was designed and its construction superintended by Brigham Young about 1869. As already indicated it is elliptical in shape and has a seating capacity of 12,000. In case of fire or any emergency whatever, although every seat be occupied, the building may be emptied of its great mass of human beings in less than two minutes, from the arrangements of numerous doors along the sides. In one end of the Tabernacle is an organ, constructed by Mormon artisans at a cost of $100-000 and whose melodious tones every Sabbath afternoon in conjunction with a chorus of 100 voices render a musical treat unexcelled by any church choir in our land.

On the 2nd of last April Patti sang in the Mormon Tabernacle to a $6,000 house and answered to three encores during the evening from the fact that the acoustic properties of the building rendered her singing easier and more agreeable than any hall or opera house in which she had ever sung. We could distinctly hear the sound of a pin dropped into a silk hat by a gentleman standing in one end of the building while we were at the farther end. Likewise words uttered in a whisper could be heard with startling distinction after traversing the entire length of this colossal structure. So much for the Temple and Tabernacle.

Passing from these wonders down one of the business streets of the city, you behold a Mormon store with its sanctimonious sign which reads—"Holiness to the Lord;" and then you see on a large building across the way an eye beneath which you read "Zion's co-operative Mercantile Institution." Next you pass the Lion House and Bee Hive two adobe brick residences in which Brigham Young and families formerly resided. Just opposite these you look with envy upon an elegant three story stone residence, known as the Amelia Palace, which the man of many wives built for his favorite wife, Amelia. This building is now occupied by President John Taylor and his several wives. We had almost forgotten the grave of the great and revered dead, but on repairing thither imagine our disappointment to find no costly monument erected to his memory, nay not even a slab to mark the last resting place of him so highly honored in life. In a quiet secluded spot, in a portion of the city undisturbed by the hurry and bustle of business you may find the tomb that holds the ashes of this once powerful man. A space some three or four rods square, surrounded by an iron fence has in one corner a grave which you are informed is that of Brigham Young. The grave is covered by a large, rough rectangular stone about four feet in width by eight feet in length, which space is enclosed by a second iron fence. Near this grave is another at one end of which on a small rude board you read the name, "Mary Young." The lot in which these two graves are to be found exhibits a sad degree of neglect. Alas, how soon is greatnes forgotten! When we think of Brigham Young as having been the husband of fifteen wives, we are too apt to regard polygamy and Mormonism as synonymous terms. All Mormons are not polygamists; in reality very few, compared with the whole number practice that for which all are universally and severely condemned. This is one of the most surprising facts connected with their history, and one which does not seem to be universally known.

The absence of the police upon the streets of this remarkable city is another feature both new and strange to visitors. Notwithstanding the absence of these officers there is less disturbance and fewer instances of the laws being violated here than in any other city we have ever visited. The Gentiles tell us that the cause of this peacefulness and quietude may be traced back to an unseen, yet despotic, power which keeps the Mormons in utter subjection. Nevertheless the fact still remains undisputed that they are in the eye of the civil—excepting polygamists, a quiet peaceable, law-abiding people.

The virtuperative style in which the Gentiles and especially the Gentile press in Utah attack them and their religion, would not be endured by any people on earth with more meekness and forboarance.

One has only to visit Salt Lake City to rid his mind of many erroneous ideas with regard to the Mormons and their much detested religion. Before condemning them too severely, or putting to much credence in the newspaper history circulated concerning them, visit them in their stronghold and learn for yourself as does every other traveler through Utah, that outside of polygamy their religion embraces some beautiful and grand ideas; that they are not the lawless, despicable citizens that some would have you believe they are.

The idea entertained by some that Mormonism will so finally blotted out of existence, is wholly fanciful and not worth the breath expended in expressing it. Numbering to-day 200,000 people they will continue to increase and multiply both in numbers and strength while this remains a free government. Eradicate polygamy by educating the Mormons to that point where the practice will be held in contempt by them and we will have succeeded in conquering the evil spirit of Mormonism, and then may we admit Utah into the Union as a State without the least apprehension that purity (?) of our public institutions will be contaminated by Mormon politicians. It thinks the speech will loose much of its effect, having come from one sore over defeat.

EDUCATIONAL.

[Communications for this column must be addressed to Prof. T. H. Stephenson, Burlington, Kentucky.]

WHAT IS THE USE?

For about ten years past the teachers of Boone county and throughout the State, have been meeting yearly in their Institutes to discuss subjects relating to education and common schools. In these meetings great importance is attached, and much time devoted, to discussing the best methods of teaching various branches.

Education is not a question of methods. It matters little what method the incompetent teacher adopts, since failure is sure to be the result. The teacher who thoroughly understands what he proposes to teach, and earnestly endeavors to communicate a knowledge of it to others, will not be found wanting in methods. It is quite probable the teachers of England, two hundred years ago, in teaching some of the branches employed methods as successful as any employed by the teachers now. The want of success is not the fault of the method, but is to be sought in the ignorance of the subject of him who attempts to teach it. Take English Grammar for an instance. There are few teachers found without some pretentions to a knowledge of it; yet, it is astonishing to observe how few have any philosophical knowledge of it. Their acquaintance with it frequently extends only to a few barren technicalities, or a system of rules whose application they know nothing of The structure and philosophy of the language they know nothing about. Here is to be sought the cause of failure. No one can teach what he does not himself understand.

We frequently hear persons say: "Well I studied grammar when I went to school, but I never understood it." A pupil will sometimes say: "I don't want to study that grammar any longer; I know all it contains. I want to study a different book," as if all grammars do not teach the same. Such notions are generally the impartings of the teacher, and they are the most indubitable evidence of his ignorance of the subject. Then, why do so few understand the grammar of their language? The true answer is, because their teacher did not understand it, and mystified a subject so simple in itself that a ten-year old boy can understand it.

There is certainly a difference in methods. Some are better than others: but the competent teacher, desirous of instructing, will not fail in consequence of his method.

If our Boone County Institutes have been productive of any good, it has resulted from calling the teachers and people together, and directing thought to the subject of education and to the importance of it, rather than from any discussions that may have been held about the different methods of teaching the various branches. If the same time had been spent in rigid class exercises, or drill, like that of the school, in which their knowledge of the branches of study would have been tested, or their lack of it exposed, it would have been an efficient agency in stimulating improvement. There is a natural order and sequence of parts in every study. The teacher who finds this need not seek farther for a method. No one should confine himself slavishly to a text-book, but should be able to give any instruction necessary, to answer any question asked without reference to it. Even if the book were destroyed he should be able to make another like it, or fully as good.

W. A. PLEDGER, the colored Chairman of the Republican Executive Committee of Georgia, said in speaking of the attitude of the colored race with the coming Administration of Gov. Cleveland as President:

"I believe that his Administration will be characterized by such conservatism as will make it one of the most successful in the history of our Presidents. In this view I have with me many of the most prominent colored Republicans throughout the South. We made every effort to elect Mr. Blaine because he was the candidate of the Republican party, and the colored people have always voted with that party. Since his defeat our people have been more than gratified at the course of our white Democratic friends. Nothing but the kindest words have been spoken for us. We recognize the fact that the white Democrats of the South are those among whom our fortunes are cast. I can safely say in speaking for myself and 100,000 colored people of the South that if Gov. Cleveland's administration carries out only half of the promises which have been made before the next election the colored vote will be equally divided between the two parties. There is no reason why the colored vote should be solidly Republican. There is every reason why it may become largely Democratic in number. Among my friends are many of the most prominent Democrats of the State, and their kind expressions toward our race, when harshness might have been expected, assure me that among them are to be found true friends of the colored man. This silly sensation about the negroes being put back into slavery has, I am sorry to say, been spread among colored people. They now find that they have been imposed upon, and they have already become reconciled to the election of the Democratic ticket. It was first started as a mere joke, but was looked upon by the more fearful in a serious light. We believe that the administration of Gov. Cleveland will be a good one."

Pledger is the leader of the colored people in the State, and is the collector of Customs at Atlanta.

President Arthur has invited his successor to make the White House his home while preparing for the ceremonies of inauguration. And Mr. Cleveland says he wants no great and expensive inaugural ceremonies.

PARIS, in the course of its history, has been besieged ten times. The first time in 50 B. C., and the last in 1870. It was fortified until the time of Louis XIV., who razed the defences, as, in his day, the idea of a foreign army reaching the heart of France was laughed at. Napoleon I, did not fortify Paris, and the allies, in 1814, found only a few hastily-built redoubts in their way.

THE drink known as "gin sling" was invented by John Collins, a waiter at Limmer's Hotel, Conduit street, London. John was corrupted into gin, and Collins into slins, and thence slings. The old lines on the libation ran:

Corner of Conduit street, Hanover square;
My chief occupation is filling of brimmers
For all the young gentlemen frequenters there.

Limmer's had a long heyday, and only flickered out within a few years. Tips were so liberal that the waiters paid Mr. Collins high premiums for their places, and he accumulated a handsome competence.

IT does not exactly appear when the first use of tea was made. Tradition speaks of it as early as the third century. A legend relates that a pious hermit who, in his watching and prayers, had often been overtaken by sleep so that his eyelids closed, in holy wrath against the weakness of the flesh, cut them off and threw them on the ground. A god, in admiration of the piety displayed, caused a tea shrub to spring up from the spot, and decreed that ever after the shape of the leaf should be in the form of an eyelid bordered with fringy lashes, and that it should possess the virtue of hindering sleep. It was after the year 600 that the use of the tea became general in China, and about the year 810 that it was introduced into Japan. In 1614 it found its way to England.

A CONDENSED explanation in regard to the needle pointing northward and southward is as follows: The magnetic poles of the earth do not coincide with the geographical poles. The axis of rotation makes an angle of about 23 degrees with a line joint to the former. The northern magnetic pole is at present near the Arctic circle on the meridian of Omaha. Hence the needle does not everywhere point to the astronomical north, and is constantly variable within certain limits. At San Francisco it points about 17 degrees to the east of north, and at Calais, Me., as much to the west. At the northern magnetic pole a balanced needle points with its north end downward in a plumb line. At San Francisco it dips about 63 degrees, and at the southern magnetic pole to the south, and points directly down. The action of the earth upon the magnetic needle at its surface is of about the same force as that of a hard-steel magnet, forty inches long, strongly magnetized, at a distance of one foot. The foregoing is the accepted explanation of the fact that the needle points to the northward and southward. Of course no ultimate reason can be given for this natural effect any more than of any other observed fact in nature.

Vegetable Tramps.

One is tempted to say that the most human plants are the weeds. They are nature's makeshifts. Germs lie in the soil and resist the stimulating effect of the sun and the rain for years, and show no sign. Presently something whispers to them, "Arise, your chance has come; the coast is clear," and they are up and doing in a twinkling.

Weeds are the tramps of the vegetable world. They go east, west, north and south; they walk, they fly, they swim, they steal a ride; they travel by rail, by flood, by wind; they go under ground, across lots and by the highway.

But weeds have this nature: They are not easily discouraged; they never lose heart entirely; they die game. If they cannot have the best, they will take up with the poorest; if they cannot lord it over a corn hill, they will sit humbly at its foot and accept what comes. In all cases they make the most of their opportunities.

THE JOLLIFICATION.

The Democracy of Burlington and surrounding country had their jollification as advertised last Friday evening. The weather was all that could have been desired, and the town put on such a gay appearance that those who planned the illumination were astonished at what a creditable and pleasing picture the town presented when decorated with candles and Chinese lanterns.

With dark came the enthusiastic Democrats and the sidewalks were jammed with ladies and gentlemen for a considerable time before the procession formed at the Boone House, headed by a brass band from Covington, commenced a tour of the town. The procession once in motion, headed by deputy Sheriff W. T. German as chief marshal, the welkin was made ring with hurrahs for Cleveland and Hendricks, and the old citizens were vividly reminded of the days of Whigs and Democrats when it was nip and tuck between them in our county elections.

The display of fireworks which was exciting the admiration of everyone was brought to a very sudden and regretted conclusion by a stray spark of fire falling into the box containing the Roman candles and Skyrockets, and igniting them. This magazine was placed on a very high platform at the crossing of Washington and Jefferson Streets, and the premature explosion made things lively thereabout for a time, but fortunately no one was hurt.

The great failure of the occasion was that of Hon. John G. Carlisle to respond to the invitation to address the unterrified. He not only failed to respond but withheld a definite answer till late Thursday evening which robbed the committee of the time in which they could have secured the services of other distinguished and able gentlemen who would have been here had they been called upon a day sooner. H. P. Stephens desiring that speakers from abroad should address the people who assembled Friday evening, went to Lawrenceburg and saw Judge O. F. Roberts and Hon. H. D. McMullen, who promised faithfully to be here, but from some unexplained reason failed to make the connection.

Having waited a reasonable time for the latter gentleman, the teachings of the fable of the Lark and the Farmer were followed, and home talent was called to the front, and the ears of the large audience collected in the Court-house were charmed by Boone county eloquence for a couple of hours. H. P. Stephens, master of ceremonies, introduced Hon. N. S. Walton, who made a neat, brief speech. Then came J. Frank Grant, S. W. Tolin, Dr. Furnish, Dr. Blanton, D. M. Hewitt, H. J. Foster, Prof. Stephenson and H. P. Stephens. Nothing was said in any of the speeches which was calculated to irritate the feelings of the most sensitive Republican, several of which party were present and apparently enjoyed themselves equal to any of the "Dimercrats."

The large crowd took advantage of the occasion and gave vent, in good style, to the enthusiasm which had been generating for twenty-four years, and had Hon. John G. Carlisle been present the jollification would have been a stupendous success, but as it was the boys relieved themselves very satisfactorily, and will know better how to repeat in 1888.

NOTES.

No bonfire endangered the town.

The small boys were more than satisfied.

Some of the boys over-taxed their wind-pipes.

Quite a large number of ladies were in attendance.

Wm. Stamper, from Pleasant Hill, is a gallant torch bearer.

James Westbay smiled complacently on the jolly "Dimercrats" assembled.

Mrs. B. K. Sleet's artistic arrangements of lights in her windows made a beautiful show.

The old temple of justice makes a good appearance after night when thoroughly illuminated.

Several Republicans contributed to the jollification fund. That is the kind of spirit to manifest.

E. E. Foster planned and put in shape the large chandelier of Chinese lanterns at the crossing of Washington and Jefferson streets.

James Aylor, who lives away down in the classic precincts of Gunpowder, allowed his enthusiasm propel him thither. Sam and Tom Stephens, ditto.

A portion of the colored population enjoyed the music, and quite a number them engaged in cutting a pigeon wing on the sidewalk everytime the band played a tune.

Everything passed off very quietly till after nearly all the visitors had left town, when a mixture of "benzine" and enthusiasm raised a little breeze, but no job was set up for the Coroner.

Among the residences beautifully illuminated were H. P. Stephens', B. K. Sleet's, Mrs. Mary Green's, W. E. Piper's residence and business house, Jerry Blythe's, Dr. J. M. Grant's, S. Cowen's, F. Riddell and the Boone House.

The dramatic entertainment at this place by Joseph and R. B. Reed & Co., which will be given at an early date, will be introduced by a magnificent scene on the Sea shore followed by an overture consisting of comic songs, anecdotes, humorous sayings and select music to be rendered by different members of the troupe. A storm at sea, and explosion of the ship will be startling in the extreme, and many a sad heart will be produced by the loss of the noble captain, Dr. J. G. Furnish. Each evening Joseph Reed will personate various Dutch, Irish and Negro characters with songs. He will also personate three female characters, in one of which he will render that humorous song, "Why Don't the Men Propose?" to be followed by a representation of "The Gay Young Girl of the Period," with song. The hit of the eveving will be "The Dutch Girl," song and character, original with Mr. Joe Reed. Mr. R. B. Reed will recite pathetic and comic pieces, and will produce a comic play. The ladies and gentlemen of this company are doing all in their power to make the entertainment a success. Look out for the programme next week.

The jury to which the literary society submitted the whisky question last Saturday night, hung.

As a community we extend our sympathy to Dr. Furnish in his vain effort to recall his good deeds, and congratulate him that he is spared and trust his future will not copy fair his past.

Mrs. E. Meek and daughter, who have been the guests of Mrs. J. B. Frazier for several weeks, left last Thursday for Indiana, where they will visit relatives before returning to their home in Smithton, Mo.

While out riding Miss Jennie Tallaferro narrowly escaped being injured by her steed becoming refractory. Being an excellent horse-woman, however, she succeeded in coutroling him. Beware of gallant gray "chargers."

Florence.

The jollifications are over, that is the torch-light, sky-rocket and tar-barrel hurrah for Cleveland and Hendricks demonstrations, and the people are settling down to business. Of course there are occasional hurrahs from some apple or potato hauler as he nears a saloon on his way to market to wake them up, or on his return to let them know he is back again, and as good a Democrat as ever. The Republicans have assumed the smiling attitude up here, but it seems to me to be an uphill business, but it is all right and will come natural in a short time, that is when there is an even divide of the offices.

Some of our population went over to Burlington to witness the big jubilee Friday night. They gave a glowing account of the enthusiastic demonstration—of a dense crowd—the brilliant fireworks—the electrifying strains from the brass band, and the feast of eloquence from a host of speakers, such as has rarely been enjoyed since the days of Patrick Henry.

With all the excitement of the country of pleasure and business, we find the death messenger unceasingly at work, and our neighborhood has just been visited by his withering touch. On the morning of the 18th inst. the wife of Thomas Dixon, Esq., just above Florence, died after a few days intense suffering. Deceased was about sixty years of age, was reared in Livingston county, where she married, being the second wife of Mr. Dixon. She was a good woman, being a member of the Baptist church, and beloved by the community in which she moved. The funeral services were conducted at the Baptist church by Elder Stephens assisted by a Lutheran minister, after which the remains were placed in the vault in the Hopeful cemetery.

But the young die as well as the aged, and on the same morning, the 18th, as the clock on the mantle had noted two, the bright spirit of little Sherley, only child of John and Gertrude Aylor, and grand-son of L. C. Yager, crossed the River and entered the Golden City through the gates of pearl. Deceased was a sweet little boy of 2½ years; was the idol of his parents and the pet of the immediate connections. 'Tis said that death loves a shining mark, and it seems to have been verified in this instance. The disease was inflammation of the brain, and baffled the skill of three physicians. It will be a consolation to the parents to know that although they are left alone, that little Sherley is in the company of all the Angelic Spirits that have gone before, and is, no doubt, now at the Beautiful Gate waiting and watching for them.

Petersburg.

SOME ELECTION RETURNS.—The terrific struggle for the control of this great relict of George Washington for the next four years, has at last been settled to the satisfaction of a few parties, at least, and as the reigning passion at present seems to be a canvass of the returns, your correspondent has taken the trouble to collect a few which are hereby forwarded. The late dire contest has terminated in a grand and glorious victory for the people over organized fraud and corruption; a triumph of light and intelligence over the darkness and misrule which have clung like a stifling mantle over this glorious land of ours, for the past twenty-four years. I learn this from a couple of ratification speeches I heard the other night. Also, the aforesaid is an abominable lie. This I gleam from the commonsense-Garroter, our estemed Cincinnati contemporary. Although there may appear to be a slight confliction in the above reports they are both undoubtedly true; for they are Associated Press dispatches and cannot lie. At the beginning of this conflict my hopes were all with Blaine. There was about that commanding figure that towered giant-like above his competitors at the Chicago convention, that made one his adherent, "ere he was aware." It may have been the thrilling intensity of that flashing eye; it may have been that lofty brow, whose veriest wrinkles seemed to mark the ebb and flow of the mighty tides of thought within—but with me I think it was that sensitive mouth whose quivering lips could seem to mirror forth his dauntless spirit in their delicate lines—and lie, and lie. Yes I loved thee, Jimmy, and fain would I have clung to the even as the Tribune or Whitelaw Ried, but then thy partners mustache! Alas! it was too much for my aesthetic soul, and beneath its darksome shadow my passion pined away and died. And thus it was that events and a mustache over which I had no control threw my wayward course into the calm, still river in which it has so steadily moved onward through this terrible campaign. I know not why I first espoused thy cause my Belva. My heart must ever thank an unknown guide for the fount of blessing to which it was led, for ah! it was a hopless wanderer until—

You came as the star of the eve when at night,
Its glimmer first breaks through the shadowy gloam,
And softly dispels with its glimmering light.
The mantle that darkens the heavens bright dome.

The spirit that longs for intrinsical worth,
'Tis Blaine must discover its idol in thee;
Though hid in the uttermost parts of the earth,
To reach thy fair presence 'twould Cleveland and sea.

The tide of devotion swells up from my heart,
No Lockwood confine it or turn it away,
For Belvadere Belva it ever must start,
As long as thy magical reign holds its sway.

Now, Mr. Editor, I will stop, for I see I am becoming dangerous. In fact, I came very near making that last line read: "For Butler or worse till my soul wastes away," and then I know that Boone county would rise up to kick me as one man. So no more at present,

From yours, PETE.

We won the Presidency and the Republicans' money. Misfortune never come singly.

Robert Terrill, uncle of G. W. Terrill, died very suddenly one day last week. He was very old.

If Blaine was not elected president, he will have lots of money when he gets that $50,000 from the Indianapolis Sentinel.

G. C. Gibbs and family left Tuesday via the O. & M. road for Wyandotte Co. Kansas. We regret to lose them from our midst.

Rev. Eusebus Kirtley will commence a protracted meeting at the Woolper School-house next Thursday night, so we are informed.

The Woolper pike has been repaired in some places, there being about two bushels of gravel, near the Ashbyfork bridge and it not spread.

The shooting club of this place will give a big shooting match on the old meeting ground near here during the holidays. No day set as yet.

One of the most enjoyable dances of the season was at the residence of W. C. Hensley, last Friday night. Will Stephens was the beau of the evening and played the agreeable to the ladies in a style in which he is capable of doing. There were so many belles present that it is not worth while to mention the most favored ones.

During the sale at G. C. Gibb's last Saturday evening, a strange man brought a new side saddle there, tied up in a coffee sack, and offered to sell it for any amount that he could get, but finding no buyer he went away and left the saddle, and up to this time has not returned for it. It is worth about $12. The supposition is that the fellow stole the saddle. Anyone having lost such an article can have the same by calling on Wm. Hensley, sr.

William Hedges left for Kansas yesterday.

Joe Souther is in the picture business, and is irrepressible.

Sam Crutcher is again swinging the hammer for George Baker.

The short corn crop is about all gathered and fed in this locality.

Eli Rouse & Co. have gathered about all the fat hogs around here that were for sale.

Frank Russell sold four or five car loads of fine walnut lumber to a Cinnati firm the other day.

Eph Utz seems to apprehend that his donation through a friend for the rally did not make the necessary connection. Mr. Collector, report.

E. E. Rouse and George Knap have equipped themselves with two good teams of mules with which to cultivate Kansas soil, for which State they left yesterday.

While Elder Stephens was preaching a funeral sermon in the school-house here Sunday, Prof. Cole's alarm-clock created quite a confusion in the congregation by firing itself off in the midst of the discourse.

The rally was hard on John Aylor, Joe Souther and others. They yelled so loud that it fractured their throats. We would no be surprised though if the moving from this neighborhood of certain parties does not aggravate the wounds.

DOMESTIC ANIMALS.

Directions for Their Management—An Excellent Series of Rules.

1. Every one intending to keep animals should first learn what is requisite for the health and happiness of each, and, if unable to provide it a suitable home, a sufficient and punctual supply of wholesome food, and opportunities of healthy recreation, should at once decide not to keep it.

2. Animals should be used very gently, though firmly. We should remember that seeming obstinacy may arise from pain, fear, or irritation of which we do not perceive the cause, but which may be soothed by quiet patience.

3. Frequent kind and cheerful notice is essential to the well-being of all animals in captivity. It is selfish and cruel to imprison, and so deprive them of variety, exercise, and the society of their own kind, and give no compensation, such as gentle talk, caressing, and amusement, whenever it is possible. If this is too much trouble, it is better not to keep them at all.

4. All animals are the better for having a proper and comfortable bed, or roost, or a quiet, shady nook to sleep in; and their rest should be undisturbed. Do not wake them up to gratify curiosity, or to clean their dwellings at unseasonable hours.

5. Be careful to remove any cause of fear; this is only just to creatures whom we have deprived of the freedom to escape from distress.

6. Avoid all harness which interferes with the free, natural action of animals.

7. The dwellings of animals should, whenever it is possible, have a southerly or westerly aspect, as exposure to north or east wind is very fatal to them. But while their position should be sunny, they should always have access to shelter and shade when they desire it.

8. Sheds, cages, etc., should always be well-drained and freely lighted and ventilated, but never draughty.

9. It is absolutely necessary for health and comfort that in every case the dwelling, yard, cage and bed should be kept thoroughly clean, to destroy vermin, prevent smell, and also the retention of stale, and therefore unwholesome, food. This should be done early in the morning, to avoid hindrance and interruption, and because it is better for the animals to have fresh food and water than that which has been kept in a close dwelling all night. Feed nocturnal animals at sunset.

10. When pebbles are required for the bottom of tanks, cages, etc., smooth ones should be procured; they should be sifted fine, and thoroughly washed before use.

11. Except in small cages, branches or sprigs of dead trees are better for perches than straight bars of wood; because the varying size of the stem brings all the muscles of the foot or claw into action. Where horizontal perches are necessary, they should have flattened sides and beveled edges; a bird will then secure a firm grasp, and be less liable to fall forward when asleep than if they were circular.

12. Placing the food in vessels, rather than scattering it loose, keeps it clean and prevents waste.

13. All vessels used for food or water should be washed daily, and wiped dry before refilling; otherwise food may turn sour, or the sediment from water will accumulate and render the fresh supply unwholesome. Iron troughs or plates, lined with porcelain, are the best, being clean, cheap and durable.

14. All food should be fresh and of good quality. Where the times of feeding are not regulated by practice, nor specified in detail by manuals, food should be kept always within reach, but every day what is left and stale should be carefully removed, and fresh supplies offered. Milk especially should be quite fresh, and always boiled before use.

15. As a rule, give as much solid food daily as the animal will habitually eat up clean; green stuff, etc., may be given in addition. The food should be varied, and resemble as much as possible that which the creature would select in its natural state.

16. Every animal should have a constant supply of pure water for drinking. Water is now kept constantly in enameled mangers close to the heads of horses in good stables.

17. Water for bathing should be furnished daily for animals requiring baths, in a separate vessel, adapted to the form and convenience of the creature using it. Frequent washing is a great delight to many animals, and a useful preventive of vermin.

18. Take pains to ascertain the fitting temperature for each animal. Much suffering is caused by thoughtless persons, who are ignorant of the degree of heat or cold which animals are by nature or habit able to endure.

19. When an animal is sick, secure for it a shady, quiet and unmolested retreat; and take care that its treatment at such time is kindly and gentle. This will ensure an abundant return of your patient's gratitude. See also, besides usual food, it has that which it can eat, and is most welcome to it.

20. When an animal must die, always secure the services of a humane and experienced person to destroy in the quickest and least painful way; and be sure that it is surely dead before it is removed. If drowned, the animal should be left in the water at least an hour. Nothing can excuse the brutality of those who, to save the trouble or expense involved in this, suffer animals, for whose welfare they are responsible, to be "strayed," that is, starved, or left behind alone on change of residence, to endure protracted misery, or to burden and distress their more sensitive neighbors.

21. Never fail to bury dead animals at once; this is necessary for the health of the living. The casting of dead dogs, cats, kittens or rats on to dust heaps or public thoroughfares is a disgusting practice; it outrages the feeling of all decent people, and is a disgrace to those who practice or permit it.—Band of Mercy Almanac, London.

DRAINAGE.

How It Benefits the Health of Man and Beast—An Important Matter.

The more easily seen benefits arising from thorough drainage of the soil have often been described, and the importance of tiling, for the purpose of increasing the profits arising from farming, is becoming widely recognized. As a means for preventing sickness drainage has received some notice from practical farmers, but its usefulness in this direction is by no means as generally understood and appreciated as it should be by dwellers in country or in city. Until enthusiastic microscopists began prying into the hidden mysteries of Nature, little was known of the causes that make undrained swamps and stagnant pools injurious to health. The microscope has revealed the reason. The warm, stagnant waters are the prolific breeding-place of countless multitudes of minute organisms that, floating in the air, find their way into the animal system to disturb the natural functions, and not infrequently cause lingering sickness and death.

As long ago as 1862 and 1863 an elaborate series of investigations was made by James H. Salisbury, M. D., to determine the causes of malaria. The experiments, observations, and deductions made were described by Dr. Salisbury in a prize essay before the Albany Medical College, and afterward published in the American Journal of Medical Science in 1866. The opening sentence of this essay says: "It has been observed from remote times that the exhalations from drying marshes and the dessicating beds of ponds, pools and streams have a noxious influence." Abundant evidence, fully supported by that of later observers, showed that malarial disease, especially ague, were caused by minute vegetable growths.

In the conclusion of his essay, Dr. Salisbury said: "As the malarial portions of the country become lower, and the low, humid, rich grounds become drained and cultivated, ague districts will become more and more circumscribed and intermittents proportionally decrease; as long, however, as there remains in such localities pools, ponds, ditches, streams, the beds of which are liable to become more or less dry during the warm summer months, intermittents may be expected to a certain extent to prevail. These sources of the disease, however, may be much lessened by turning the open ditches into blind ones, draining pools, swamps and ponds, and subjecting the soil of their beds to repeated cultivation. By this process intermittents, which now extensively prevail over a large portion of our richest districts, may be so circumscribed in their limits as to be no longer a dreaded accompaniment to the most fertile agricultural sections of our country."

In his "History of Animal Plagues" Fleming says: "Our earliest researches begin with the land of Egypt as the inevitable birthplace of plagues afflicting the inferior creatures, no less than man." . . . "The lower country is annually exposed to far-spreading inundations by the flooding of the Nile, and the retiring sea leaves behind it a reeking morass, which, owing to the nature of the deposit left behind, together with the large amount of moisture and the hot sun shedding its rays direct upon it, shortly after becomes a beautifully green plain, covered with the rankest and most luxuriant vegetation and pools of stagnant, corrupted water." Add to the above description that the rich low-lands are shaded by heavy growths of forest, protecting from quick evaporation the reeking pools beneath, and the description would answer admirably for thousands of miles of land along the Mississippi, the Ohio, the Missouri, and their tributaries. It is in these rotting swamps and steaming "bottoms" that swine-plague, hog-cholera, or whatever name it may be called by, had its origin, and from which it has spread in the last decade westward to the Rockies and eastward to the Atlantic, and has even been carried to England. In such regions as these "milk sickness" has attacked human beings, cattle, dogs, swine, and other animals. In the last-named ailment the cause has been clearly and often traced to the use of water from stagnant pools, sweltering under summer heat almost tropical in intensity.

Many circumstances serve to strengthen the belief that the so-called hog-cholera which has cost the farmers of the States west of Ohio many millions of dollars may be traced to a starting-point in impure water, the breeding place of vast myriads of bacilli which, finding their way to the system of the hog and there multiplying enormously, dammed the veins and arteries and stopped the circulation of the blood. In very wet seasons the heavy and frequent rains wash out the ponds and swamps and keep the streams full of swiftly-flowing water, too cold to favor the growth of bacteria. In 1879 an investigator said, in describing a very fatal outbreak of so-called hog-cholera in Illinois, that the winter was very cold and therefore unfavorable to the development of bacilli, but soon after the sows farrowed in the spring a great number of young pigs died of cholera. As soon, however, as the heavy spring rains set in the disease ceased to make much progress, so that from May until August few new cases and few deaths occurred. The pouring rains washed away most of the germs into the streams, and the current carried them off. In short, the animals had pure water to drink.

The summers of 1882 and 1883 were unfavorable to the growth of germs of malaria, that of 1883 having been remarkably wet and cold. So completely did swine-plague disappear that the Department of Agriculture at Washington requested, through the public press, that any person knowing of the existence of the malady would inform the department of the location of the animals affected. The former ravages of the scourge were by some so completely forgotten that some newspapers declared that the tremendous losses incurred by farmers in the West a few years before were chiefly in the imaginations of the scientists. A single warm and comparatively dry season has this year sufficed to quicken into new life germs of the distemper, which has appeared over a wider area than it has ever before been known to cover. Doubtless like causes will produce similar effects, until farmers shall realize that exemption from this extremely contagious, infectious and fatal disease is one of the most important of the many benefits to be derived from the universal carrying out of a wise system of drainage.—Chicago Tribune.

SPRINGS.

How They Should Be Treated to Secure All Their Benefits.

An adequate supply of water conveniently located is of great importance in the country, where a great quantity is necessarily used.

A natural, never-failing-water supply should be utilized whenever it is possible. This can often be done in undulating sections, where a spring is situated higher than the point at which it is to be delivered; and no matter whether it be conveyed in wood, iron or lead pipe, always place the pipe below the action of frost. See also that the inlet pipe is below frost, easy of access and provided with a wire or perforated tin strainer, and place the outlet or discharge pipe where it can be readily protected from freezing by a covering of straw, and uncovered when all danger of frost is over. If by laying a pipe a quarter of a mile from the spring to the house or barn you can obtain a sufficient supply of good water, do not fail to do it, for often the expense of digging a well will be quite as much.

By all means satisfy yourself that the supply of water is continuous, and that the flow is full alike in mid-summer and in winter. Also first determine the amount of flow by sinking a barrel or hogshead at the fountain-head, for instances frequently occur both of an increase and a decrease over the usual visible surface overflow. Decide this very important point, therefore, before much expense is incurred. If the dwelling is situated higher than the barn, pass the pipe to the dwelling first, letting the overflow, if a tank be used there, pass on to the barn, or extend the same pipe to that point, regulating the supply of both places by means of a stop-cock.—*L. THANKSGIVING.

An Honored National Festival Indigenous to American Soil.

Thanksgiving Day is indigenous to American soil. It first struck its roots into social New England, and now, after more than two and a half centuries growth has spread its branches, like the Banyan tree, until it covers the entire Nation. Though a National rather than a sectional one, as it formerly was, it is nevertheless a strictly family festival, in which so far all public demonstrations pay a subordinate and really invisible part. The steady nationalization of what still remains a family affair is something distinct in a people's history.

This honored festival comes after the summer has long been past and gone, and the harvest is all gathered and gleaned. Therefore it excites suggestions of rest and plenty together. Therefore it is a festival full of the spirit of tranquility and content, and it invites the reunion of families at the hearth of home, the restoration of old and dear conditions, the revival of associations that have lain slumbering in the heart. On no day or occasion during the whole year do old and young meet as on Thanksgiving Day around the same board. An entire land, sprinkled thickly over with such family scenes, is one to invoke for itself the most benignant of the smiles of Heaven. It can never be a spectacle of indifference even to those who hear and read of it from across a wide ocean. Our country is thus favored above other countries. It gives thanks on this day after the example of each one of its separate families. And it may be truly said of such a Nation that it is blessed, since God is its acknowledged Lord. Thus is the family exalted in this day as the unit and integer of the State. Thus is it respected by all of us, from the least unto the greatest, as no other of all our institutions is respected, because it is the real author, founder and sustainer of them all.

It would naturally be thought most proper to leave such a festival day to work its own influence and tell its own story; but that which is dearest and best loved by us always waits for the fond comment it invites, and is all the more lastingly imbedded in our affections for being duly set forth in fit term and phrase. We all have to exchange sentiments over that which brings us new stores of happiness. But we can not let the occasion pass without briefly emphasizing the lesson it contains in favor of keeping alive the simple and sincere domestic sentiments which spring from it as out of a prolific soil. We need, all of us, in this age of haste and hollowness, to go back in our thoughts to the pleasing contemplation of what was pure and sweet and enduring in the past. Not to be rooted in that soil is to be a comparatively worthless plant. In this human life of ours Home is the nursery of all the affections and the virtues. There is nothing worth the quest that does not begin and end here. And Thanksgiving is the festival that may truly be termed the apotheosis of Home. The open hearth, the bountifully spread table, the widening circle of generations, the light of the smiles and the joy of the good cheer, all make it a festival sacred to the life of the Family to the last days of our posterity.—Massachusetts Ploughman.

ZERO.

The History of the Well-Known Mark On the Common Thermometer.

Zero on the common thermometer, like the fanciful names of the constellations, is an instance of the way wise men's errors are made immortal by becoming popular. Zero comes to us through Spanish from the Arabic, and means empty, hence nothing. In an expression like "90 degrees Fahr., the abbreviation Fahr. stands for Fahrenheit, a Prussian merchant, of Dantzic, on the shores of the Baltic Sea. His full name was Gabriel Daniel Fahrenheit. From a boy he was a close observer of nature, and when only nineteen years of age: in the remarkably cold winter of 1709, he experimented by putting snow and salt together, and noticed that it produced a degree of cold equal to the coldest day of that year. As that day was the coldest the oldest inhabitant could remember, Gabriel was more struck with the coincidence of his little scientific discovery, and hastily concluded he had discovered the lowest degree of temperature known to the world, either natural or scientific. He called that degree zero, and constructed a thermometer, or rude weather-glass, with a scale graduated up from the zero to the boiling point, which he numbered 212, and the freezing point thirty-two, because as he thought, mercury contracted the thirty-second of its volume on being cooled down from the temperature of freezing water to zero, and expanded the one hundred and eightieth on being heated from the freezing to the boiling point.

Time showed that this arrangement, instead of being truly scientific, was as arbitrary as the division of the Bible into verses and chapters, and that these two points no more represented the real extremes of temperature than "from Dan to Beersheba" expessed the exact extremes of Palestine, But Fahrenheit's thermometer had been widely adopted with its own inconvenient scale, and none thought of any better until his name became an authority, for Fahrenheit finally abandoned trade and gave himself up to science. This habit made people cling to the established scale, as habit makes the English cling to the old system of cumbrous, fractional money. Our nation began to use Fahrenheit's thermometer about the middle of the last century, or not far from the time when old style was exchanged for the new style in the writing of dates.

The three countries which use Fahrenheit are Holland, England and America; Russia and Germany use Reaumer's thermometer, in which the boiling point is 180 degrees above freezing point. France uses the Centigrade thermometer, so marked because it calls the boiling point 100 degrees from freezing point. On many accounts the Centigrade system is the best, and the triumph of convenience will be attained when zero is made the freezing point, and when the boiling point is made 100 or 1,000 degrees from it, and all the subdivisions are fixed decimally. If Fahrenheit had done this at first, or if he had made it one of his many improvements after the public adopted his error, the luck of opportunity, which was really his, would have secured to his invention the patronage of the world.—Our Young People.

—The assertion is made by a Pittsburgh man that in fifty years, perhaps in twenty-five, coal will not be carried from the mines to its places of destination in bulk, but only its actual heat energy transported, and that by wire. This process, he says, can be accomplished by converting the coal into heat, the heat into motion, and the motion into electricity. A storage battery at Cincinnati would take it up as generated at the mines. From the battery it could be taken out and converted back into motion and heat, or changed into light.—Pittsburgh Post.

—The well of A. A. Sherman, at Coeymans, N. Y., on the Hudson River, contained but a scanty supply of water previous to the recent earthquake, but since then the supply has been abundant.—Kingston Freeman.

FATTENING PIGS.

Clear Feed of Dry Corn Will Not Produce the Healthiest Pork.

This work should not be delayed too long. In fact the pigs should be kept on a gradual gain all through the season. Fattening does not mean taking out of the pasture and shutting up in a close, hot pen. Some men have an idea that a pig can not be fattened in any other way, but this stand has been proven untenable time and again. There is no way in which pork can be so quickly and cheaply produced as upon a partially green diet, which the animals gain through the wholesome exercise of picking from the pastures. To be sure they need a good portion of more solid food of some kind. Corn, probably, is the most available for this purpose, although it is not an economical food if given in the ear. Animals that are upon grass should have their feed ground or cooked, or a large portion of it will pass through them undigested. The healthiest pork can not be obtained from a clear feed of dry corn. The digestive organs of the animals so fed are sure to get out of order upon so heating a food, and thus the whole system becomes tainted and impure. A partial diet of green food, and the exercise of getting it from the pasture, will keep the animal in good thrifty condition. Rotten vegetables and foul slops may be eaten by hogs that have never known any other food, but that is no sign that it is better for them than clean, wholesome food, as many attempt to argue. Above all things, we should get out of the notion that clear, dry corn is the only food that will fatten hogs, and make good meat. It is very handy to toss over a few bushels of ears two or three times a day, but it is certainly a very expensive food, and so heating in its nature that it should never form the sole diet of any animal. We would not dare feed our horses or cows with such food, but we have fallen into the habit of feeding our hogs in this way, without reasoning the matter or doubting the efficiency or the method in the least.—Indiana Farmer.

OBJECTED TO THOROUGHBREDS

An Ohio Man Who Thoughts Ordinary Cattle Were Quite Good Enough for Him.

"What's the use of turnin' things upside down an' your pockets inside out over any thoroughbred or extraordinarily gifted stock? What d' ye want in this part o' country with a cow, for instance, as 'll give a washtub full o' milk several times a day? No farmin' man can, or will, live on milk alone; an' after you've used all the butter for the table an' hair-oil purposes you can, you'll have some left on your hands, an' you can't compete with oleomargarine that has no hair. For every extra pint a thoroughbred gives she consumes so much more feed than yer common ole muley 'll keep fat on, an' give enough milk of a mild blue cloyin' tendency, too. Feed 's worth more to us farmers than milk, lots more. Thaint no successful artificial hay an' corn in market that I've run agin.

"Now, there's my neighbor, J. De Smith, he's been improvin' an' improvin' his strain of cattle till the poor man's actually got nothin' left in the world but that one thoroughbred short-horn. He put in most of his time this summer, almost day an' night, on that short-horn, gittin' him ready for the fair.

"On the road to the fair the short-horn, with his cavortin' an' pawin' round in a red blanket, scared three old farm teams till they ran off with several of the best families in the county. The first day of the fair he kicked a well-known young sprig from Washington Township in the pit of the stomach hard enough to pulverize his watch crystal, who, on recovering sufficient wind, immediately set about diligently spreadin' the report that them kind of cattle wouldn't do at all for this climate. In the grand parade of premium stock he took a two-dollar prize, on the last day he run a horn through the most vulnerable part of the President's pants, terrifyin' him an' gainin' his instant an' influential disapproval.

"'Fore De Smith got home his natural arms was most wrenched off, an' entirely so the arms of his best coat, a holdin' that brute, an' several individuals had thrillingly narrow escapes from abruptly violent ends.

"Now where's the pay in collateral, fun or premiums for sich? I tell ye it don't pay. Give me ordinary cattle an' more of the comforts an' emoluments of farmin' an' more rest, an' I'll be calmly satisfied to forego the pomp an' circumstance of a red card at the fair."—Cincinnati Commercial Gazette.

LADIES DRESSES.

Novelties in Black Wool, Black Poplin and Other Materials.

The novelty in black wool dresses for the street is the use of rough bison cloth trimmed with black yak (worsted) lace, and these are made suitable for young ladies by adding a vest of red satin or of poppy red velvet pinked in rows of scalops, with also straight wristbands of red velvet, and a sailor tie of red satin to fasten the deep fichu-cellar of yak lace. At the foot of the skirt there may be a box-pleating of black velvet lined with red satin, otherwise the stylish dress is of the rough wool laid plainly over a foundation skirt, with apron drapery edged with lace, and the postilion of simple shape has the red vest, etc., just described. The yak piece lace is also used for drapery, and for puffed cuffs that resemble under-sleeves.

Black poplin with red or golden brown satin stripes is used for street dresses. The stripes are pleated with the color underneath for the skirt, and the vest is formed of such stripes. Another fancy is the used of red or gold or mixed metal braids in bayadere stripes across the front and sides of black poplin or cloth dresses. These braids are repeated on the vest, which may be used in a basque or in a polonaise. The polonaises of black cloth dresses are of very long and simple shapes, sloping away on the sides to show the skirt beneath, and draped very fully behind, yet very simply, as in some cases two loops and two buttons do the entire draping. Black Astrakhan borders, either of the genuine fur or the cloth imitation, are much used on these black wool dresses, and are sometimes in conjunction with silver braid. More elegant visiting and carriage dresses are made of the black heavily repped yet soft silks that resemble Irish poplin, and are called either Victorieuse silks or else Bengaline. This silk forms the basque and the bouffant over-skirt, with a lower skirt of plain or figured velvet, which is now laid in three panel pleats in the front, and side pleats behind. As we have already noted, the most elegant black velvet carriage costumes have panels covered with embroidery done on the fabric, with plastrons of thread lace, and usually some jet ornaments.—Harper's Bazar.

—The late Frank S. Chanfrau once said: "I believe that marriages between members of my profession and persons out of it are nearly always ill matches. And naturally so. The stage is a world in itself, and wholly unlike any other. Only those in it can understand it. If a man in a private capacity has an actress for a wife he can hardly help feeling somewhat jealous when she plays certain scenes. An actor, now, would know that the matter was purely one of business—an art—and meant no more morally than a formal shake of the hand between acquaintances."—N. Y. Herald.

HOME AND FARM.

—Feathers slightly uncurled by the damp air may be restored by holding over a hot stove, then shaking and repeating until curled. Care should be taken not to burn the feather.—Harper's Bazar.

—There is not much advantage in cutting green corn for soiling until it approaches the blossoming stage. Before this time stock will eat it, but it is watery and innutritious.

—The best way to boil corn is to boil it with part of the husks on it. Remove the silk and the tough outer covering, leaving the white inner leaves. The corn will be much sweeter if cooked in this way.—Troy Times.

—Cheese, when properly made and thoroughly cured, so that all its substance is available for food, has twice the value of butcher's meat for sustaining life and is quite as easily digested and as wholesome.—San Francisco Chronicle.

—Wafers: One quart of flour, four ounces of lard or butter, a little salt, mix with cold water; pound with a rolling-pin twenty minutes, to be rolled out very thin and cut with a doughnut-cutter. To be eaten with jelly.—Toledo Blade.

—Tomato Catsup: One gallon of peeled tomatoes, four pods of red pepper, four tablespoons of black, four of white mustard seed, four of allspice, four of salt, one quart of vinegar, onions to the taste. Boiled well until quite thick, then bottle and cork tight.—The Household.

—Careful experiments were made last year in New York State in the culture of potatoes. The best results followed the Dutch method of planting, which consists of keeping the surface of the ground level, planting a single eye in a place, covering it six inches deep, and allowing but a single stalk to grow in the hills, which are a foot apart each way.

—Women are more cheerful than men, and yet are getting the reputation among men of complaining. The wife stays in the house too much. The evil of "dressing to go to market" is in the way. Let it be considered bad taste to see a housewife "dressed up" while she is doing her marketing; then there will be more "time" to get the fresh air.—Current.

—Prof. Sanborn has made some experiments in feeding grain to stock at pasture which indicate that even with milch cows the gain does not pay for the increased expense. There is a decided difference in the value of pasture at different times, even in the same season. Perhaps with rich grass in June feeding extra may not be profitable. But early in the season, when the grass is watery, and later, when pastures are dried up, we are very confident that extra feeding is the better policy.—N. Y. Times.

—A correspondent of the Bee Journal writes that a brood of chickens were in the habit of frequenting the shed in which he kept his bees. The bees stung all the dark colored ones to death, yet did not molest the light-colored chicks. Why this preference? The editor writes that he has frequently spoken of the advantage of wearing light clothes among the bees. "We wear black bee vails because we can not see clearly through any other color. Woolly, fuzzy and dark materials are objected to by bees. A man with a plug hat on rarely gets stung, unless by a bee that, in trying to 'shoot the hat,' aims too low, and hits the face by mistake, while a companion at a suitable distance is perfectly safe."

COMMON SENSE.

One of the Most Uncommon Things We Meet With in This World.

One of the most uncommon things we meet with is plain common sense. It is the possession not of one common mind, but the possession of a sense common to a thousand minds. The person gifted with common sense sees things as they look to the average mind when once their true relations have been defined. To illustrate: The late Chief-Justice Church was wont to say in the early years of his practice, when a case came before him: "The law ought to be" thus and so; when his partner consulted the books, the statute invariably confirmed the view which the Chief-Justice had taken. The great law-givers of the world have been men of supreme common sense. The blindness of passion, the mists of prejudice, the bonds of bigotry, the narrowness of conventionalism, could not warp or dim or distort their clear and far vision.

Common sense is not an secretion from without, but a growth from within. Schools and colleges can not endow their pupils with common sense; many a learned fool and crank and wooden-head rejoices in a diploma. Churches and theological schools do not endow their disciples and students with common sense. Hear this from the superintendents of the Congregational Home Missionary Society: "We deeply regret that not all our ministers have been liberally educated, and yet many who have enjoyed all the advantages of college and seminary training are hopelessly inefficient; due sometimes to a lack of common sense. The latter is absolutely fatal to success in our work. Learning may be acquired, an unconsecrated man may come to know a deep spiritual experience, but in case of a man born without common sense, we know of no remedy but death. . . . We have little hope of relief from ordaining councils. From time to time we hear of a man who is refused ordination on doctrinal grounds, but never because he lacks brains, common sense or force of character."

Religion has been defined to be "sanctified common sense." The first requisite for a successful minister has been well said to be common sense, then piety. In all the professions, in all the trades and industries of the world, he who is most gifted with common sense will, other things being equal, achieve the largest success.

We hardly agree with the sentiment quoted above that in case of a man born without common sense there is no remedy but death. The blind learn to substitute other senses, in a great degree, for the sense of sight. The dumb learn to speak mechanically. The deaf read speech on the lips. Those born without common sense may be taught, if they are taken young enough, to act as though they had it in some small measure, and thus make it become a second nature to them, and those in whom it is but as a grain of mustard seed may cultivate it with reasonable hope of a tolerable fruitage.

It is only two hundred and fifty years since "Galileo, at the age of seventy years, on his knees, and clad only in a shirt of sackcloth," was forced to abjure his theory, based on scientific methods of inquiry, that the earth, revolved around the sun. For all the ages before him men had believed the earth to be the center of the universe, and that all the heavens revolved around it. We laugh at the ignorance and foolishness of those who could believe so preposterous a doctrine, but we are foolish as they. How many a man and woman believe and act on the theory that they are each individually the center of the moral and social universe, and that everything revolves around them. Common sense is the scientific method applied to the affairs of common life. It gives man power to see the true relations of himself to others and to the facts of life, and to act in harmony with these relations.—N. Y. Tribune.

When Two Sharpers Meet.

A Buffalo man while in New York recently descended from the elevated road station at Chatham Square. As he did so he stopped for a minute and gazed around to get his bearings. A bright, spruce young man of pleasing appearance stepped up to him and said: "Why, how are you? It's a long time since I've seen you."

The Buffalonian, who is a lawyer, sized the young man up and acknowledged, with about a ton of ice in his manner, that it was a long time.

"You don't seem to recognize me," said the sharper.

"No, I don't," was the reply.

"I am with Benedict Bros., you know."

"Oh, and what is their business?"

"Dealers in cutlery."

"H'm, yes; well, why don't you attend to their business?"

The sharper thought he would, and he did.—Buffalo Express.

Double Action REVOLVER. EST. 1840. AMERICAN BULL DOG

PRICES: All Revolvers are made with Hard Rubber Stocks.

44 CAL. CENTRAL FIRE. Using the 44 Webley Central Fire Cartridge. These Revolvers are strictly first-class in every respect, as in the manufacture of them we have paid close attention to produce a revolver which for DURABILITY, RAPIDITY in FIRING, ACCURACY and PENETRATION, can be excelled by none. For a POLICE or HOUSE REVOLVER our American Bull Dog, 44 caliber, commends itself before all others in the market, being of a most desirable size to carry, and taking, as it does, a very powerful cartridge. Parties desiring a first-class Revolver will do well to examine these before purchasing one of another manufacture. Any Revolver on this list will be sent by mail, post-paid, on receipt of price. Our goods are exactly as represented.

TOP SNAP. PAT. JULY 27, 1883. We began business 44 years ago.

CHAMPION SINGLE BARREL SHOT GUN.

LOOK! Plain Barrel, 12 bore... $15. Plain Barrel, 10 bore... 16. Twist Barrel, 12 bore... 16. Twist Barrel, 10 bore... 16.

It has the CELEBRATED TOP SNAP ACTION, which at once commends itself before all others. Differing from all other top snap single breech loaders, in having the hammer in the center of the frame, and not on the side, thus preventing the liability of missing fire, by striking a direct blow full in the center of the cap, which is impossible to do with any single breech loader having the hammer on the side.

This gun can be opened only on the half cock, and as an additional convenience and safeguard against accidents, HAS THE REBOUNDING LOCK, ensuring perfect safety, for as soon as the gun is fired the hammer is thrown back to the half cock, or safety catch, where it remains until it is full cocked ready for firing. With all the improvements to be found in our Top Snap and Side Snap Guns we unhesitatingly claim them (for fine workmanship, convenience of manipulation, hard and close shooting, durability, and beauty of finish,) to be far superior to any single breech-loading gun that has ever been produced in this country.

ICE SKATES Of Every Description. See Catalogue.

Simplicity and Strength are its two prominent features. One trial has convinced every one interested of its superiority over all Roller Skates on the market, and Rink managers have adopted this Skate after thorough comparison with others. It is so constructed as to avoid wear on such parts as become loose in other skates, thereby avoiding the disagreeable noise so common in Rinks. The tension springs we use always bring the trucks back in a central line to the Skate, which is a great advantage over the rubber cushion commonly used; the great objection to rubber being that after using a short time the trucks become set to the right or left, and require renewing constantly. Patrons of Rinks will appreciate this very important advantage. The saving of Rink Managers in repairs has been the greatest recommendation of this Skate. Send 8 cents in stamps for large catalogue of Roller Skates, Guns, Rifles, Revolvers, Air Rifles, Police Goods, Dusters, Coats, Etc.

PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE.

Last Document of the Kind by Chester A. Arthur.

A New Electoral Count Law, the Chinese Question, Coinage of Silver Dollars, and the Tariff Question are Among the Topics Discussed.

TO THE CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES—Since the close of your last session the American people, in the exercise of their highest right of suffrage, have chosen their Chief Magistrate for the four years ensuing. When it is remembered that at no period in the country's history has the long political contest, which customarily precedes the day of the National election, been waged with greater fervor and intensity, it is a subject of congratulation that after the controversy at the polls was over, and while the slight preponderance by which the issue had been determined was as yet unascertained, the public peace suffered no disturbance, but the people everywhere patiently and quietly awaited the result. Nothing could more strikingly illustrate the temper of the American citizen, his love of order and his loyalty to law. Nothing could more signally demonstrate the strength and wisdom of our political institutions.

THE ELECTORAL COUNT.

Eight years have passed since a controversy concerning the result of a National election sharply called the attention of the Congress to the necessity of providing more precise and definite regulations for counting the electoral vote.

It is of the greatest importance that this question be solved before conflicting claims to the Presidency shall again distract the country, and I am persuaded that, by the people at large, any of the measures of relief thus far proposed would be preferred to continued inaction.

AT PEACE.

Our relations with all foreign powers continue to be amicable. With Belgium, a convention has been signed whereby the scope of present treaties has been so enlarged as to secure to citizens of either country within the jurisdiction of the other equal rights and privileges.

In the acquisition and alienation of property a trade mark treaty has also been concluded. The war between Chili and Peru is at an end. For the arbitration of the claims of American citizens who, during its continuance, suffered through the acts of the Chilian authorities, a convention will soon be negotiated.

The state of hostilities between

FRANCE AND CHINA

continues to be an embarrassing feature of our Eastern relations. The Chinese Government has promptly adjusted and paid the claims of American citizens whose property was destroyed in the recent riots at Canton. I renew the recommendation of my last annual message that the Canton indemnity fund be returned to China. The true interpretation of the recent treaty with that country permitting the restriction of Chinese immigration is likely to be again the subject of your deliberations. It may be seriously questioned whether the statute passed at the last session does not of certain Chinese who left this country with return certificates valid under the old law and now seem to be debarred from landing from lack of certificates required by the new. The recent purchases by the United States of a large trading fleet heretofore under the Chinese flag has considerably enhanced our commercial importance in the East. In view of the large number of vessels built or purchased by American citizens in other countries and exclusively employed in legitimate traffic between foreign ports under the recognized protection of our flag, it might be well to provide a uniform rule for their registration and documentation, so that the bona fide property rights of our citizens therein shall be duly evidenced and properly guarded.

Pursuant to the advice of the Senate at the last session, I recognized the flag of the International Association, avoiding in so doing any prejudgment of conflict in territorial claims in that region. Subsequently, in execution of the expressed wish of the Congress, I appointed a commercial agent for the Congo Basin.

THE CONGO QUESTION.

The importance of the rich prospective trade of the Congo Valley has led to the general conviction that it should be open to all nations upon equal terms. An international conference for the consideration of this subject was called by the Emperor of Germany and is now in session at Berlin. Delegates are in attendance on behalf of the United States. Of the results of the conference you will be duly advised.

The Government of Corea has generously aided the efforts of the United States Minister to secure suitable premises for the use of the legation. As the conditions of diplomatic intercourse with Eastern nations demand that the legation premises be owned by the represented power, I advise that an appropriation be made for the acquisition of this property by the Government. The United States already possesses valuable premises at Tangier, as a gift from the Sultan of Morocco. As is stated hereafter, they have lately received a similar gift from the Siamese Government. The Government of Japan stands ready to present to us extensive grounds at Tokio whereon to erect a suitable building for the legation, Court-house and jail; and similar privileges can probably be secured in China and Persia. The owning of such premises would not only effect a large saving of the present rentals, but would permit of the due assertion of extra territorial rights in those countries, and would the better serve to maintain the dignity of the United States.

The failure of Congress to make appropriation for our representation at the Autonomous Court of the Khedive has proved a serious embarrassment in our intercourse with Egypt, and in view of the necessary intimacy of diplomatic relationship due to the participation of this Government as one of the treaty powers in all matters of administration there affecting the rights of foreigners, I advise the restoration of the agency and Consulate General at Cairo on its former basis. I do not conceive it to be the wish of Congress that the United States should withdraw altogether from the honorable position they have hitherto held with respect to the Khedive, or that citizens of this Republic residing or sojourning in Egypt should thereafter be without the aid and protection of a competent representative. With France the traditional cordial relationship continues. The of Liberty enlightening the World, the generous gift of the people of France, is expected to reach New York in May next. I suggest that Congressional action be taken in relation to the spirit which has prompted this gift, and in aid of the timely completion of the pedestal upon which it is to be placed.

Our relations with Germany, a country which contributes to our own some of the best elements of citizenship, continue to be cordial. The United States have extradition treaties with several of the German States, but by reason of the confederation of these States under the Imperial rule, the application of such treaties is not as uniform and comprehensive as the interests of the two countries require. I propose, therefore, to open negotiations for a single to embrace all the territory of the empire. It affords me pleasure to say that our intercourse with Great Britain continues of a most friendly character. The Government of Hawaii has indicated its willingness to continue for seven years the provisions of the existing reciprocity treaty. Such continuance, in view of the relations of that country to the American system of States, should in my judgment be favored.

The revolution in Hayti against the established Government has terminated. While it was in progress it became necessary to enforce our neutrality laws by instituting proceedings against individuals and vessels charged with their infringement.

These prosecutions were in all cases successful. Much anxiety has lately been displayed by various European Governments, and especially by the Government of Italy, for the abolition of our import duties upon works of art. It is well to consider whether the present discrimination in favor of productions of

is not likely to result, as they themselves seem very generally to believe it may, in the practical exclusion of our painters and sculptors from the rich fields for observation, study and labor, which they have hitherto enjoyed. There is a prospect that the long pending revision of the foreign treaties of Japan may be concluded at a new conference to be held at Tokio.

While this Government fully recognizes the equal and independent station of Japan in the community of nations, I would not oppose the general adoption of such terms of compromise as Japan may be disposed to offer in furtherance of a uniform policy of intercourse with Western Nations. During the past year the increasing good will between our own Government and that of Mexico has been variously manifested. The treaty of commercial reciprocity concluded January 20, 1883, has been ratified, and awaits the necessary tariff legislation of Congress to become effective.

The legislation will, I doubt not, be among the first measures to claim your attention. A full treaty of commerce, navigation and consular rights is much to be desired, and such a treaty I have reason to believe that the Mexican Government stands ready to conclude. Some embarrassment has been occasioned by the failure of Congress at its last session to provide means for the due execution of the treaty of July 29, 1882, for the resurvey of the Mexican boundary and the relocation of boundary monuments. With the Republic of Nicaragua a treaty has been concluded which authorizes the construction by the United States of a canal, railway and telegraph line across the Nicaraguan territory. By the terms of this treaty sixty miles of the River San Juan, as well as lake Nicaragua, an inland sea forty miles in width, are to constitute a part of the projected enterprise.

This covers for actual canal construction seventeen miles on the Pacific side and thirty-six miles on the Atlantic. To the United States, whose rich territory on the Pacific is for the ordinary purpose of commerce, practically cut off from communication by water with the Atlantic ports, the political and commercial advantages of such a project can scarcely be overestimated.

It is believed that when the treaty is laid before you the justice and liberality of its provisions will command universal approval at home and abroad. The death of our representative at Russia, while at his post at St. Petersburg, afforded to the Imperial Government a renewed opportunity to in a manner befitting the intimate friendliness which has ever marked the intercourse of the two countries.

The course of this Government in raising its representation at Bangkok to the diplomatic rank has evoked from Siam evidences of warm friendship and augers well for our enlarged intercourse. The Siamese Government has presented to the United States a commodious mansion and grounds for the occupancy of the legation and I suggest that by joint resolution attest its appreciation of this generous gift.

This Government has more than once been called upon of late to take action in fulfillment of its international obligation toward Spain. Agitation in the Island of Cuba hostile to the Spanish Crown having been fomented by persons abusing the sacred rights of hospitality which our territory affords, the officers of the Government have been instructed to exercise vigilance to prevent infractions of our neutrality laws at Key West and at other points near the Cuban coast. I am happy to say that in the only instance where these precautionary measures were successfully eluded, the offenders, when found in our territory, were subsequently tried and convicted.

The growing need of close relationship of intercourse and traffic between the

and their natural market in the United States led to the adoption, in January last, of a commercial agreement looking to that end. This agreement has since been superseded by a more carefully framed and comprehensive convention, which I shall submit to the Senate for approval; it has been the aim of this negotiation to open such a favored reciprocal exchange of productions carried under the flag of either country, as to make the intercourse between Cuba and Porto Rico and ourselves scarcely less intimate than the commercial movement between our domestic ports, and to insure a removal of the burdens on shipping in the Spanish Indies, of which in the past our ship owners and ship masters have so often had cause to complain.

The negotiation of the convention has for a time postponed the prosecution of certain claims of our citizens which were declared to be without the jurisdiction of the late Spanish American Claims Commission, and which are therefore remitted to diplomatic channels for adjustment.

The speedy settlement of the claims will now be urged by this Government.

Negotiations for a treaty of commercial reciprocity with the Dominican Republic have been successfully concluded, and the result will shortly be laid before the Senate.

Certain questions between the United States and the still remain unsolved. Complaints in behalf of our citizens are not satisfactorily adjusted. The Porte has sought to withhold from our commerce the right of favored treatment to which we are entitled by existing conventional stipulations, and the revision of the tariffs is unaccomplished.

The final disposition of pending questions with Venezuela has not as yet been reached, but I have good reason to expect an early settlement, which will provide the means of re-examining the Caracas awards in conformity with the expressed desire of Congress and which will recognize the justice of certain claims preferred against Venezuela. The Central and South American Commission, appointed by authority of the act of July 7, 1884, will soon proceed to Mexico. It has been furnished with instructions, which will be laid before you. They contain a statement of the general policy of the Government for enlarging its commercial intercourse with American States.

The Commissioners have been actively preparing for their responsible task by holding conferences in their principal cities with merchants and others interested in Central and South American trade.

MERIDIAN CONFERENCE.

The International Meridian Conference, lately convened in Washington upon the invitation of the Government of the United States, was composed of representatives from twenty-five nations.

The conference concluded its labors on the 1st of November, having with substantial unanimity agreed upon the meridian of Greenwich as the starting point, whence longitude is to be computed through 180 degrees eastward and westward, and upon the adoption for all purposes for which it may be found convenient, of a universal day which shall begin at midnight on the initial meridian, and whose hours shall be counted from zero up to twenty-four. The formal report of the transactions of this conference will be hereafter transmitted to Congress.

This Government is in frequent receipt of invitations from foreign States to participate in often of great interest and importance.

Occupying as we do, an advanced position in the world's production, and aiming to secure a profitable share of our industries in the general competitive markets, it is a matter of serious concern that the want of means for participation in these exhibitions should so often exclude our producers from advantages enjoyed by those of other countries. During the past year the attention of Congress was drawn to the formal invitations in this regard tendered by the Governments of England, Holland, Belgium, Germany and Austria. The executive has in some instances appointed Honorary Commissioners. This is, however, a most unsatisfactory expedient, for without some provision to meet the necessary working expenses of a commission, it can effect little or nothing in behalf of exhibitors. An International Inventions Exhibition is to be held in London next May. This will cover a field of special importance, and in which our country holds a foremost rank, but the Executive is, at present, powerless to organize a proper representation of our vast National interests in this direction.

I have in several previous messages referred to this subject. It seems to me that a statute giving to the Executive general discretionary authority to accept such invitations and to appoint honorary commissioners without salary and placing at the disposal of the Secretary of State a small fund for defraying their reasonable expenses, would be of great public utility.

The Government has received official notice that the revised international regulations for preventing have been adopted by all the leading maritime powers except the United States, and came into force on the 1st of September last. For the due protection of our shipping interests the provisions of our statutes should at once be brought into conformity with these regulations.

The question of securing to authors, composers and artists in this country in return for reciprocal rights abroad, is one that may justly challenge your attention. It is true that a convention will be necessary for fully accomplishing this result, but until Congress shall by statute fix the extent to which foreign holders of copyright shall be here privileged, it has been deemed inadvisable to negotiate such conventions. For this reason the United States were not represented at the recent conference at Berne.

I recommend that the scope of the of the United States be so enlarged as to cover all patent acts of hostility committed in our territory and aimed against the peace of a friendly nation. Existing statutes prohibit the fitting out of armed expeditions and restrict the shipment of explosives, though the enactments in the latter respect were not framed with regard to international obligations, but simply for the protection of passenger travel. All these statutes were intended to meet special emergencies that had already arisen. Other emergencies have arisen since and modern ingenuity supplies means for the organization of hostilities without the open resort to armed vessels or to filibustering parties.

I see no reason why overt preparations in this country for the commission of criminal acts, such as are here under consideration, should not be alike punishable, whether such acts are intended to be committed in our own country or in a foreign country with which we are at peace. The prompt and thorough treatment of this question, is one which intimately concerns the National honor. Our existing also need revision. Those sections relating to persons residing within the limits of the United States in 1795 and 1798, have now only a historical interest. Section 2172, recognizing the citizenship of the children of naturalized parents is ambiguous in its terms and partly obsolete. There are special provisions of law favoring the naturalization of those who serve in the army or in merchant vessels, while no similar privileges are granted those who serve in the navy or marine corps.

An uniform rule of naturalization, such as the constitution contemplates, should, among other things, clearly define the status of persons born within the United States, subject to a foreign power (Sec. 1992), and of minor children of fathers who have declared their intention of becoming citizens, but have failed to perfect their naturalization. It might be wise to provide for a central bureau of registry, wherein should be filed authenticated transcripts of every record of naturalization in the several Federal and State Courts, and to make provision also for the vacation or cancellation of such record in cases where fraud had been practiced upon the Court by the applicant himself or where he had renounced or forfeited his acquired citizenship. A just and uniform law in this respect would strengthen the hands of the Government in protecting its citizens abroad, and would pave the way for the conclusion of treaties of naturalization with foreign countries.

The legislation of the last session effected in the certain changes and reductions which have been productive of embarrassment. The population and commercial activity of our country are steadily on the increase, and are giving rise to new, varying and often delicate relationships with other countries. Our foreign establishment now embraces nearly double the area of operations that it did twenty years ago. The confinement of such a service within the limit of expenditure then established is not, it seems to me, in accordance with true economy. A community of sixty millions of people should be adequately represented in its intercourse with foreign nations. A project for the reorganization of the Consular service and for recasting the scheme of extra territorial jurisdiction is now before you. If the limits of a short session will not allow its full consideration, I trust you will not fail to make suitable provision for present needs of the service.

It has been customary to define in the appropriation acts the rank of each diplomatic office to which a salary is attached. I suggest that this course be abandoned and that it be left to the President, with the advice and consent of the Senate, to fix from time to time the diplomatic grade of the representatives of this Government abroad as may seem advisable; provision being definitely made, however, as now, for the amount of salary attached to the respective stations.

The condition of

and the operations of the various branches of the public service which are connected with the Treasury Department are very fully discussed in the report of the Secretary. It appears that the ordinary revenues for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1884, were:

From customs	$195,067,489 76
From Internal Revenue	121,586,072 51
From all other sources	31,866,307 65
Total ordinary revenues	$348,519,869 92

The public expenditures during the same period were:

For civil expenses	$22,312,907 71
For foreign intercourse	1,260,766 34
For Indians	6,474,390 29
For pensions	55,429,228 06
For the military establishment, including river and harbor improvements and arsenals	39,429,603 36
For the naval establishment, including vessels, machinery and improvements at navy yards	17,292,601 44
For miscellaneous expenditures, including public buildings, light houses and collecting the revenue	43,939,710 00
For expenditures on account of the District of Columbia	3,407,049 62
For interest on the public debt	54,578,378 48
For the Sinking Fund	46,790,229 50
Total ordinary expenditures	$290,916,483 83
Leaving a surplus of	$57,603,396 09

As compared with the preceding fiscal year, there was a net decrease of over $21,000,000 in the amount of expenditures. The aggregate receipts were less than those of the previous year by about $54,000,000. The falling off of revenue from customs made up nearly $20,000,000 of this deficiency, and about $23,000,000 of the remaining was due to the diminished receipts from internal taxation.

The Secretary estimates the total receipts for the fiscal year, which will end June 30, 1885, at $330,000,000, and the total expenditures at $290,620,201.16, in which are included the interest on the debt and the amount payable to the Sinking Fund. This would leave a surplus for the entire year of about $39,000,000. The value of exports from the United States to foreign countries during the year ending June 30, 1884, was as follows: Domestic merchandise, $724,964,852; foreign merchandise, $15,548,757; total merchandise, $740,513,609; specie, $67,133,383. Total exports of merchandise and specie, $807,646,992.

The cotton and cotton manufactures included in this statement were valued at $208,900,415, the breadstuffs at $162,544,715, the provisions at $114,416,547, and the mineral oils at $47,103,248.

During the same period the imports were as follows: Merchandise, $667,697,693; gold and silver, $37,426,262; total, $705,123,955.

More than 61 per cent. of the entire value of imported merchandise consisted of the following articles: Sugar and molasses, $103,884,274; wool and woolen manufactures, $53,542,292; silk and its manufactures, $49,949,128; coffee, $49,686,705; iron and steel and manufactures thereof, $41,464,599; chemicals, $38,465,96[illegible]; flax, hemp, jute and like substances and manufactures thereof, $33,463,398; cotton and manufactures of cotton, $30,454,476; hides and skins other than fur skins, $22,350,906.

I concur with the Secretary of the Treasury in recommending the immediate suspension of the coinage of and of the issuance of silver certificates. This is a matter to which, in former communications, I have more than once invoked the attention of the National Legislature. It appears that annually for the past six years there have been coined, in compliance with requirements of the act of February 28, 1878, more than twenty-seven million silver dollars.

The number now outstanding, is reported by the Secretary to be nearly $185,000,000, when but little more than $40,000,000, or less than twenty-two per cent. are in actual circulation. The mere existence of this fact seems to me to furnish of itself a cogent argument for the repeal of the statute which has made such fact possible. But there are other and graver considerations that tend in the same direction. The Secretary avows his conviction that unless this coinage and the issuance of silver certificates be suspended, silver is likely at no distant day to become our sole metallic standard. The commercial disturbance and the impairment of the National credit that would be thus occasioned can scarcely be overestimated. I hope the Secretary's suggestions respecting the withdrawal from circulation of the one dollar and two dollar notes will receive your approval.

It is likely that a considerable portion of the silver now encumbering the vaults of the Treasury might thus find its way into the currency. While trade dollars have ceased for the present, at least, to be an element of active disturbance in our currency system, some provision should be made for their surrender to the Government. In view of the circumstances under which they were coined and of the fact that they have never had a legal tender quality, there should be offered for them only a slight advance over their bullion value. The Secretary in the course of his report considers the propriety of beautifying the designs of our subsidiary silver coins and of so increasing their weight that they may bear their due ratio of value to the standard dollar. His conclusions in this regard are cordially approved.

In my annual message of 1882, I recommended the abolition of all excise taxes, except those relating to distilled spirits. This recommendation is now renewed. In case these taxes shall be abolished, the revenues that will still remain to the Government will, in my opinion, not only suffice to meet its reasonable expenditures, but will afford a surplus large enough to permit such as may seem to be advisable when the results of recent revenue laws and commercial treaties shall have shown in what quarters these reductions can be most judiciously effected. One of the gravest of the problems which appeal to the wisdom of Congress for solution is the ascertainment of the most effective means of increasing our foreign trade and thus relieving the depression under which our industries are now languishing.

The Secretary of the Treasury advises that the duty of investigating this subject be intrusted, in the first instance, to a competent commission. While fully recognizing the considerations that may be urged against this course, I am nevertheless of the opinion that, upon the whole, no other would be likely to effect speedier or better results. That portion of the Secretary's report which concerns the condition of our shipping interests can not fail to command your attention. He emphatically recommends that as an incentive to the investment of American capital in American steamships, the Government shall, by liberal payments for mail transportation or otherwise, lend its active assistance to individual enterprise, and declares his belief that unless that course be pursued our foreign carrying trade must remain as it is to-day—almost exclusively in the hands of foreigners. One phase of this subject is now especially prominent, in view of the repeal by the act of June 26, 1884, of all statutory provisions arbitrarily compelling American vessels to carry the mails to and from the United States, as it is necessary to make provision to compensate the owners of such vessels for performing that service. After April, 1885, it is hoped the whole subject will receive early consideration that will lead to the enactment of such measure for the revival of our merchant marine as the wisdom of Congress may devise.

The three per cent. bonds of the Government to the amount of more than $100,000,000 have since my last annual message been redeemed by the Treasury. The bonds of that issue still outstanding amount to little over $200,000,000, about one-fourth of which will be retired through the operations of the sinking fund during the coming year. As these bonds still continue the chief basis for the circulation of the National Banks the question how to avert the contraction of the currency caused by their retirement is one of constantly increasing importance.

It seems to be generally conceded that the law governing this matter exacts from the banks excessive security, and that upon their present bond deposits a than is now allowed may be granted with safety. I hope that the bill which passed the Senate at the last session permitting the issue of notes equal to the face value of deposited bonds will commend itself to the approval of the House of Representatives.

In the expenses of the

the Secretary reports a decrease of more than $9,000,000, of which reduction $5,600,000 was effected in the expenditures for rivers and harbors, and $2,700,000 in expenditures for the Quartermaster's Department. Outside of that department the annual expenses of all the Army Bureaus proper, except, possibly, the Ordinance Bureau, are substantially fixed charges which can not be materially diminished without change in the numerical strength of the army. The expenditures in the Quartermaster's Department can readily be subjected to administrative discretion and it is reported by the Secretary of War, that as a result of exercising such discretion in reducing the number of draught and pack animals in the army, the annual cost of supplying and caring for such animals is now $1,108,085.90 less than it was in 1882.

INDIAN QUESTION.

The reports of military commanders show that the last year has been notable for its freedom from Indian outbreaks.

In defiance of the President's proclamation of July 1, 1884, certain intruders sought to make settlements in the Indian Territory. They were promptly removed by a detachment of troops.

PUBLIC MUSEUM.

During the past session of Congress, a bill to provide a suitable fireproof building for the Army Medical Museum and the Library of the Surgeon General's office, received the approval of the Senate. A similar bill reported favorably to the House of Representatives by one of its committee, is still pending before that body.

It is hoped that during the coming session the measure may become a law, and hereafter immediate steps may be taken to secure a place of safe deposit for these valuable collections, now in a state of insecurity.

RIVERS AND HARBORS.

The funds with which the works for the improvement of rivers and harbors were prosecuted during the past year were derived from the appropriations of the act of August 2, 1882, together with such few balances as were on hand from previous appropriations. The balance in the Treasury subject to requisition July 1, 1883, was $10,021,649.55.

The amount appropriated during the fiscal year, 1884, was $1,319,654.52, and the amount drawn from the Treasury during the fiscal year was $8,228,703.54, leaving a balance of $3,112,580.53 in the Treasury subject to requisition July 1, 1884. The Secretary of War submits the report of Chief of Engineers as to the practicability of on the seaboard by fortifications and other defenses able to repel modern methods of attack. The time has now come when such defenses can be prepared with confidence that they will not prove abortive; and when the possible result of delay in making such preparation is seriously considered, delay seems inexcusable for the most important cities, those whose destruction or capture would be a national humiliation. Adequate defenses, inclusive of guns, may be made by the gradual expenditure of $60,000,000, a sum much less than a victorious enemy could levy as a contribution. An appropriation of about one-tenth of that amount is asked to begin the work, and I concur with the Secretary of War in urging that it be granted.

The War Department is proceeding with the conversion of ten-inch smooth bore guns into eight-inch rifles by lining the former with tubes of forged or of coiled wrought iron. Fifty guns will be thus converted within the year. This, however, does not obviate the necessity of providing means for the construction of guns of the highest power, both for the purposes of coast defense and for the armament of war vessels.

The report of the Gun Foundry Board, appointed April 2, 1883, in pursuance of the act of March 3, 1883, was transmitted to Congress in a special message of February 8, 1884. In my message of March 26, 1884, I called attention to the recommendation of the Board that the Government should encourage the production of private steel works of the required material for heavy cannon, and that two Government factories, one for the army and one for the navy should be established for the fabrication of guns from such material. No action having been taken the board was subsequently reconvened to determine more fully the plans and estimates necessary for carrying out its recommendation.

It has received information which indicates that there are responsible steel manufacturers in this country who, although not provided with the necessary plant, are willing to construct the same and to make bids for contracts with the Government for the supply of the requisite material for the heaviest guns adapted to modern warfare. If a guarantee order of sufficient magnitude, accompanied a positive appropriation extending over a series of years shall be made by Congress—all doubts as to the feasibility of the plan being thus removed—I renew my recommendation that such action be taken by Congress as will enable the Government to construct its own ordnance upon its own territory, and so to provide the armaments demanded by considerations of national safety and honor. The report of the Secretary of the Navy exhibits the progress which has been made on the new steel cruisers authorized by the acts of August 5, 1882 and March 3, 1883, of the four vessels under contract one, the Chicago, of 4,500 tons, is more than half finished; the Atlanta, 3,000 tons, has been successfully launched, and her machinery is now fitting; the Boston, also of 3,000 tons, is ready for launching, and the Dolphin, dispatch steamer of 1,500 tons, is ready for delivery.

Certain adverse criticisms upon the designs of these cruisers are discussed by the Secretary, who insists that the correctness of the conclusions reached by the Advisory Board and by the department has been demonstrated by recent development in ship-building abroad. The machinery of the double turreted monitors, Puritan, Terror and Amphitrite, contracted for under the act of March 3, 1883, is in process of construction. No work has been done during the past year on their armor, for lack of the necessary appropriations. A fourth monitor, the Monadnock, still remains unfinished at the Navy Yard in California.

It is recommended that early steps be taken to complete these vessels and to provide also an armament for the monitor Miantonomah. The recommendations of the Naval Advisory Board, approved by the Department, comprise the construction of one steel cruiser of 4,500 tons, one cruiser of 3,000 tons, two heavily armed gunboats, one light cruising gunboat, one dispatch vessel armed with Hotchkiss cannon, one armored ram and three torpedo boats. The general designs, all of which are calculated to meet the existing wants of the service, are now well advanced, and the construction of the vessels can be undertaken as soon as you shall grant the necessary authority. The act of Congress, approved August 7, 1882, authorized the removal to the United States of the bodies of Lieutenant Commander Geo. W. DeLong and his companions, of the Jeannette Expedition.

This removal has been successfully accomplished by Lieutenants Harber and Schuetze. The remains were taken from the grave in the Lena Delta in March, 1883, and were retained at Yakutsk until the following winter, the season being too far advanced to admit of their immediate transportation. They arrived at New York February 20, 1884, where they were received with suitable honors.

THE GREELY EXPEDITION.

In pursuance of the joint resolution of Congress, approved February 13, 1884, a naval expedition was fitted out for the relief of Lieutenant A. W. Greely, United States Army, and of the party who had been engaged under his command in scientific observations at Lady Franklin Bay. The fleet consisted of the steam sealer Thetis, purchased in England; the Bear, purchased at St. John's, Newfoundland, and the Alert, which was generously provided by the British Government. Preparations for the expedition were promptly made by the Secretary of the Navy, with the active co-operation of the Secretary of War. Commander George W. Coffin was placed in command of the Alert and Lieutenant W. H. Emory in command of the Bear.

The Thetis was intrusted to Commander Winfield S. Schley, to whom also was assigned the superintendence of the entire expedition. Immediately upon its arrival at Uppernavik the fleet began the dangerous navigation of Melville Bay, and in spite of every obstacle, reached Littleton Island on June 22, a fortnight earlier than any vessel had before attained that point. On the same day it crossed over to Cape Sabine, where Lieutenant Greely and the other survivors of his party were discovered. After taking on board the living and the bodies of the dead, the relief ships sailed for St. Johns, where they arrived on July 17.

They were appropriately received at Portsmouth, N. H., on August 1, and at New York on August 8. One of the bodies was landed at the former place, the others were put on shore at Governor's Island, and with the exception of one which was interred in the National Cemetery, were forwarded thence to the destination indicated by friends.

The organization and conduct of this relief expedition reflects great credit upon all who contributed to its success.

In this, the last of the stated messages that I shall have the honor to transmit to the Congress of the United States, I can not too strongly urge on its attention the duty of as rapidly as possible to the high state of efficiency which formerly characterized it. As the long peace that has lulled us into a sense of fancied security may at any time be disturbed, it is plain that the policy of strengthening this arm of the service is dictated by considerations of economy and of a just regard for our future tranquillity and of true appreciation of the dignity and honor of the Republic.

The report of

acquaints you with the present condition and needs of the postal service. It discloses the gratifying fact that the loss of revenue from the reduction in rate of letter postage, as recommended in my message of December, 1882, and effected by the act of March 3, 1883, has been much less than was generally anticipated. My recommendation of this reduction was based upon the belief that the actual falling off in receipts from letter postage for the year immediately succeeding the change of rate, would be $3,000,000. It has proved to be only $2,275,000. This is a trustworthy indication that the revenue will soon be restored to its former volume by natural increase of sealed correspondence.

I confidently repeat, therefore, the recommendation of my last annual message, that single rate postage upon drop letters be reduced to one cent wherever payment of two cents is now required by law. The double rate is only exacted at offices where the carrier system is in operation, and it appears that at these offices the increase in tax upon local letters defrays the cost not only of its own collection and delivery, but of the collection and delivery of all other mail matter. This is an inequality that ought no longer to exist.

I approve the recommendation of the Postmaster General that the unit of weight in the rating of first-class matter should be one ounce instead of one-half ounce, as it now is. In view of the statistics furnished by the Department it may well be doubted whether the change would result in any loss of revenue; that it would greatly promote the convenience of the public is beyond dispute. The free delivery system has been lately applied to five cities, and the total number of offices in which it is now in operation is one hundred and fifty-nine. Experience shows that its adoption under proper conditions is equally an accommodation to the public and an advantage to the postal service. It is more than self-sustaining, and for the reasons urged by the Postmaster General may properly be extended. It is the opinion of that officer that it is proper to provide means whereby exceptional dispatch in dealing with letters in free delivery offices may be secured by payment of extraordinary postage. This scheme might be made effective by employment of a special stamp the cost of which should be commensurate with the expense of the extra service. In some of the large cities private express companies have undertaken to outstrip the Government mail carriers by affording for the prompt transmission of letters better facilities than have heretofore been at the command of the post-office.

It has always been the policy of the Government to discourage such enterprises, and in no better mode can that policy be maintained than in supplying the public with the most efficient mail service that with due regard to its own best interests can be furnished for its accommodation.

The Attorney General renews the recommendation contained in his report of last year touching the fees of witnesses and jurors. He favors radical changes in the fee bill, the adoption of a system by which the attorneys and Marshals of the United States should be compensated solely by salaries, and the erection by the Government of a penitentiary for the confinement of offenders against its laws, of the varied Governmental concerns in charge of the

INTERIOR DEPARTMENT

The report of its Secretary presents an interesting summary. Among the topics deserving particular attention I refer you to his observations respecting our Indian affairs, the pre-emption and timber culture acts, the failure of railroad companies to take title to lands granted by the Government, and the operations of the Pension Office, the Patent Office, the Census Bureau and the Bureau of Education. Allusion has been made already to the circumstance that, both as between different Indian tribes and as between Indians and the whites, the past year has been one of unbroken peace. In this circumstance the President is glad to find justification for the policy of the Government in dealing with the Indian question and in confirmation of the views which were fully expressed in his first communication to the Forty-seventh Congress. The Secretary urges anew the enactment of a statute for punishment of crimes committed on Indian Reservations, and recommends the passage of the bill now pending in the House of Representatives for the purchase of a tract of 18,000 square miles from the Sioux Reservation. Both these measures are worthy of approval.

I concur with him also in advising the repeal of the pre-emption law, the enactment of statutes resolving the present legal complications touching lapsed grants to railroad companies, and the funding of the debt of the several Pacific railroads under such guaranty as shall effectually insure its ultimate payment.

The report of the

will be read with interest. It discloses the results of recent legislation looking to the prevention and punishment of polygamy in that Territory. I still believe that if that abominable practice can be suppressed by law it can only be by the most radical legislation consistent with the restraints of the constitution.

I again recommend, therefore, that Congress assume absolute political control of the Territory of Utah, and provide for the appointment of a commission with such Governmental powers as in its judgment may justly and wisely be put into their hands. In the course of this communication reference has more than once been made to the policy of this Government as regards the extension of our Napoleon's Meanness.

The selection from the letters and dispatches of the First Napoleon which has just been published, with explanatory notes by Mr. Denis Bingham, is very interesting reading, for they form an excellent and authentic record of an extraordinary man who was a singular mixture of the greatest talents and of the meanest qualities. Napoleon is often reproached for his lies, and the phrase "menteur comme un bulletin" was invented to characterize his official mode of announcing his military successes. This I have always thought somewhat unfair, for the object of a general is to deceive his opponent in many matters, and if this can be done by means of a bulletin, why should he not adopt this method? The worst trait in Napoleon was his jealousy of his own generals, and his persistent endeavor to lessen their reputations in order to aggrandize his own.—London Truth.

The Placid Boston Girl.

During the first appearance of Henry Irving as Louis XIV. in Boston a lady found herself seated next to a party of three intensely typical Boston girls, who observed the development of the play with that reserved scorn and critical aspect for which their class is noted. The lady was more enthusiastic than they, and at various points which the actor made was not chary of applause. At last, when a particularly strong situation had been met and mastered, she exclaimed sotto voce: "Ah, he is, indeed, great." The three young women who sat beside her immediately put up their eye-glasses and looked her over in quiet, but expressive, scorn. Then one of the party in a calm and very distinct voice, said: "Pardon me, but I have not yet experienced any thrill."

Afterward, in relating the incident, the lady said: "I had in my dress at the time a long shawl-pin, and I was awfully tempted to jab it into the cold creature's arm to see if she would feel any 'thrill' at that."—Boston Journal.

"Funny sight, I've no doubt?"

"Funny! Why, Jake and Josh and me when we seed 'em killin' over the meadow just laid down on the barn floor and roared!"

"Did they catch the fox?"

"Yes, they got him."

"Must have been pretty good riders then, anyhow?"

"No, you see, when the fox saw 'em comin' he got to laughin' so hard he couldn't run."—Philadelphia Call.

Report of Attorney-General Brewster.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 26.—Attorney-General Brewster has completed his annual report. It contains many suggestions and recommendations for new legislation amendatory to existing statutes. Our criminal procedure is faulty. In criminal cases the pleadings should be simplified, a uniform system of challenges provided, and the trials shorn of the technical objections and cumbersome dilatory motions that can now be interposed to prevent a speedy trial upon the merits. In preparing indictments for offenses against the United States it is now necessary to follow the common law forms of the last century, with all their technicalities, verbosity of description, and repetitions, so that what should be a simple and concise written accusation becomes a long and confused mass of descriptions and allegations wholly unintelligible to both defendant and jury. With a view to remedying these evils, Mr. Brewster submits a number of carefully selected forms and recommends their adoption as general laws for the courts of the United States.

The Attorney-General recommends that the jurisdiction of the United States Circuit and District Courts, for the judicial district of Maryland, be extended for the purposes of securing trial in such courts, and before juries drawn from the entire State of Maryland, of cases involving crimes committed in the District of Columbia.

The Attorney-General renews his recommendations that the system of paying United States Marshals be changed from "fees" to salaries.

On the subject of the United States prisons the Attorney-General favors the erection of a penitentiary centrally located and controlled by the United States, in which to confine its prisoners. If a Government prison were built the prisoners could be employed in the manufacture of supplies exclusively for the Government. This would keep them employed, and should render the penitentiary almost self-sustaining. It should also avoid any objection to convict labor, while the tax-payers would be relieved almost entirely of the burden of supporting them. If Congress acts upon this recommendation it is suggested that the penitentiary should be erected at some central point where there are ample railroad facilities for the transportation of the goods manufactured by them.

WORK FOR CONGRESS.

Some of the Important Measures from Last Session to Be Acted Upon.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 26.—Congress will meet next Monday and will find its calendars crowded with bills left over from the last session. The Senate calendar includes 299 bills and resolutions, most of which originated in the Senate. The House calendars are, of course, far more heavily loaded. The calendar of the Committee of the Whole on the State of the Union contains 171 bills; the calendar of the House itself 160; the calendar of private bills 463, and 235 bills which have passed the Senate are now lying on the Speaker's table. The Senate cleaned up the House business pretty well at the last session, but the House neglected the Senate bills in a marked degree. Among the earlier bills on the Senate calendar are the following:

Senator Logan's bill to appropriate [illegible] derived from internal revenue taxes and sale of public lands for the education of all the children living in the United States.

Senator Blair's bill to reduce revenue, promote domestic industry, and increase foreign commerce.

Senator Blair's joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution in relation to alcoholic liquors and other poisonous beverages.

A joint resolution to give notice of the termination of the Hawaiian Reciprocity Treaty. The Committee on Foreign Affairs has reported adversely upon it.

In the Cincinnati market last week, 148 hhds. and one box of Owen county tobacco were sold.

The Springfield, Mass., Republican says: "The Republican newspapers seem to have taken a perfectly divilish animus from their defeat, and are contributing directly to the business depression by the most gloomy forebodings and by direct suppression of all news indicating that any one has any confidence in Mr. Cleveland.'

The Courier-Journal says: "At the October election, West Virginia adopted a constitutional amendment providing for the election of State officers on the first Tuesday in November instead of the second Tuesday in October. When it was known that the amendment had been ratified, the Prohibitionist nominated a candidate for Governor and the other offices, and as the other parties had no nominee, the anti-liquor people had it all to themselves. They will contest the right of the gentlemen elected in October to hold the position to which they were chosen."

New York Times: The gentlemen who are kindly engaged in making up a Cabinet for President Cleveland have one advantage. The Governor does not in the least interfere with their work. On the contrary he continues to occupy himself with his usual assiduity in the business of his present office, and those who know him best do not expect that he will devote much, if any attention to his future duties until he has finished [illegible]. There is a good deal of speculation as to when he will resign the Governor's position, but as he has not himself decided it, there is very little basis for such speculation. It is a curious fact that fifty-five years have passed since a Governor of this State has resigned his office, this was when Martin Van Buren entered the Cabinet of Andrew Jackson, in 1829.

It seems that the supposition has gone abroad that by mismanagement of the county affairs the county is engulfed in a debt approximating $8000. Such a piece of alleged information is well calculated to make the tax-payers slightly nervous and very much dissatisfied with the management of the financial affairs of the county. It is true that the county has lately experienced a considerable loss of funds, but the county's loss is not an indebtedness, and were Boone county to close up her business to-day, she would be amply able to discharge every cent of her obligations and have a balance of funds left in the hands of her collecting officer, as we think we are able to show to the entire satisfaction of the most skeptical.

At the last term of the county court, November 3, 1884, the settlement with the Sheriff on account of the county levy for 1883, that day filed, shows that after having paid all the claims allowed and ordered paid to that date, there remains in his hands and due the county on account of the county levy for 1883, a net balance of $1,255 21. On the same day, Nov. 3, 1884, the settlement with the Sheriff on account of the county levy was filed, and shows that of that levy the Sheriff owed the county $6,920 93. This presents the county's assets Nov. 3, 1884 as follows:

On account of levy of 1883	$1,255 21
On account of levy of 1884	6,920 93
County's assets Nov. 3, 1884	$8,176 14

From the above amount of assets the following liabilities of the county are to be deducted:

Amount of claims allowed at and since the Nov. term 1884 of the Court of Claims	$ 425 65
Probable delinquent list for '84	2,000 00
Dudley Rouse's note	500 00
One year's interest on same	40 00
Benj. Rouse's notes	3,600 00
One year's interest on same	288 00
County's total liabilities	$6,853 65
County's assets	$8,176 14
County's liabilities	6,853 65
Balance in favor of county	$1,322 49

It is thus seen that there has evidently been some very wild guessing as to the county's indebtedness on the part of someone, and that the county can pay all it owes and have enough left with which to buy several "drinks," and that too, after making a very liberal allowance for the 1884 delinquent list, which the [illegible]cient collecting officers have been [illegible]ing annually. If those who are, probably unintentionally, trying to lower the grade of their county's financial standing, will inform themselves from the records they will discover that old Boone is financially [illegible]

Ex-Gov. P. B. S. Pinchbeck, now Surveyor of the Port at New Orleans, says: "I do not believe that the election of Mr. Cleveland and the fact that the Democratic party has again come into power will prove injurious to the welfare of the colored people of the South. All the talk to the contraty emenates from people who are trying to create a bitter feeling between the two races in order to manufacture political capital. The condition of the colored people can not be changed or affected in the least degree by a mere change of administration. In my opinion, the success of Governor Cleveland will do more to destroy race predjudice than 10,000 civil rights bills. I think his election will finally result in a political revolution in the South which will entirely destroy the color line. New parties will be formed, composed of both races, in which each member will be equal, and will take part in all their proceedings. Of course this order of things will not be brought about immediately after Governor Cleveland's inauguration, but it will come."

James Lewis, the colored Surveyor General at New Orlean, says: "I do not believe that the change of administration will affect the status of the colored people of the South, but, on the contrary, there is reason to believe that it will engender a better feeling between the two races."

James D. Kennedy, Superintendent of Warehouses, said to be the most eloquent negro speaker in Louisiana, says: "I was very much surprised to read that portion of Mr. Blaine's speech about negroes. I infer from it that he is sorry that negroes were given the power to vote, and it would be well to take away their suffrage in order to give the North control of the bulk of the electoral vote, and to give it political power over the South. If Mr. Blaine had made that speech before the election I am free to confess that I would not have voted for him."

Henry C. Atwood, a prominent colored man, who is United States Consul to St. Domingo, says the negroes of the South are free at the polls, and that a great many colored men scratched Blaine because they did not like him. The colored people in the South have been deserted by the Republican party since 1876, and they are not depressed by Blaine's defeat, but think, on the contrary, that the election of Cleveland is going to prove a benefit to them.

Ex-Senator Bruce, of Mississippi, probably the best known colored man in the South, and at present Register of the United States Treasury, says: "That speech of Mr. Blaine's is likely to be the cause of great uneasiness among the colored people of the South, though its effect, very fortunately, can only be shortlived. Mr. Blaine's utterances were demagogical in the extreme, and entirely unwarranted by the present condition of the people of the South. The greatest harmony has existed between the white and colored populations, and Mr. Blaine's charges of violence and intimidation at the polls are altogether false. The South at the present time is loyal and peaceful, and in the very best frame of mind to enter upon a harmonious relation with the people of the North. They are especially desirous that the business channels between the two sections should be free and uninterrupted, and, with that object in view more than anything else, have organized what will be one of the grandest of modern industrial exhibits."—Ex.

The following advice to tobacco raisers is sent out by the Falls City Tobacco Warehouse, of Louisville:

"We take this occasion to advise our planter friends to use great care in stripping and sorting their new crop—culling the damaged from the sound leaf and lugs, throwing house burned and frosted into the common trash. It is our opinion that a greater difference will be shown in the markets between good grades and common grades than for many years, hence strippers should take unusual pains to select and cull, making their good grades as good as possible. In Burley kinds the supply will reach beyond demand, and when the rush of quantity with the usual proportion of soft order comes upon the market, buyers will crowd prices to a decline, well knowing that owners dare not reject and risk heating in the hogshead. With this situation as probable, early shipments in best possible order should be the rule."

EDUCATIONAL.

[Communications for this column must be addressed to Prof. T. H. Stephenson, Burlington, Kentucky.]

Noticing in your valuable paper a piece advocating a meeting of the teachers of Boone county for the purpose of appointing delegates to the Louisville convention in December next, I come to second that motion. Such a county as Boone, with all her resources, with all her wealth, with her three thousand children who are dependent upon the common schools for their education, with her half hundred of teachers, should not be without any representation whatever in such a meeting. The educational interests of the State and of Boone county demand that it should not! Our own welfare and the welfare of the pupils we have in charge demand that it should not!

We all know the condition of the educational system of the State. The people neglect it, and the legislature is not likely to take notice of these defects unless they are brought before them. But if the teachers of the State in convention assembled should ask that these defects be remedied it would not be likely to neglect it. Let us, therefore, as teachers of Boone county, and friends of education in general, do our share of the work and bear our part of the load.

You, my friend may say that you have not the time to spend. Your salary is not sufficient to allow such. But stop, and ask yourself this question: "Do you make any effort to have it improved?" If we remain with our arms folded as we have been we can never expect such results as the enterprising teachers of our sister States receive.

But let us wake up, take more interest in educational reform, countenance educational meetings of all kinds, and arouse the people to their duty in this cause, and we shall soon see the result of our industry. The people are under the impression that the present school system has been in force so long that it can not be changed without a complete revolution and are therefore, entirely indifferent to the subject.

There are other matters also which may profitably engage our time in a teachers' convention at Burlington. There are other matters which may be remedied by a little work of our own. If we can only impress upon the people the necessity for a uniform system of books for the county, we may, by a few well directed efforts, be able to overcome this great evil of our common school. It can be done if the teachers will only agitate the question and show to the people where it will benefit them as well as be of the greatest advantage to the teachers.

Teachers of Boone county, let us be up and doing. Make hay while the sun shines. Let us make ourselves worthy of the names of teachers, for a teacher has one of the most important callings of all the professions. He has in his power the cultivation, the training of the moral and intellectual outgrowth of the future generation. Let us hear again from our friend in the near future and may he soon be able to assign some definite time for our meeting.

Let every friend of education be there and especially every teacher and every school trustee of the county.

Job Cook, recently hanged by a mob in Nebraska, was brought back to life afterward; but is completely deranged.

President elect-Cleveland is a cousin of the late Hon. Frank Cleveland, of Bracken county, who was Senator from that district.

The pastor of a colored church in Georgetown publishes a letter in the Times, on the political situation as regards the colored people. He sees no cause for alarm on the part of his race by reason of an early change of the administration of the government, and anticipates a continuation of good feeling and thorough protection of the colored people by the Democrats.

Those of our fellow-citizens who scoured the county in search of tobacco to buy last fall and winter, have apparently lost all the "git up and git', with which they were imbued a year since. The county is full of large barns of tobacco, but the buyers seem to have no hankering after the weed at any price, while producers anticipate smaller figures than they realized for the '84 crop. It looks very much like a reaction has come in the [illegible] of tobacco.

Riddell and Smith, two of the earnest advocates of the Rabbit Hash and Gunpowder pike, were in town Saturday in the interest of that road. They have been intensely anxious that the road be built, and have devoted much time to furthering the project, and will pursue their efforts till the last ray of hope disappears, after which no one can charge them with being an obstacle in the way of the enterprise. Several others have been liberal towards the work, but the number is too small to insure the success of the road.

All those indebted to me are requested to come in and settle, as I need my money. R. S. Crisler, Burlington.

Among the Farmers.

In Clark Co., W. B. Kidd bought last week of Ike and Prewitt Vanmeter 10 head of 1590 lb. cattle at 6 cents per pound and 23 head weight about 1400 pounds at 5½ cents.

Milt Kendall of Scott county, sold it is said, 40 fat hogs at $9 per hundred, payable when Cleveland was elected or nothing—and the hogs have gone at the former figures.

A farm of 120 acres, six miles from Lexington, was sold last week at $105-25 per acre, and a farm of 121 acres, about the same distance from Lexington, sold at $123 75 per acre.

Mr. John McCoy, of Benson precinct has shown us an ear of corn, grown on his place, which contains thirty-six rows. This is undoubtedly the greatest number of rows ever seen upon one ear of corn. Mr. McCoy says the farmer who can beat this may take his crop, corn crib, and all.—Capital.

The large tobacco barn of Geo. W. Simpson was destroyed by fire about 1 o'clock Sunday morning. The barn contained 150 bushels of wheat, lumber, farm machinery, about ten acres of tobacco, &c. It was evidently the work of an incendiary. A writ has been issued for a man named Holmes who it is thought committed the deed No insurance. The dwelling of Mr. Simpson came near burning at the same time.—Williamstown Courier.

Frank Collier's tobacco barn, near Mt. Vernon, in this county, was burned Tuesday night, together with seven acres of tobacco. Loss on building $600; loss on tobacco $1,200; insurance on building and crop $1,500, in the Washington, of Boston. Mr. Collier is satisfied that it was the work of an incendiary, as there was no fire or lights about the barn. The barn was situated about two hundred yards from Mr. Collier's residence, and the grass caught fire and came near destroying the residence. It is reported that the tobacco barns of Sim Searce and Cane Graves, of Woodford, were also burned the same night. The tobacco barn of A. L. Arnold, in Woodford county, containing fifteen acres of tobacco, was burned a few nights ago. On the building there was an insurance of $500, in the Northwestern National, of Milwaukee; and on the tobacco $1,500 insurance in the Franklin, of Philadelphia.—Lex. Transcript.

A Short View of Henry Labonchere.

The London World publishes the following facts about a now celebrated Englishman:

"Those who have seen Mr. Labonchere only in the House of Commons, or in the city, would hardly recognize him in the gray clad gentleman who is taking a 'long, long pull and a strong, strong pull' in his skiff, having on board three or four ladies and the proper percentage of children. He is rowing all these people about, apparently, to his entire satisfaction, and seems quite as cool as when he says, 'You may impugn my motives, and dissect my arguments; but pray do not say my anecdotes are old. They may not be true, but they are surely new; for I make them myself.' Social terrorism has no more effect upon Mr. Labonchere than to invite attack. It is delightful to hear him holding forth on the folly of walking through wet turnips, in thick, uncomfortable boots, to shoot birds which can be obtained in better condition for cooking from a poulterer; while his audience shudder at his sentiments, however much they respect his audacity. His ideas upon fox hunting are also as remarkable, in their way, as his views upon the Eastern question. His premises may be sound or not, but there is clear-cut logic in his conclusion. Hence his opinion, repeated any time this dozen years, that it is practically all over with Turkey, and that if England is not going to the wall she must take Egypt, be thankful and let the rest arrange itself. Such opinions have not been hastily or rashly formed. They are the calm conclusions of a clear head, trained in that best of schools—the Foreign Office. After his youthful ramble in America, Mr. Labouchere became attached to the Legation, where, and in New York, he left the memory of many droll sayings and doings. In Europe he has served in at least half a dozen capitals as attache of embassy or legation, as the case might be, and has accumulated a vast knowledge of what Mr. Spencer Ponsonby-Fane would call his pave. He may not be, by a great deal, the most profound of living statesmen or diplomates; but he is emphatically a man of the world, who knows his Europe as well as America very well indeed. He knows the people with whom he has to deal, their past and present acts, and deeds with fatal accuracy, and few know how and where to plant a blow so effectually. In one especial respect he falls under the ban recently pronounced, or rather quoted, in the Lower House. He is a determined water drinker, and never touches wine when he can get the pure element. But he has no vows, and, water being unattainable, will drink anything he can get. Like a not alien spirit, minus the imagination, that of Lord Sherbrooke, Mr. Labonchere takes a keen interest in novelties of all kinds. He has not attained the proficiency of Lord Sherbrooke on the bicycle, but at one time seriously betook himself to the tricycle as a means of exercise and amusement. But it proved a fleeting fancy, this sudden passion for physical exercise. The most calm and collected of men, Mr. Labonchere finds his certain enjoyment in every kind of mental exercise. He openly confessed that he derived keen intellectual pleasure from the lawsuit in which he lately succeeded in completely checkmating his adversary. He also derives keen intellectual pleasure from following, with amazing keenness of scent, the various maneuvers by which entirely worthless stock may be brought upon the market. He also enjoyed himself as a 'besieged resident' in Paris during the dark hours between the lurid sunset of the Empire and the gusty dawn of the Republic. How he wrote from beleaguered Paris an amusing and graphic series of letters to the Daily News is too well known to need more than passing comment. The ironical side of Mr. Labonchere's character is thoroughly well understood by his friends, who, knowing him to be 'as straight as a shad's back,' are delighted when he appears in his favorite character as a fanfaron de vice."

TURKEYS FOR SALE.

Full blood bronzed Turkeys—will sell cheap either by pair or single fowl—they are pure breed.

THE FAMILY DOCTOR.

Chilblains.—In response to an inquiry in the British Medical Journal, the following suggestions for the treatment of chillblains are given: Have the patient wear large shoes which do not compress the feet. Touch the toes with nitrate of silver. Galvanism has always proved successful with one writer. Liniment of aconite is recommended. An ointment of lard and dry mustard rubbed in before the fire for twenty minutes will cure the trouble after a few applications. Paint the affected parts with flexible collodion to protect them from the air. Very hot water, applied with flannels or sponges, is efficacious. A strong solution of acetate of lead was highly recommended by Sir Astley Cooper. Sulphurous acid is useful in mild cases.

Acid Burns Cured by Magnesia.—Last year two French students were much burned about the face by the explosion of a retort filled with boiling sulphuric acid. They were at once taken to a druggist, M. Alanore, who covered their faces 2mm. thick with a soft paste made of calcined magnesia and water. In a few seconds, fissures appeared in the magnesian mask, and a new layer was then substituted. The patients were thus tended for five hours, after which the one hurt the least was able to wash his face, which merely showed some reddish spots. The other had his magnesian mask renewed during twenty-four hours. Suffering acutely at first, the students ceased to suffer in less than a quarter of an hour. Their faces have now no traces of burns.

The "Turkish Bath" says Hall's Journal of Health, "has been highly recommended as a cure for colds. With proper care afterward, there is no better or more effectual plan of cutting short a severe cold. It is not, however, necessary to go to a regular establishment to take such a bath. Any small comfortable room, where a good fire can be quickly made, will answer the purpose. In the early evening make a good fire in the stove and close the doors and windows, leaving only small openings for ventilation. Then let the patient put on his night clothes and lie down on a bed or sofa, or sit in an easy chair for an hour or more with the temperature of the room from 90 deg. to 100 deg. F. Afterward the room should be gradually cooled to about 70 deg., and the patient should go to bed and remain there till morning."

Hygienic Menus.—F. L. Oswald writes: By adopting an absolutely non-stimulating, chiefly vegetable, diet, combined with active exercise in the open air, the most dyspeptic glutton can cure himself in the course of a single season, and by the same means every boarding-school might become a dietetic sanitarium. The following list of hygienic menus is arranged in the order of their digestibility and wholesomeness: Milk, bread and fruit. Eggs (raw or whipped), bread and honey. Boiled eggs, bread and apples (Ancient Rome). Bread and butter, rice pudding, with sugar and fresh milk. Corn bread or roasted chestnuts, butter, honey and grapes (the usual diet of the long-lived Corsican mountaineers). Fish, butter, oatmeal porridge and fresh milk (Danish Islands). Pancakes, honey, or now molasses, poached eggs, boiled milk and bread pudding. Vegetable soups, baked beans, potatoes (baked or mashed), butter biscuits and apple dumplings. General rules—Avoid stimulants, alcoholic and narcotic drinks, tobacco and all pungent spices; be sparing in the use of animal food, especially in summer time; in midsummer eat fruit with every meal; let unprepared food (fresh milk, fruit, etc.) form a part of your daily fare; of unprepared aliments, as well as of all unspiced viands, the most palatable are the most wholesome; eat slowly and masticate your food; never eat if you have no appetite, and finish your last meal three hours before bedtime.

Where They Enforce the Law.

We admire the manner that the city laws are made and enforced by the city officials of Columbus, Ind. There, no boy under 21 years of age is allowed to loaf on the streets after 10 o'clock p. m., and any minor found in a saloon, both the saloonkeeper and minor are arrested and fined; consequently saloonkeepers do not allow minors to remain upon their premises. All persons, it matters not who they may be, making a noise on the street, are arrested at once. With such laws, and the strict enforcement thereof, peace and order is bound to prevail.—Cambridge City Times.

Teachers in England are now getting much higher salaries than they did a few years ago. Out of 12,981 certificated teachers, only 132 are receiving less than [illegible] a year; 232 teachers get $1,250 to [illegible], and 137 are in receipt of $1,500 and over.

Men Vipers.

A Santa Fe paper tells a tale which recalls Holmes' novel of "Elsie Venner." It says that there is resident at Guadalajara an individual having a scaly green skin, exactly like a viper's, which he sheds every year. It comes off in a single piece. He has no hair on his head. His sister, who died a short time ago, had similar peculiarities. Toward the close of her life this viperous skin encroached on her eyes, so that she could only see through a narrow aperture. The same fate overhangs her brother. These unhappy people are known as "viper men and women." These phenomena is attributed to the fact of their mother having (as is common in Cuba) eaten an excess of viper's flesh to cure a disease of the blood.

A. O. HALL, Superintendent.

The assignment of Davis Bros, of Hebron, was a great surprise to all who know them. They have always been energetic, business men, understood to be doing a prosperous business, and their misfortune arises from their being the victims of misplaced confidence as explained by their card in this issue. We voice the feeling of all this part of the county when we say we are heartily sorry that such serious trouble has overtaken them.

The colored population of Burlington is erecting several new structures in its part of the town. It may not be long till stone fronts will commence looming up in Bucktown, while that ward will be brilliantly illuminated each night by electric light. The citizen who holds down the extreme northwest corner of Burlington anticipates an early and enormous increase in the price of real estate in that quarter, when he will sell his property, and invest the proceeds in government bonds under a Democratic administration.

Mr. L. C. Schalk, of Delhi, Ohio, and Miss Mary E. Williams, daughter of Mr. C. C. Williams, of Constance, Ky., were quietly united in marriage last Wednesday at the home of the bride, by the Rev. Mr. Gunstrum, of Cincinnati. No elegant costume is needed to complete the lovliness of the bride, but it is something complimentary to her bridal attire to say that it was befitting her beauty. The bride's friends are beyond count, and the groom is a general favorite and widely acquainted. A magnificent supper followed the congratulations, and at an early hour Mr. and Mrs. Schalk took the train for their future home at Anderson's Ferry, O.

TO OUR FRIENDS AND CREDITORS:

This issue of the RECORDER will announce to you all our assignment. This will prove a surprise to all, and it is indeed a surprise to ourselves. This unlooked for and painful misfortune is brought upon us by the trouble and break-up of John R. Smith. Mr. Smith has been a large customer of ours for years, keeping a number of tenants and sending them to us with orders. To all appearances he did a large and prosperous business, paid promptly, and we were glad to have his trade. We were also in the habit of indorsing for Mr. Smith whenever he needed money from bank. He took care of these notes when they matured, did not allow them to give us any trouble, and we felt that we were not taking any great risk in thus assisting him. But when his trouble came upon him, it appears that four of these notes were in bank, bearing our indorsement. One of these notes fell due about ten days since, and we paid it, hoping that Mr. Smith's affairs would take some turn for the better. The other three notes fall due within the next two weeks, and we can not pay them and at the same time take care of our own business. Therefore we feel it due and just to our creditors to make an honest assignment for their benefit. We trust you will not feel too hard and unkind toward us, for we are doing what we believe to be best. We shall faithfully work with our assignee and make an earnest effort to pay every dollar we justly owe, and we trust that our creditors will not lose much, if, indeed, anything, by us. Very Truly,

DAVIS BROTHERS.

NEIGHBORHOOD NEWS.

The school-house at Pleasant Valley was crowded last Thursday night at the spelling. Big, little, old and young participated.

Hebron.

Wheat is looking fine.
Turkeys are selling at 6½ to 7c.
John Rouse has gone to Kansas.
Corn crop short, and all gathered.
Chas. Clore will go west the first of next month.
John and Laura Hicks have got the scarlet fever.
The scarlet fever has caused the Hebron school to stop.
W. C. Rouse is the champion checker player of Hebron.
The farmers have sold about all the hay they have to spare.
Jacob Tanner and choir are practicing for a Christmas festival.

McVille.

Turkeys failed to make their appearance in our little village Thanksgiving.
D. G. Rice is still very poorly, he is confined to the house most of the time.
Henry Griffith will erect a new carpenter shop on the corner of his lot in a few days.
Ben Kelly shipped a fine lot of apples from the Bellevue wharf, last week on the Gen. Pike.
The protracted meeting at the Bellevue Baptist church still continues with a few additions.
The Aurora tombstone company crossed the ferry here last Friday with monuments for the deceased wives of S. P. Berkshire and W. H. Ryle in the Bellevue cemetery.

Scattersville.

At last we find a little news worth gathering
Everybody done killing hogs and are now living high.
Mrs. Ben Rice is visiting her son, Perry at Covington, this week.
Most all the stock in this part of the country is looking very well at present.
All our farmers are done gathering their corn, which did not yield very largely.
The boys are having all the parties before the winter fairly begins. Go it while you are young.
John Mitchell, sr. of Gunpowder is going to lease his farm on the creek, and move to the farm he bought on the hill.
Our young fox hunter, John D. Mitchell, with the Duncan, boys of Rabbit Hash, captured a large fox on Thanksgiving, after digging most of the day.
Very little tobacco is being stripped on account of the dry cold weather, Those who have been stripping, say the tobacco is better than expected. No buyers yet.

Waterloo.

Mrs. Joshua Rice, who has been quite sick for sometime, is slowly recovering.
R. C. Rice and wife, of your town have been here the past week, nursing the sick.
The farmers of this community are done gathering corn and are now hauling wood, preparing for winter.
Little Johnny Green, who has been seriously sick with typhoid fever, we are glad to report convalescent.
Scott Wingate has moved to McVille to occupy the property purchased by himself and brother-in-law, James Anderson.
Mrs. D. M. Snyder, of this place, has two roosters named in honor of the late Democratic and Republican candidates for president.
Our town being strictly Democratic, we have passed through the campaign without much excitement or any black eyes or broken bones.
Mr. Tony Rue's little girl, age ten years, was recently stricken with St. Vitus Dance, and is in a very sad condition. Dr. J. M. Grant is the attending physician.
Leonard Clore has moved to his farm in the bottoms and given his farm up to the management of his children. Lewis Clore now occupies the homestead at this place.
The school in district No. 7, taught by J. T. Marshall has averaged 30 pupils the first half of the term. This speaks well for both teacher and pupils, as there are only about 60 enrolled in the census report.

Beaver Lick.

The past season has been of many disadvantages to the tenantry, or renting yeomanry of this locality especially. Their efforts have been greatly frustrated by the unfavorableness of the cropping season, their tobacco and corn were cut short by the drouth, and now merchants who have furnished them, becoming alarmed at the low prices being paid for farm produce, are adopting the cash system, thus utterly shutting out the poorer classes. Kennedy & Krutz have stuck up "Terms Cash," conspicuously before their patrons, and others of the mercantile fraternity intimate pursuing a similar course, believing we suppose what is really true; that a refusal of credit is often a friend in disguise.

Mr. Vaughn, recently of Florence X-Roads, is now running the Normansville flour and grist mill, James Kite attends to the steam department, for which he seems rightly adapted.

O. P. Kite and James Dudgeon have just returned from a pleasant trip down the Southern road to Sunbright, Tenn. They give flattering reports of the golden opportunities there awaiting whoever will possess himself of them. They talk of migrating thither at their earliest convenience.

Thanksgiving was observed in Beaver with the utmost solemnity. We said not a word; we slaughtered not a gobbler, but quietly we passed it by. Beaver observes rigid ceremony even at the peril of her reputation for elegant prosperity in matters of moment, as well as insignificance. Verily Beaver hath tone in all her workings.

We are glad to report that the graded road leading from Beaver to Walton has been let to contractors, farmers along the road, to suit parties, and many of them have already completed their portion of the road. This is progress and speaks well for the enterprise of the citizens along the route who have labored to build a good road.

A turnpike road from this place to Big Bone Springs is now prominently in order. Citizens along the line, what do you all say? BILL LLOYD.

Mortimer Collins' Little Friend.

Collins loved to notice and make friends with the birds and "small deer" that lived around him, and often a pleasant intercourse was carried on between them. Like Thoreau, though in a lesser degree, he knew how to make friends with the feathered folk that built their nests in his trees; and the intimacy seems to have proved agreeable on both sides. Here is a bit of cheerful gossip about a winter guest:

"I have made a very pleasant acquaintance—a young and vivacious person, musical and garrulous, grateful for small kindnesses, and never a bore. He is, to avoid the mysterious, a robin redbreast—a young cock, whose waistcoat has not attained its fullest scarlet nor his song its complete music. There are lots of them on my lawn, in various stages of adolescence; but this little beauty got into my back-room one morning, and flew in a fright against the window when I entered, and fell on the floor, half stunned. I picked him up, and got him to drink a little water, and put him on the grass. He soon recovered, and now he follows me all over the place. He waits to welcome me the first thing in the morning. He perches on my knee as I sit writing on the lawn, and twitters out a sweet, low song. He is very inquisitive about every thing new that comes out when we encamp under the trees, examining work-baskets, writing-baskets, straw hats, with an evident thirst for knowledge. He comes on my writing-table to pick up crumbs, then suddenly darts away in a hurry to seize something more enticing—a fat spider, or a daddy longlegs, or a butterfly. There is something curious in the friendship of this feathered atom born out of gratitude."

Mrs. Collins adds in a note: "He continued to be friendly until the spring of the following year, and spent the greater part of the winter in the house, thereby causing great jealousy to two other robins, who were also favorites, who used to watch for him to come out of the house and attack him.—The Spectator.

In a Tight Place.

A young Fond du Lac lawyer was out calling on a lady, when a young man and another young lady called, and the young lawyer thought it would be cunning to get down behind the lounge and not let them know he was there, and surprise them by bobbing up serenely from below when the time came. They came in and the first thing they asked was for the young lawyer, who had told the young man he would be there that evening. Then they began to talk about him, discussed the size of his feet, which they claimed were large, and the size of his head, which they asserted was child's size. He perspired and they talked about his mashing qualities, how he mashed a girl that worked in a laundry, and the opinion was expressed that he was a regular flitt. Then they talked about his family, and he tried to stuff his ears. Just then a little terrier belonging to the girl's brother came in the room, and somebody said "rats," and told the dog to hunt for them, and the dog went under the lounge and began to growl and shake something, and there was a sound of revelry by night. The other young man and two girls rushed out of the room, and the lawyer got up on his feet, pulling the dog up near his suspenders by the teeth, and the dog shook, and the young man yelled, and presently the girl's father came in and seeing the dog trying to hold what he supposed was a burglar, he took an old hair cloth covered chair and was going to brain the burglar, when the young man told who he was, and the father unlocked the dog's teeth, after he had remembered the combination, and the young lawyer took himself in his hand and went away. He won't speak to the young people now, and it is said he will sue the owner of the dog for arron or alpaca, or some Latin phrase. The worst thing in the world is to be attacked by conversation or a dog, when you are not looking.—Peck's Sun.

Etchings.

There are some mighty sensitive natures in this world. There was that Quaker boy, for instance—Ferdinand Fisher, aged ten years—who hanged himself because his mother asked him to set the table for supper. He was a tender plant, and when his mother said, "Come, Ferdy, put on the cups and saucers," the cruel words almost crushed his youthful heart. But he continued reading "The Boy Counterfeiter," in the "Boys' Own Paralyzer, and had just read the chapter where the "Boy" kills two police officers, and escapes with a smile on his face and a pistol in each hand, when his mother again called to him, "Come, now, Ferdy, set the table, that's a good boy." Then the boy's whole nature rebelled, and he went out and hanged himself.—Norristown Herald.

PLAGUE-STRICKEN.

Dying For Want of Food and Water.

A Fearful Account of the Kentucky and Virginia Epidemic.

LOUISVILLE, November 29.—Arthur H. Loomis, a traveling representative of a New York firm, is in the city to-day, having just returned from a trip through the plague-stricken district of Eastern Kentucky. Mr. Loomis said: "I was four days in Martin County without disposing of a single article. People are absolutely crazy; they have no use for anything but coffins. I know of instances where whole families have died within a week, where neighborhoods have been swallowed up in a grave, where one man has survived to bury his family and his friends, and then been found dead, with no living creature near him, except, in some cases, a faithful dog. Flocks of sheep and droves of cattle that used to browse on hillsides and along the range of the Cumberland now lay dead and rotting. White pebbles glisten on the bottom of creek beds. Wells and cisterns are drained to the bottom, and springs are no longer to be relied upon for supply of water. The ground is literally parched, and where vegetation formerly bloomed luxuriantly there is nothing but decay. Thousands are said to have died within the past two weeks. It is very evident that the chief agent of death is starvation. The people in those districts are almost without communication with the outside world. An occasional drummer, like myself, strays among them once a year, a few of the most prosperous visit some large cities once in a lifetime. A good season brings with it bountiful crops. Wool and other native products are rudely manufactured into clothing. But when crops fail, then the order of things is reversed. I am speaking now of backwoods neighborhoods, where the plague has raged with greatest fatality. I learned while in Martin County that the crop yield for two successive seasons had been a failure. Natives are without money, and without means to purchase bread. The shutting-off of the water supply has brought to the surface a poisonous liquid. Famished for water, the people drank, and the consequence was death. The first symptoms are violent gripings, and after this a raging headache. Hot fever ensues, and the patient usually lingers two days, suffering mental agony before death. Relief has recently been dispatched to Martin from neighboring counties. ... there was a light rainfall, with prospects of continued falling weather, and the opinion prevails that the plague has passed through its most dangerous stages and is now on the wane. During the last two days of my stay I heard of very few deaths.

INDIAN SCHOOLS.

Increasing Civilization Among the Children of the Forest.

WASHINGTON, November 29.—Mr. Teller, Secretary of the Interior, devotes an important part of his annual report, just published, to the condition and welfare of the American Indian. In his last annual report he gave it as his opinion "that it is quite possible, with wise and judicious treatment of the Indian question, to prevent the recurrence of hostilities between the Indian and his white neighbor that has marked nearly every year of our history." The past year has been one of peace among the Indians, and no outbreaks have occurred. All the tribes are at peace with each other and with their white neighbors. During the past year new buildings have been erected at several of the agencies for the accommodation of children in the boarding schools. Five new boarding schools and twelve new day schools have been added to the list of schools in successful operation. There are now eighty-one boarding schools, seventy-six day schools and six industrial or manual labor schools under Government control. Fourteen boarding and four day schools are supplied with teachers and other employes by some one of the various religious denominations, the Government paying a stipulated price for the care and education of the children therein. This course has being necessitated by lack of sufficient appropriations to provide for all the children willing to receive an education. The amount paid is somewhat less than the average cost per capita of children maintained in Government schools. There are also twenty-three schools maintained by churches and associations without expense to the Government, and to the support of which the Government contributes nothing. Three new industrial schools have been completed and put in successful operation during the last year. One at Chilocco, Indian Territory, with a capacity of 150 children; one at Lawrence, Kan., with a capacity for 300 children, and one at Genoa, Nebraska, with a capacity for 150.

The Buzzard Gang.

LANCASTER, PA., November 29.—The posse in pursuit of the thieves who robbed Shiffer's jewelry store, at Bowmansville, last night, supposed to be the Buzzard gang came upon them at the edge of a swamp this afternoon, after a chase of twenty miles. The thieves were four in number, Abe Buzzard, Joe Buzzard and two others. They were fired upon. Finally Joe Buzzard cut off from the rest, was captured and lodged in jail.

"Slaughter of the Innocents."

LOUISVILLE, KY., November 28.—Herman Linde, the Shakespearean reader, while looking through the Louisville Art Gallery discovered a picture which he says is Rembrandt's "Slaughter of the Innocents," and purchased it from its owner, Robert Magness, for $100. How the celebrated picture came there is a mystery.

Persecution of Christians in China.

HONG KONG, November 28.—The Catholic mission here has advices that the Viceroy of Canton has closed all chapels there, and also razed the entire Catholic settlement. A missionary, arrived at Canton from the Interior, states that Christians of Western provinces are fugitives in the wilds of Tonquin. He also states that the Chinese authorities of Northern provinces have issued a decree ordering the expulsion of all missionaries. Upon appeal to the higher authorities at Pekin, however, the decree was rescinded, and the missionaries taken under the protection of the Chinese General Government.

Two Skeletons Unearthed.

NEW YORK, November 30.—Workmen recently dug up in a cellar at Richmond Hill, Long Island, a woman's skeleton, whose skull showed marks of a bullet hole, and the skull of an infant. A few days ago the Coroner received an anonymous letter, evidently written by a woman, which stated that in 1859 there resided in the place a man, wife, child, and the wife's sister. The family was broken up by the wife's charges of too great intimacy between the husband and sister. One night the wife and child disappeared. Soon after, the husband and sister-in-law went away, and were never heard of after. The writer asks the Coroner to find trace of them.

Howgate Remnants.

WASHINGTON, November 30.—The Government has managed to pick up $20,000 out of the sale of some property which belonged to Howgate. This reduces the indebtedness to something over $80,000.

Poisoned Herself and Children.

VANDALIA, ILL., November 28.—It is reported here that Nancy Miller, a widow living south of here, in ill health and destitution, yesterday poisoned herself and two children, all three dying.

Cleveland Declines a Banquet.

PHILADELPHIA, November 28.—Governor Cleveland declined a grand banquet at the Academy of Music, tendered by a number of prominent Democrats.

U. S. TREASURER'S REPORT.

The Country's Income and Expenditures Decreased.

WASHINGTON, November 28.—The annual report of the Treasurer of the United States shows the net revenues of the Government were less than 1883, by $49,767,712. The decrease in receipts from Customs was $19,639,007; in receipts from internal revenue, $23,134,296, and in receipts from miscellaneous sources, $8,849,248. From the aggregate of these items should be deducted an increase of $1,854,840 in receipts from sales of public lands, leaving a net reduction as stated above. The net expenditures aggregated $244,126,244, a decrease from the amount in 1883 of $21,281,893. The surplus applicable to reduction of public debt amounted to $104,393,625, a decrease of $28,485,818 from that of the previous year. The items of expenditures showing a decrease are as follows: On account of the War Department, $9,481,779; Interior Department, $11,469,906; interest on public debt $4,361,852. There was an increase of $2,242,411 in the expenditures account, civil and miscellaneous, and $2,009,164 in expenditures account of the Navy Department. Disbursing officers of the United States had to their credit on the books of the Treasury at the close of the year $32,463,960. The statement of assets and liabilities for September 30, 1884, shows the general balance was reduced from $163,232,463, in 1883, to $149,535,062, in 1884, a reduction of $13,707,400. The aggregate amount of gold and silver coin and bullion held by the Treasury was increased from $352,510,809 in 1883, to $395,216,297 in 1884; an increase of $42,705,487. The gross assets were increased from $456,119,817, in 1883, to $519,690,249; an increase of $63,570,431 from November 1, 1883, to November 1, 1884. The reserve was decreased $12,752,255 or from $160,822,545 to $148,070,290. There were nominally outstanding at the close of the fiscal year, silver certificates amounting to $120,891,691, an increase of $32,274,800 during the year; the amount held by the Treasury was increased from $15,906,145 to $23,384,680, thus leaving actually outstanding $97,507,011, an actual increase of $24,886,325. The amount of standard silver dollars coined to September 30, 1884, was $182,380,829, of which the Treasury held $142,349,409. Of this amount $97,094,881 was for the redemption of silver certificates outstanding. The amount in circulation was $39,801,953, or about 21.8 per cent. of the total coinage. As usual, the amount outstanding reached the highest point in December, when it exceeded $41,000,000, an aggregate never before reached. The decrease to June was not as great as in previous years probably owing to the scarcity of $1 and $2 notes, and on September 30 the amount was $680,717 greater than same date, 1883.

A Horrible Tale of the Coast.

PHILADELPHIA, November 28.—A terrible tale comes from Lewes, Del., the pilot town of the Delaware Bay. Last Monday three men left the pilot boat Turley in a skiff to put another pilot on the steamer Pennsylvania, bound for Philadelphia. The weather was thick and the sea heavy, and in returning the men lost the pilot boat, which beat back and forth for them in vain. It was dark, and they had no compass on board. They could only keep the boat before the wind and trust to luck. The weather was bitterly cold; they had not taken their winter clothing, the spray froze upon their oil-skins, and with no water or provisions they were in a terrible plight. When they had been afloat twenty-four hours two of them became delirious and threw overboard everything that was loose in the boat. About midnight on Tuesday one of them tried to kill Bertrand, the only one who kept his senses, threatening to drink his blood, but fell exhausted before reaching Bertrand, at whom he lunged with his knife. The next day, Wednesday, the two survivors fell on the dead body and ate some of the flesh. Then, feeling refreshed, they lay under the gunwales of the boat until they were sighted and rescued by a schooner and brought to Philadelphia. Bertrand used a rubber boot to bail with and got his feet frozen. They were sixty hours with nothing to drink but salt water, and no food but their companions' flesh.

Across the Atlantic.

LONDON, November 30.—The relations of Lorne and Louise are a subject of much comment. The scheme of making Minister Lowell Professor of English Literature at Oxford is still being discussed. A reported letter stating that he is determined to return to America is not credited. Gladstone's redistribution scheme is said to contain startling proposals. A rumor is revived that Ismael Pasha will be reinstated as Khedive of Egypt. There is as intense feeling against Germans in London as against Chinese in California, on account of their lowering the standard of wages. The Congo Committee made a unanimous report in favor of free trade. Its adoption by the conference is thought certain. The American delegates are securing important advantages. The German Government is about to build a railway to connect the Transvaal with the coast. Monster meetings of natives in Bombay presented a testimonial to Lord Ripon, the retiring Governor. This would seem to contradict the report of a feeling of mutiny so far as that section is concerned, at least. The Mahdi continues calling on Gordon to surrender. He answers with shot and shell.

In Luck.

DANVILLE, PA., November 30.—Two men digging roots on an island in the Susquehanna River struck a metal box containing coins amounting to nearly $47,000, including $16,000 in Mexican silver dollars, $30,000 in gold doubloons, and nearly $1,000 in small silver coins.

Payne, the Boomer, Dead.

WELLINGTON, KAS., November 28.—Captain David L. Payne, the famous leader of the Oklahoma boomers, died suddenly here this morning while at breakfast at the Hotel de Barnerd. He addressed a meeting last night, and was seemingly in his usual robust health when he entered the dining-room this morning. While partaking of breakfast he was observed to lean forward and utter a subdued sound, as if from slight suffocation, and then dropped from his chair to the floor, and expired instantly. His sudden taking off created no little sensation here, and profound sorrow among his co-workers and followers in attempting to settle in Indian Territory.

Iron Mills Starting Up.

PITTSBURGH, November 28.—The puddling and horseshoe departments of Schoenberger's rolling-mill, which have been closed for some time, resumed operations this morning. Chess, Cook & Co.'s mill, after a shut-down of several weeks, will start up Monday.

The Illinois Contested Election.

CHICAGO, November 28.—The Illinois State Canvassing Board decided that the testimony in the Leman-Brand contest showed Leman, Republican, elected. General Logan will succeed himself.

A Great Mistake.

SYRACUSE, N. Y., November 28.—Last evening Norris Eaton, a farmer of the town of Manlia, who has been annoyed by skunks stealing chickens, shot at a black spot in a straw stack, and killed an unknown man hidden there.

MONTGOMERY, N. Y., November 30.—John S. Sammons, an eccentric farmer living near this place, fell on to a red-hot stove while in a paralytic fit, and was seriously burned.

LONDON, November 28.—The bark Lake Bruce was in collision with the steamer Durango in the English Channel. The Durango sank. Twenty persons were drowned.

APPEAL FROM ABROAD.

The U. S. Consuls at Rouen and Berne to the State Department.

Russian Wheat Crowding American Grain Out of Germany and Switzerland.

WASHINGTON, December 1.—The U. S. Consul at Rouen writes to the State Department that under a mistaken prejudice, on account of pretended difficulties of approach, Rouen is excluded from the charter parties of the Northern American ports. Vessels drawing upwards of twenty feet, he says, frequently arrive at Rouen laden with wheat, rice and corn from India, Brazil and the Black Sea, but none from the United States. Rouen not only supplies its local market, but is enabled to supply it to a million inhabitants of Paris more directly and economically than any other port, both by rail and water. The Consul says: "I can not avoid referring to the injury which the Produce Exchanges of the cities of Baltimore, New York and Philadelphia impose upon themselves and their countrymen by neglecting to remove this embargo, but I feel convinced that it is now continued only from an oversight as to its existence. I feel assured that each month of its continuance deprives the American farmer of an immense outlet for his grain, and consequently of a considerable profit." Mr. M. J. Cramer, U. S. Consul General at Berne, Switzerland, reports to the Secretary of State that Russian wheat is now driving American wheat out of the markets of Switzerland and South Germany. "The Russian wheat dealers," he says, "strain every nerve to supply the markets of Central and Southwestern Europe. They are supported in their endeavor by the low cost of transportation, both by railway and by sea and river steamers, in consequence of which Russian wheat is offered at a very low price. These circumstances cause a constant increase in the export of wheat from Russia into Italy, South Germany and Switzerland via Genoa, Marseilles, Antwerp and Rotterdam, so that this country is now almost entirely supplied with Russian wheat. If American wheat is to regain command of these markets, both its price and the cost of its transportation, Mr. Cramer says, must be reduced.

XLVIII. CONGRESS.

Second Session.

WASHINGTON, December 1.—SENATE.—Promptly at noon the President of the Senate called the body to order, and prayer was offered. Bills introduced and referred: By Mr. Cullom—To prohibit distinctions being made in the military service of the United States against any class of American citizens. Also to enable officers of the army promoted for gallantry and distinguished services in the war of the rebellion, to be retired with rank and full pay of the rate to which promoted. Also to facilitate promotion throughout the army by retiring from active service, upon their own application, officers of the army who served in the war of the rebellion; also to authorize lighting of navigable rivers of the United States with electricity; also, to authorize the increase of the capital stock of the Commercial National Bank of Chicago. By Mr. Dolph—To prevent obstruction of the navigable waters of the United States, and to protect the public works against trespass or injury. Mr. Ingalls offered a resolution, which was agreed to, instructing the Committee on Public Lands to report such legislation as necessary to authorize the Secretary of the Interior summarily to remove all fences illegally constructed on the public domain. The President's message was read at 1:35, after which the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE.—At noon the Speaker's gavel called the House to order. Mr. Holman presented the credentials of Mr. Shively, member-elect from the Thirteenth Indiana District, to succeed Mr. Calkins, resigned, and that gentleman took the oath of office. The House took a recess of fifteen minutes. At 1:40 the President's message was received and immediately read. The message was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the State of the Union, and with accompanying documents ordered printed. Mr. Hutchins, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported a bill making temporary provision for the naval service. Referred to the committee of the whole. Formal announcement was made of the death of Representatives Duncan and Evins, and the House adjourned.

Decision in the Telephone Suit.

NEW YORK, December 1.—Judge Wallace, of the U. S. Circuit Court, New York, has announced a decision in favor of the American Bell Telephone Company, in the suit brought against the People's Telephone Company, to enjoin the use by the latter of its apparatus. The suit, which involved a larger amount of money than any previous suit in the U. S. Courts, has been pending for years.

Determined War on the Buzzards.

LANCASTER, PA., December 1.—Early this morning the Honeybrook, Goodville and Boumansville horsethief detective associations, together with fifty farmers of Brecknock Township, all mounted and armed, resumed their search in the Welsh Mountains for the Buzzard band of thieves. They intend to keep up the search from day to day until the outlaws are either captured or driven from the country.

Arrested for Embezzling $48,000.

BOSTON, MASS., December 1.—Friday last Charles F. Jones, of San Francisco, was arrested in a case in which Charles A. Gregory, of Chicago, is plaintiff. The suit was upon his notes amounting to about $48,000 now, it is alleged, the property of Gregory; but Jones, it is alleged, has converted them to his own use. Bail was fixed at $10,000, and being unable to procure it, Jones was locked up.

Did Not Know it Was Loaded.

WOODS RUN, PA., December 1.—Yesterday George Rankin, while carelessly handling a shotgun, accidently shot and killed his aged mother. The young man, who did not know the gun was loaded, is frantic with grief.

Appropriation Estimates.

WASHINGTON, December 1.—The estimates of the House Committee on Appropriations for the year 1886 are an increase of $43,462,054 over the estimates of the present year, and $82,816,077 over the appropriations.

Harvard Will Prohibit Football.

BOSTON, December 1.—The Athletic Committee will report to the Faculty to-morrow, prohibiting football by Harvard students, as brutal and ungentlemanly.

GLASS LEGS.

How a Physician Cured a Patient of a Strange Hallucination.

"Hallucination!" said Dr. Jenks. "Knew a man once who thought his legs were made of glass. Lived down East. An old, wealthy, dyspeptic bachelor. I think the idea about his legs was the result of dyspepsia. Anyway he was so afraid of having his legs broken that he cried out whenever any one approached the bed. There was an old doctor in the vicinity, who was half mad himself, and this old fellow determined to cure him. One day he called and asked the old man to come out for a drive. Of course the old fellow was horrified, but the doctor insisted, and he at last consented to go. A bed was made up in the doctor's conveyance, and the dyspeptic carried out and tenderly laid in it. They drove off and about, until over a hill a little distance off they saw the stage coming.

"Then the doctor, by a dexterous twist of the lines, overturned the buggy and tumbled the old man out into the middle of the road. Of course he cried out that he was done for, but the doctor righted his buggy and drove off, leaving him scrambling in the middle of the road, and quite unable to move, owing to his glass legs. Suddenly he was alarmed by a shout, and saw the stage come tearing down the slope, heading straight for him. He gesticulated, but the doctor had fixed things with the driver, and the stage came right along. Well, the old fellow stood it until the stage was only a few feet away. Then he jumped up and ran—ran clean back to town—and was never bothered with glass legs again."—Detroit Times.

HANGED BY A SINGLE HAIR.

Explanation of the Execution of Wasielewsky in California.

An explanation of the hanging of the murderer, Wasielesky, at San Jose, by means of a single hair, is as follows: The gallows trap on which the condemned stood had double doors, swinging from the center to both sides. These doors, constituting the trap, were held in position so as to form a part of the platform of the gallows by a spring bolt. This bolt was sprung thus opening the man-weighted trap, by the falling of a fourteen-pound weight. The weight was suspended by a small cord, which came up to the rail on the gallows back of the condemned. The cord, instead of being at once and simply fastened, was wound around a "barrel." This "barrel" was lying in a horizontal position, parallel with the rail and held a few inches above it by upright supports at either end. The cord holding the weight was wound around the barrel until the resisting power of the friction almost held the weight. This "almost" was arrived at by previous experiments, until it was reduced to such a fine point that the additional strength of a single hair was enough to suspend the weight; or, more properly, prevent the cord from slipping. One end of the hair was fastened to the cord and the other end to a screw driven in the barrel. When the hair was cut the cord slipped around the barrel, the fourteen-pound weight dropped ten feet, springing the trap-bolt, and Wasielewsky shot through the opening. It is said that Judge Belden, who tried Wasielewsky, suggested this peculiar scheme of retributive justice, but the details were worked out by Sheriff Branham. The hair which was used came from a lock of the murdered woman's hair.—San Francisco Bulletin.

A QUEER CUSTOM.

One Way in Which Houses Are Decorated in an Italian City.

We soon pass an immense house which was once a palace, but is now used for other purposes. Looking up we see that one of the great windows in the second story is open, and a lady is sitting at it. She is dressed in very bright, though somewhat old-fashioned, attire. Flowers and vines cluster inside the window, and there is a hanging cage with a bird. As we stop and look at her, the lady does not move, and in a few minutes we perceive that the window, the lady, the open shutters, the sash, the flowers and the cage are all painted on the wall in a space where you would naturally expect to find a window. This used to be a favorite way of decorating houses in Italy, and in Genoa we shall frequently see these painted windows, some closed and some partly open, some with one person looking out, some with two, and some with none. The lady at this window has sat and looked out on the street for hundreds of years. Under her window, into the great entrance of the palace, used to pass nobles and princes. Now there are shops in the lower part of the palace, and you can have your shoes mended by a cobbler in the court-yard. —Frank R. Stockton, in St. Nicholas.

Floating Palaces.

Transatlantic passenger steamers ship about 14,000 pounds of fresh meat for each trip, twenty tons of ice, 1,400 pounds of butter and 3,000 cigars. On a vessel of 5,000 tons 7,000 napkins are used every trip, 2,000 sheets and 3,000 towels. Different colors are used on the upholstery and furniture every day, because of the relief a change of scene affords to persons who become sea-sick, and also owing to the additional freshness of the atmosphere of the cabins thus obtained. The steamer is newly painted on the outside from stem to stern every voyage, and to do this work, together with the repairing and cleaning of the upholstery, from 200 to 400 men are employed. The washing is all done at the end of each voyage. In the first cabin of a first-class steamer there is $40,000 worth of silverware.—Chicago Herald.

Pays Her Honest Debts First.

Dr. Kimball, of Saco, Maine, one of the oldest and most widely-known practioners in York County, tells a good story of himself. He had attended an old gentleman during a lingering illness, and about a year after his decease sent his bill, which amounted to a considerable sum, to the widow. He repeated the process three times without eliciting a reply, and then called. He was put off from time to time until patience ceased to be a virtue, and then he again called, with grim determination of his character. "Come, my good woman," said he, when the delinquent appeared; "I have waited long enough, and must have my money." Fixing upon him a look of withering contempt, and brandishing her broom in his face she replied: "You've been here three times for your money, but I'll pay my honest debts, I thank ye, before I pay my doctor's bills." The good physician was so pleased with the logic of his debtor that he receipted the bill on the spot.

—The Pennsylvania Railroad has been trying the experiment of testing the amount of coal used by locomotives at different rates of speed, and have demonstrated the fact that a locomotive running a train at usual express time, used 6,725 pounds of coal, while a slow train running the same distance, with the same cars, at twelve miles per hour, used only 4,420 pounds, a saving of 2,305 pounds, which goes to show that it does not pay to run fast trains, not only on account of the waste of coal, but also on account of the wear and tear of machinery and rails.

—The reputed site of the Garden of Eden, at the junction of the Tigris and Euphrates, is now a sterile tract, where the only vegetable life consists of a clump of date trees, near a very small and dirty village called Gurna, at which the Turks maintain a garrison and telegraph office. The inhabitants point out to strangers the Tree of Knowledge—a most sickly specimen, bearing a small green berry which certainly causes even a goat to turn away in disgust.

Woman's Suffering and Relief.

Those languid, tiresome sensations, causing you to feel scarcely able to be on your feet; that constant drain that is taking from your system all its former elasticity; driving the bloom from your cheeks; that continual strain upon your vital forces, rendering you irritable and fretful, can easily be removed by the use of that marvelous remedy, Hop Bitters. Irregularities and obstructions of your system are relieved at once, while the special causes of periodical pain are permanently removed. None receive so much benefit, and none are so profoundly grateful, and show such an interest in recommending Hop Bitters as women.

BOONE COUNTY RECORDER.

VOLUME X. BURLINGTON, KY., WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 10, 1884. NUMBER 6.

TOPICS OF THE DAY.

A FOOLISH Housatonic man wagered his gravestone on the late election and lost. His grave will be unmarked.

"THE white man must go," seems to be the war whoop of the Cherokees now. Their Council has passed a law excluding all white men from the Nation.

AN elegant fabric just imported is a delicate pink satin, embossed with snowballs, in a heavy raised pattern of chenille and pearl beads, and only costs forty dollars a yard.

THE car-coupling brakesman still carries his hand in a sling notwithstanding the fact that there were 22,822 patents granted to American inventors during the last fiscal year.

THE highest point of land in Pennsylvania, according to the State Geological Survey, is Keysey's Ridge Summit, in Somerset County, its height being 2,843 feet above the level of the sea.

THE phrase, "paint the town red," says a showman, originated in the minstrel business, and referred to posting a place with red show bills. Its birth having been determined, we anxiously wait for its death and burial.

THE building of the pedestal for Bartholdi's great statute of "Liberty Enlightning the World" has stopped for the want of funds. All plans so far tried to raise money have failed. Something over $100,000 is yet needed to put it in shape.

ACCORDING to Lieutenant Greely's account of the nineteen men who perished in the Arctic regions, all but one were smokers, and the exception was the last to die. The seven survivors were non-smoking men. This is an argument for anti-tobacconists.

A GREAT many of the oysters in Fishing Bay are unmarketable this season on account of green gills. They do not die when attacked with the disease, but look bad and are refused by dealers. People of the neighborhood refuse to eat them.

MAHOGANY, in almost every kind of fancy and ornamental wood work and the manufacture of furniture, is becoming fashionable again. To a great extent it is taking the place of black walnut. Cuba and Mexico are the principal sources of supply.

OYSTERS and terrapin are regularly shipped from New York every week to a number of English noblemen, including the Duke of Southerland and Lord Randolph Churchill. In return turbot, mullet and other fish are sent to this country "specially consigned."

A EUROPEAN paper gives the ages of reigning Monarchs. Queen Victoria is in her 65th year: King Christian of Denmark, 66; the Emperor of Austria, 54; King Leopold of Belgium, 49; the Sultan of Turkey, 42; King Oscar of Sweden, 55; Louis of Portugal, 46; Humbert of Italy, 40; William, Emperor of Germany, 87, and President Grevy of France, 71.

WILLIAM G. HUNTER, of Fair Haven, Conn., has in his possession a horseshoe weighing nearly five pounds. It is eight and three-quarter inches in its greatest breadth and nine and three-quarter inches long. The shoe was found among a lot of scrap iron at the wire mill and was presented to Mr. Hunter by one of the employes. The owner says the shoe was worn by a heavy English draught horse.

THE aluminum point of the capstone of the Washington Monument has been successfully cast in Philadelphia. It is a small pyramid about seven inches high and about five inches wide at the base, the apex being a point sharp enough to prick flesh. This is said to be the largest casting of aluminum that has ever been made. The lightning rod, which runs through the capstone, is to be fastened to the bottom of this cap and it will practically be the end of the lightning rod.

MATTHEW BRADY, who has just been fined £100 for illicit distillation in Dublin, has solved a great historic doubt by giving into the hands of the police the following recipe for the manufacture of Irish potheen. Materials for ten gallons: Ten ounces of prunes or French plums, one and a quarter ounces of green tea, two ounces of orris root, one-quarter ounce of angelica root, one-half ounce of sulphuric acid, and one-quarter ounce of cream of tartar, tincture of vanilla and essence of almond.

THE Philadelphia Council has before it a measure to check the sale of pernicious literature. The bill provides that persons shall not sell the articles mentioned on any public street without a permit from the Mayor. They are forbidden to dispose of or exhibit any obscene book, magazine, pamphlet, newspaper, story-paper or picture, or anything devoted principally to the publication of criminal news, detailed police reports or accounts of criminal deeds.

IN the recently discovered cave on Lookout Mountain was found a wonderful flow of icy, crystal water. The cave has been bought for twenty thousand dollars by Miss Maude St. Pierre, who, it is thought, represents a company with a capital stock of over $100,000. The intention of the company is to construct a large reservoir in a solid sandstone formation. From this reservoir large supply pipes will be laid and Chattanooga will be given the finest water for drinking purposes enjoyed by any town in the country.

TRAIN ROBBERY

Under the Very Shadow of Little Rock.

The Conductor Fired Upon, the Safe Rifled and the Passengers Relieved of Money, Etc.

LITTLE ROCK, ARK., December 7.—The passenger train on the Little Rock, Mississippi River and Texas Railroad was stopped at ten o'clock last night at Fouche Switch, two or three miles below this city, and boarded by five masked men, who quickly captured all the train men and side-tracked the train. Conductor Rice was fired at five times but unhurt. The express-messenger, Honecatt, was also fired upon, but escaped injury. The newsboy and a negro jumped from the rear end of the car and plunged into the woods amid a shower of bullets. The safe in the express car was broken open with a sledge hammer, and contents, amounting to $2,000, carried away. Both passenger coaches were then entered, and the passengers relieved of their valuables. Seventy persons were robbed. Three lady passengers were not approached, the leader declaring that his mother was a lady, if he himself was a scoundrel. No opposition was attempted. One of the robbers flourished a pistol and snatched money and valuables from the affrighted passengers. Many threw watches and packages of money under the seats, hoping to save them; but one of the outlaws passed through both coaches and carefully examined the floor beneath each seat, securing, perhaps, $1,000. A few passengers secured their money about their persons, and thus saved it. Among the heaviest losers were H. B. Dow, of Little Rock, $5 00; L. L. Thompson, of Pine Bluff; J. S. Whiting, Z. T. Hedges, W. R. Richards and T. B. Martin, all of Little Rock, lost gold watches and small sums of money; C. Z. Williams, of the Cole manufacturing Company, of Memphis, Tenn., lost $170; Meyer Hartman, of Little Rock, lost $160 and three silver watches. It is estimated that the total amount secured was $6,000. The robbers wore all young men. They wore white muslin masks, and had their pantaloons turned wrong side out. If taken they can be easily identified. A posse was organized and started in pursuit, and telegrams are being sent to all points in the State. It is probable they will be captured shortly.

The Capstone of the Monument.

WASHINGTON, December 7.—Although the capstone of the Washington Monument was set yesterday, the monument is not by any means completed, and the work yet to be done will occupy at least two years. The removal of the platform and outside rigging will commence to-morrow, and after all the timbers and iron-work have been taken in the holes through which they passed will be closed by exactly fitting stones. When that is completed the work of fitting up the interior will commence. The most important matter, however, and one that is not even decided upon, is the design for the base of the monument. Two of the numerous designs offered appear to be the favorites. One is to make a gradual terrace from the present level of the monument floor to the level of the surrounding park. The other is to have a marble wall built around the present terrace with a balustrade and grand approaches on each side and fine statuary on the steps and at the corners of the terrace. Nothing definite, however, has yet been determined upon. Of course, all the present unsightly workshops will be removed, and it is proposed to shift the engine which runs the elevator, and which is now close to the monument and disfigures it, to a distance, and convey the motive power by tunnel to the monument.

Bad Policemen.

ST. LOUIS, MO., December 6.—Chief of Detectives Burke, who went to Springfield, Mo., yesterday after Charley Coleman, alias Clark, telegraphed to the Chief of Police here that Coleman has confessed to several burglaries committed within the last year in or near this city. One of the burglaries was the breaking open of the safe in the City Hall in East St. Louis one night last May, and stealing $1,700 in money and some $3,000 in City Treasury warrants. Coleman says that two members of the East St. Louis police force, one of whom is a Captain, and both of whom are still on the force, assisted in the burglary. In a letter written to Clark by his wife, and which the police intercepted, she was asked to see these two East St. Louis policemen and get $40 from them with which he could pay his fine in Springfield, he having been arrested there for carrying concealed weapons. Coleman is said to be a brother of one of the pitchers of the Athletic Base-ball Club.

Temperance Revival in Pittsburgh.

PITTSBURGH, PA., December 7.—Francis Murphy has inaugurated another temperance revival in this city, which promises to excel that of eight years ago. Twenty-five hundred signatures to the pledge were obtained since last Sunday, and at a meeting at Music Hall to-night seven thousand people were present, and at least two thousand were unable to gain admission. The meeting was the largest ever presided over by Mr. Murphy.

Sensational Story From Egypt.

CAIRO, December 7.—General Gordon recently sent a defiant message to El Mahdi, inviting him, if he be the real prophet, to dry up the Nile and come and take him (Gordon.) The latest advices report that El Mahdi accepted this challenge, and directed his forces to cross the river as if it were dry land, while he remained on the bank and invoked the aid of Allah. The result was that three thousand men were drowned. The disaster has greatly lessened El Mahdi's influence. His followers are rapidly deserting him. He retired to the southward after his discomfiture.

Unknown Vessels Wrecked.

BOSTON, December 7.—An unknown steamer has foundered off Holyhead, and another gone down off the Cornwall coast. The scenes are fearful. A heavy gale and rain prevail.

Labor Troubles.

PITTSBURGH, PA., December 5.—The Springdale Foundry and Machine Works, Catasauqua, Pa., reduced wages ten per cent., and the Ferndale Rolling-mill closed indefinitely. The slate men at Pen Argyl, Pa., are on a strike against a second reduction of wages. The Swayne Mines, Easton, Pa., reduced wages from $1.10 to 90 cents a day.

Railway on Broadway.

NEW YORK, December 5.—The New York Board of Aldermen passed over the Mayor's veto the resolution giving the Broadway Surface Railroad Company permission to construct a railroad on Broadway.

Arthur and the Senatorship.

WASHINGTON, December 5.—Delegates from New York have waited on President Arthur to induce him to enter the Senatorial contest. Mr. Blaine, it is said, has requested his friends not to involve him in the fight.

HORRIBLE WORK.

Five Persons Murdered by a Jealous Lover, Who Afterwards Commits Suicide.

OMAHA, NEB., December 5.—A sextuple murder is reported from Walworth, Custar County Neb., to-night, which, in some particulars, is more horrible even than the mysterious tragedy in Fullerton last October. On a farm, about three miles from Walworth, lived an old widower named Jacob Finley, with two handsome daughters, Fannie, aged sixteen, and Mary, about twenty. Working for Finley was a young man named Fuquin, who was desperately in love with Mary. The girl ignored his attentions and encouraged J. Williams, a rival suitor. Wednesday evening Williams and a friend named Watlies took the Finley girls to a dance at Walworth. This goaded Fuquin to desperation, and, loading a double-barreled shotgun with buckshot, he awaited the return of the party. When he heard them coming Fuquin secreted himself behind a straw-stack, and, as the four young people drove up, fired both loads into them. Fannie Finley and John Williams were instantly killed, and Mary Finley and Watlies died inside of ten minutes. After he had shot the four to death Fuquin clubbed them all savagely on the head with the butt of his gun. The noise aroused old man Finley, and when he reached the scene of the murders Fuquin knocked him down and killed him. After the bloody work was done Fuquin set fire to the straw-stacks and house, and going down to the river bank blew his own brains out. The fire caused the neighbors to gather, and when they found Fuquin he was able to give an account of the horrible affair, dying just as he finished his story. Fuquin was always taken for a modest and inoffensive chap, and before he made his confession was thought to be the victim of another Fullerton mystery. Walworth is a small settlement in a thickly populated grazing district, and without means of communication save by stage. Consequently the particulars of the crime were slow in reaching the public.

Mormons Sentenced.

PRESCOTT, ARIZ., December 5.—Judge Howard to-day sentenced the convicted polygamists, Amman M. Tenny, Bishop P. J. Christofferson and C. I. Kemp, each to pay a fine of $500 and to be imprisoned three and a half years in the United States House of Correction, at Detroit, Mich. Much sympathy is expressed for Kemp. He leaves two wives and twelve children in destitute circumstances. He desired to plead guilty, but was prevented under pain of excommunication from the Mormon Church. The sentences of Bishops Wm. J. Flake and James F. Skanson, who pleaded guilty, are each fined $500 and six months confinement in the Yuma Penitentiary.

Insane Girl Leaps from a Train.

LAFAYETTE, IND., December 7.—Flora Wing, aged fourteen, who had been an inmate of the Reformatory at Indianapolis, jumped from a Big Four passenger train near Lebanon Saturday night, when the cars were going about eighteen miles an hour. The train was backed up and search made for the girl, but she could not be found, or had not at last accounts. It is said that she is insane, but it seems incredible that the authorities at Indianapolis would furnish an insane person with a pass and not notify the conductor or train men.

A Vicious Idiot.

VINCENNES, IND., December 7.—George W. Spraggins, of Marion Township, Pike County, is lying at the point of death, the result of an attack by his son, who is a mute and idiot, or insane. The father had been using a knife, and laid it down on a table, when the boy picked it up and began a furious assault on his parent, nearly killing him. The boy has been taken to the insane asylum.

Horrible Tragedy Spoiled.

OMAHA, NEB., December 7.—The story published by a Grand Island paper and sent East, detailing the murder of Jacob Finley, his daughters Fannie and Mary and John Williams, the lover of Mary, by a discarded suitor of Mary's, near Walworth, in Custer County, is believed to be a canard. There is no such place in Nebraska as Walworth.

A Young Mail Robber.

DETROIT, MICH., December 5.—John Brewster, aged sixteen, son of the Postmaster at Midland, Mich., brought here on the charge of robbing the mails, this afternoon, pleaded guilty and was remanded to jail to await sentence. The stealing was caused by his infatuation with a young girl with whom he ran off, but who dropped him at East Saginaw.

The Dominican Treaty.

NEW YORK, December 5.—It is claimed here by business men familiar with the provisions of the treaty just signed between the Dominican Republic and the United States, that if it is made effective by legislation, that island will become a valuable market for American manufacturers, and doubtless open the way for investment of American capital there.

The Queen Consents.

LONDON, December 7.—The Queen has given her consent to the Franchise bill which passed the House of Lords on Friday

Mistaken for a Burglar.

BINGHAMPTON, N. Y., December 7.—E. F. Brooks, Chief of Police of Waverly, N. Y., was probably fatally shot by a policeman, who mistook the Chief for a burglar. The officer and Chief were in a store looking for burglars.

Arrested for Counterfeiting.

LITCHFIELD, ILL., December 5.—Thomas Hentherby was arrested here to-day on the charge of counterfeiting silver dollars. Spurious coin and molds were found in Heatherby's house. He is supposed to be the accomplice of Barney Brewerton, arrested at Alton.

Want to Buy Cuba.

NEW YORK, December 7.—Messrs. Bennett & Mackay are at the head of a syndicate which has been formed for the purchase of Cuba. The amount to be paid for the Island is $100,000,000. Germany, it is understood, has a hand in the operation.

Failures for the Week.

NEW YORK, December 5.—Failures throughout the country for the last seven days: United States, 294; Canada, 26. Total, 320. This is an increase of seventy-one over last week. The increase is general in all sections of the country.

Atlas Powder Explosion.

DOVER, N. H., December 5.—An explosion of Atlas powder, which was to be used in the excavation of a well, eighteen miles from this city, occurred in the hands of a man in a house near by, and injured five persons fatally and three others seriously.

Cashier Indicted.

MONMOUTH, ILL., December 5.—B. T. O. Hubbard, Cashier of the First National Bank of Monmouth, Ill., when it failed last spring for about $400,000, was indicted by the Federal grand jury, charged with embezzling $870,000.

WAR REMINISCENCE.

A Letter That Was Never Delivered.

After Twenty-two Years of Separation an Old Soldier Finds a Clew to the Whereabouts of His Family.

FRANKFORT, KY., December 8.—In January, 1862, and for about two months previous thereto there lived in this (Franklin) County, near the Shelby County line, a farmer named Robert Haskins. He had a wife and one son, and owned about seventy-five acres of land. In June of that year he enlisted in the Confederate service under Captain Ed. Bell, and left at once for the scene of action. Nearly all of his neighbors also enlisted, on one side or the other, and there were very few left in that vicinity, and consequently the wives and children of the absent soldiers were not in absolute safety from the thieves and deserters who were constantly roaming about. Haskins' wife becoming more alarmed than the others, decided in October to leave her home and go to Estill County, where she had a cousin living. Her nearest neighbors being wives of Federal soldiers, she did not confide her purpose to them, but wrote a short letter to her husband telling him of her departure, her reasons for going, her destination, etc., and trusted it to the care of one John Bremer, who was home on a furlough at that time and who was a member of the same company as Haskins and lived in the same part of the country. Bremer was made prisoner before he reached camp, and was kept in prison over a year, and the letter, of course was never delivered. When Haskins came home to visit his wife in February, 1863, he found his house deserted, and no one could tell him of the whereabouts of his beloved helpmeet and his little boy. He made every possible inquiry for her, but finally gave up in despair and returned to the army a heart-broken man. At the close of the war Haskins wandered aimlessly about for nearly two years, and finally settled down to keeping a small grocery store in Pleasant Hill, Missouri, and there he stayed till about two weeks ago, when he decided to visit "Old Kentucky" once more. After spending some days with relatives and old comrades-at-arms in other parts of the State, he landed last Saturday in the vicinity of his residence in 1862, and yesterday evening he met J. Bremer, who has been living in the edge of Shelby County since 1867. Bremer, in talking over "old times," remembered about the letter given him by Mrs. Haskins, and, strange to say, had preserved it, and after searching for some time among some old papers, found it and delivered it to the dumbfounded Haskins, after having it in his possession twenty-two years. Mr. Haskins came to Frankfort early this morning on his way to Estill County in search of his wife and son. Mr. Haskins was dangerously wounded at the battle of Fort Pillow, Tenn., in April, 1864, and all his friends (Bremer among the rest) in Kentucky thought he was killed, and he says that is the reason Bremer made no effort to see Mrs. Haskins or himself. He feels almost sure that he will find his son alive and well, though he doubts very much whether his wife is still living. He looks to be about fifty-five years old, and his hair and beard are almost white. He did not know that his wife had a cousin in Estill County, and, of course never thought of looking for her there. His is a strange case and one hard to believe, but he says every word of the above is Gospel truth.

A Frightful Confession.

CHICAGO, ILL., December 8.—One of the Sunday papers published a telegram from Whitewater, Wis., saying that on last Tuesday Miss Annie Horan, of that place, died suddenly, under circumstances indicating she had been poisoned; that about three years before her father, mother and one sister died within a short time of each other under similar circumstances; that, though it had created considerable talk, nothing was done. This was revived by Annie's death, and, to settle the question definitely, her stomach was sent to a chemist for analysis. The deaths of all were surrounded by a complete mystery, no one being suspected. A dispatch received here to-night from Fort Atkinson, where the family formerly lived, and were much respected, save a report was received there from Whitewater that the third sister, Miss Nettie, died there to-day of poison, making the fifth member of the family: that in this case it was suicide, and that before death Nettie confessed to having murdered her parents and two sisters. It is also asserted she confessed to poisoning another person, though this is doubted. No cause assigned. Her own death was brought about by fear of exposure through an analysis of her sister's stomach. Nettie was a school teacher, and has two sisters still living at Fort Atkinson.

Indicted for Grave Desecration.

BINGHAMTON, N. Y., December 8.—Dan Richards, a widely known attorney, Robt. Richards, his son, and Wm. E. Taylor, a prominent capitalist, are indicted for the desecration of the Phelps tomb, on the night of October 24. As the body was not removed entirely, the indictment is for burglary in the third degree. The attack was made upon the tomb pending a suit of a physician to recover from the family a fee for embalming the body.

The Importation of Rags.

WASHINGTON, December 8.—Another circular in regard to the importation of rags is being prepared by the Treasury Department, which, it is understood, provides in general terms for the admission of rags properly disinfected, provided the process of disinfection is satisfactory to the health officers at the port of entry as well as to the officers of the Treasury Department.

Disastrous Colliery Explosion.

SHAMOKIN, PA., December 8.—An explosion occurred in the slope of the Henry Clay shaft to-day, causing the death of Richard Tuckett, Peter Kohle, Joseph Duseman, Jonathan Fox and Thomas Williams. All leave families. The bodies of Kohle and Duseman were recovered. The mine is filled with gas. There is great excitement about the mine.

A Valuable Pearl.

MEXICO, December 8.—A pearl weighing ninety-three carats, and valued at $17,000, was shipped to London from Guaymas, Mexico. It was found at Mulleje, Lower California, by an Indian, who sold it for $90.

—Ready-made houses, imported from America, are selling as a novelty at Buenos Ayres. The demand for habitations at that place has been so great that the Provincial Government could not wait for the slow process of brick and mortar, hence ready-made houses had to be imported. The price charged for them is said to be so reasonable that should they meet the expectation of the Argentine people it is anticipated that a large trade in them will be done.—Philadelphia Bulletin.

—A Massachusetts man has discovered a sure cure for sea-sickness. It is a counter-irritant in the shape of a mild blister application behind the ear.—Boston Herald.

—The Kentucky tobacco crop is good and well matured. It has been housed. Connecticut has the largest crop this year it has seen since 1871.—Hartford Post.

—The Philadelphia Times says a Chester County apple-tree turns out apples that are halved, one-half being sweet and the other sour.

XLVIII. CONGRESS.

Second Session.

WASHINGTON, December 2.—SENATE.—Mr. Sheffield, the new Senator from Rhode Island, was sworn in. The Chair laid before the Senate reports of the Secretary of the Treasury and Comptroller of Currency. Mr. Vest offered a resolution directing investigation into all leases of lands in Indian Territory for grazing or other purposes, by Indian tribes, the number of acres embraced in said leases, their terms and persons or corporations becoming lessees; also all circumstances under which leases were made, the means used in obtaining leases, and whether authorized by law. After considerable debate, the matter was laid over one day.

HOUSE.—Mr. Smith sworn in as successor to Mr. Kasson, of Iowa. A resolution offered by Mr. Follett, for investigation of the conduct of Marshal Wright, of the Southern District of Ohio, in the October election, was adopted.

WASHINGTON, December 3.—SENATE.—Mr. McPherson introduced a bill to suspend the coinage of silver dollars. It provides that on and after the passage of the act the coinage of the silver dollar shall be suspended; that the Secretary of the Treasury shall be directed not to reissue any United States notes of a denomination less than five dollars, and to destroy all United States notes of less denomination than five dollars, and cease engraving or printing all such notes. It authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury, upon deposit of silver bullion in such sub-treasury as he shall designate, to issue to the depositor thereof silver certificates having upon their face the weight and market value of the metal so deposited, calculated in United States gold dollars at the rate of twenty-five and eight-tenths standard grains to the dollar. The Secretary is also authorized and required on the presentation of any silver certificates issued under the provision of the act, by legal holders thereof, to redeem the same by delivering to the depositors silver bullion of the weight and fineness certified upon the certificate, and immediately cancel and destroy such certificate.

HOUSE.—The bill passed authorizing the construction of a bridge across the St. Croix River between Stillwater and Taylor's Falls. On motion of Mr. Cobb, the Senate amendments to the House bill forfeiting the unearned land grant of the Atlantic & Pacific Railroad Company were non-concurred in. On motion of Mr. Randall, the House went into Committee of the Whole (Mr. Cox, of New York, in the chair), on the bill making temporary provision for the naval service.

WASHINGTON, December 4.—SENATE.—Bills introduced and referred: Granting a pension to General Grant. For the erection of a public building at New Orleans, to cost $1,000,000. Mr. Cameron, of Pennsylvania, submitted the following which he desired to lie over and be prompt,

Whereas the shipping trade in American vessels is depressed and the export trade in American produce is languishing for want of a market that might be reached if the shipping trade was in the hands of citizens of the United States, therefore "Resolved, That the Committee on Finance be and is hereby directed to inquire whether it be expedient to expend the surplus revenue of the United States, or any portion thereof, for the purpose of reviving the shipping and export trade by allowing a rebate from tariff duties on foreign goods imported in ships built and owned in the United States, and by also allowing a premium on American grown products and articles of American manufacture exported in American vessels, and report by bill or otherwise." Adjourned until Monday.

HOUSE.—Bills introduced and referred: To provide for an Arkansas River Commission. Relative to surplus revenue. The text is as follows: "Be it enacted that the Secretary of the Treasury be and is hereby authorized and directed to apply the surplus revenues at any time in the Treasury in excess of $100,000,000, not otherwise appropriated, to the redemption of United States bonds, and when any of said bonds are redeemable at the pleasure of the Government, it shall not be lawful to apply any portion of said surplus to the purchase of bonds at premium." To prohibit the removal of any honorably discharged soldier, sailor or marine, or any widow or dependent relative of the same, from any office in the civil service of the United States except for specified cause. To establish the office of Government Architect. A resolution calling for further information relative to imprisonment of American citizens in Great Britain. To admit free of duty articles intended for exhibition at the World's Exposition, to be held by the colored race in Chicago, in 1885. The House resumed consideration of the Inter-State commerce bill but without action, adjourned until Monday.

WASHINGTON, December 8.—SENATE.—The Chair laid before the Senate a letter from the Postmaster General, recommending a larger clerical force at the Postoffice. When the Chair laid before the Senate the naval appropriation bill recently passed by the House, Mr. Hale explained that it was a mere renewal for the coming half year of the lump appropriation made last session, based on the appropriation of last year. He thought the Senate should take up and refer to the new Conference Committee on the regular appropriation bill which was the subject of conference at the close of last session, especially as that bill contained an important provision relating to new ships. Mr. Mitchell read a letter from General Grant relating to the bill recently introduced to give him a pension. General Grant expresses the hope that the bill will be withdrawn, as under no circumstances could he accept a pension even if the bill passed both Houses and the approval of the President. Mr. Mitchell stated that he had introduced the bill because he was Chairman of the Committee on Pensions, and the President had recommended a pension for General Grant. He, Mitchell, had always felt that General Grant ought to be placed where he was when, to accept the Presidency, he laid down the great office he had won in the war. In deference to General Grant's wishes, Mr. Mitchell withdrew the bill.

HOUSE.—Mr. Keifer, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported the military academy appropriation bill. Referred to the Committee of the Whole. The speaker laid before the House a letter from the Postmaster General, asking an appropriation of $100,000 for railroad postal car service for the remainder of the current fiscal year. Referred. Bills introduced and referred: Proposing a constitutional amendment providing that treaties shall be made by and with the consent of the House as well as the Senate. To amend the act making a loan to aid in the celebration of the World's Industrial and Cotton Centennial Exposition.

Preserving the Purity of the Ballot.

WASHINGTON, December 8.—A bill was introduced into the House to-day by Mr. Beach to maintain the secrecy of the ballot, in the election of Representatives and Delegates in Congress. It provides for a separate, uniform ballot upon which candidates are to be voted for. The quality of paper and size of type are specified, and the general provision made that all ballots must be the same in outward appearance. An important change in the existing law is made in respect to what is a legal ballot. Section 27 of the Revised Statutes provides that all votes for Representatives must be by written or printed ballot and nullifies all votes which are not so cast. Mr. Beach's bill permits ballots to be printed or written, or partly printed or written. The bill also requires all Representatives and Delegates shall be voted for upon separate ballots. Violation of any provisions of the bill is declared a misdemeanor and punishable by fine or imprisonment, or both.

—James Gordon Bennett, the elder, in an editorial published in the New York Herald in 1840, when there was not a jobbing house within a mile of Claflin's present warehouse in New York City, predicted that all the land below Canal street would soon be occupied by wholesale trade, and advised his readers to make investments in real estate. In fifteen years from that time Claflin built his great warehouses on a plot formerly occupied by rookeries, and the predicted transformation soon became a fact.

—A German paper estimates that France at present owns 600 miles on the West African coast, England 850 miles, or after the annexation of the whole of the Niger delta, 1,300 miles; Portugal, 800 miles; the Republic of Liberia, 350 miles, and Germany, 750 miles. The remaining 900 miles is owned by the natives, but will doubtless be seized by the European Powers in a short time. The coast is chiefly valuable as opening a way to the fertile interior.

NATIONAL FINANCES.

Salient Points in the Report of Secretary McCulloch.

A Reformation of the Tariff and Lower Duties in the Interest of American Commerce Advised—Shipping Interests and Coinage.

THE TREASURY DEPARTMENT.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 2.—The report of Hugh McCulloch, Secretary of the Treasury, was submitted to the House of Representatives yesterday. It is of great length, but, on several questions of vital interest to the financial and commercial world, it is exceedingly interesting. From the mass of figures submitted it is learned that the total revennes of the Government for the last fiscal year were $348,519,869, and that the expenditures were $290,916,773, leaving a surplus of $57,603,396, of which $51,000,000 has been applied to bond redemption. The actual and estimated revenue for the fiscal year 1884-5 is $330,000,000 and the estimated expenditures are $290,000,000. Of the revenues expected during the ensuing year $185,000,000 will come from customs taxes and $115,000,000 from internal revenue. The Secretary estimates that the treasury surplus in 1886 will be not less than $50,000,000, and argues that something should be done to relieve the people of this unnecessary taxation.

The most important chapter in the report is devoted to foreign trade and taxation. After speaking of the remarkable changes in the Western States and Territories and asserting that "to the rise in the value of lands resulting from the construction of railroads the wonderful increase of the National wealth is very largely attributable," he says:

The condition of the manufacturing interest of the United States is similar in some respects to the condition of the agricultural interest of the West in the early days. What the Western farmers then needed was a market for their crops. What manufacturers now need is a market for their surplus manufactures. The real foundation of our great manufacturing industry was laid in New England under the first tariff of a protective character, which diverted a part of its capital from shipping into cotton factories. Those first constructed having been fairly remunerative, more were constructed, and other branches of manufacture were undertaken, until New England was converted from maritime and commercial pursuits into manufacturing. It will be recollected that New England was opposed to the first protective tariff.

It was not many years after the first cotton mills were erected in New England that the great iron industries of the country began to be developed, and Pennsylvania soon became the great iron manufacturing State of the Union. Nor was it long before various kinds of manufactures came into existence in most of the Northern and Western States. The demands of the Government during the late civil war for nearly all kinds of manufactured goods and the high tariff greatly stimulated production. After the war stimulus was found in railroad building and in extravagant expenditures induced by superabundant currency, and the time has now come when the manufacturing industry of the United States is in dire distress from plethora of manufactured goods. Some manufacturing companies have been forced into bankruptcy; others have closed their mills to escape it; few mills are running on full time, and as a consequence a very large number of operatives are either deprived of employment or are working for wages hardly sufficient to enable them to live comfortably or even decently. Nor are manufacturers and their employes the only sufferers by the present depression of our manufacturing industry. So large and wide-spread has this industry become, so interwoven is it with other industries, so essential is it to the welfare of the whole country, that it can not be seriously depressed without injuriously affecting business throughout the Union.

The all-important question, therefore, that presses itself upon the public attention is, how shall the country be relieved from the plethora of manufactured goods, and how shall plethora hereafter be prevented? It is obvious that our power to produce is much in excess of the present or any probable future demand for home consumption. The existing iron, cotton and woolen mills, if employed at their full capacity, could meet in six months—perhaps in a shorter time—the home demand for a year. It is certain, therefore, that unless markets now practically closed against us are opened, unless we can share in the trade which is monopolized by European nations, the depression now so severely felt will continue, and may become more disastrous.

The question how shall our foreign trade be increased is the question which now comes to the front and demands prompt and careful consideration. Manufacturers are primarily interested, but the whole country has a stake in its solution. In its investigation the tariff will necessarily be involved, inasmuch as the relations between it and our foreign trade are so close that they can not be considered separately, but it need not be involved except so far as it stands in the way of international trade. If the duties upon raw materials are an obstruction, those duties should be removed. If the duties upon other articles are an obstruction, they should be modified. Whatever may be required to increase our foreign trade, whether it be a repeal or a modification of existing duties, should be demanded by the manufacturers themselves. How, then, shall the information required for a full understanding of what stands in the way of an increased exportation of our manufactured goods be obtained? It may not be proper for me to offer advice on this point, but I can not forbear to say that I can see no better means than by the appointment of a commission, composed of men not wedded to the doctrine of free trade or protection—fair-minded men, who would prosecute the inquiry thoroughly, comprehensibly and impartially. If such a commission should be created, it should be done without necessary delay.

The business of the whole world has been revolutionized by steam power and the substitution of machinery for hand-work. It is this great revolution caused by steam-power and machinery and their general use that will make the labors of the commission arduous. All the leading Nations of the world are now engaged in manufacturing, and all but Great Britain are fencing themselves in by protective duties. Among them the United States has been conspicuous. Has not the time come when a new departure is demanded?

The present condition of our foreign trade is not as full understood by the public as it ought to be, or there would be greater uneasiness in regard to what may be the result. Look, for instance, at our trade relations with Brazil. We sold to Brazil last year various articles to the amount of $8,645,261. We bought of her various kinds of her own production to the amount of $50,265,889, leaving $41,620,628 as the balance against us. Now, how is this large balance liquidated? Not by gold, but by the sale of our farm products, for which there is a large demand in Europe. It is our cotton, our wheat, our petroleum, our beef and pork, which can be produced more cheaply in the United States than anywhere else, which creates the sterling exchange that enables us to carry out this one-sided trade with Brazil. Now, if by the failure of our crops, or very favorable seasons on the other side of the Atlantic, or, what is more probable, by retaliation, our export of these articles should materially decline, what then would be the condition of our Brazilian trade? Instead of depending upon the exports to Europe for the means to cover the balance in favor of Brazil, ought not an effort be made to equalize that trade by our manufactured goods? Ought we not to endeavor to verify the prediction of Cobden by becoming a competitor with Great Britain in the Brazilian markets? Ought not this to be attempted in the interest of our own manufacturers?

When the real condition of our foreign trade and the character of the competition in which we must sooner or later engage are fully understood, it will be found that our inability to make that trade as free as our best interests require lies in the necessity which exists for heavy import duties, which, although they may be levied for revenue only, must be in a large degree protective.

It is upon such taxes, therefore, that our Government must mainly rely for its large current expenditures and the reduction of the National debt. Large revenues will be derived from the taxes upon whisky and tobacco, if the tax on the latter article should be retained, but our chief revenue must be derived from import duties. To show how these duties may be imposed and distributed as to neither imperil our manufactures nor obstruct our foreign trade, while the Treasury is kept in an easy condition, will be the task of the commission. That the task will be a very difficult one is certain, that it may be successfully performed ought to be certain also.

In the commencement of its work the commission should, I think, regard the following points as being settled:

1. That the public revenues are not to be in excess of what may be required for the support of the Government and the gradual reduction of the public debt.

2. That our manufactures, which under the fostering care of the Government have attained such gigantic proportions and whose prosperity is essential to the welfare of all other interests, are not to be put in jeopardy by rapid and sweeping changes in the tariff, and that all reductions of import duties should be made with a view to their ultimate advantage by opening to them markets from which they are now in a large degree excluded.

If such a commission as has been suggested had been appointed, and its work could be performed at an early date, I should not be disposed to say anything bearing directly upon the tariff; but as relief from the present burden of taxation is urgently and justly demanded, I deem it my duty to suggest that something in this direction should be done without delay. Owing to the shortness of the time allowed to me for the consideration of the subject, I am not prepared to name the articles upon which duties should be removed or reduced. I should regret this if Congress were not already in possession of the facts which should govern its action. This much, however, it may be proper for me to recommend:

1. That the existing duties upon raw materials which are to be used in manufacture should be removed. This can be done in the interest of our foreign trade.

2. That the duties upon the articles used or consumed by those which are the least able to bear the burden of taxation should be reduced. This also can be effected without prejudice to our export trade.

In regard to our internal revenue taxes, I have to say that, as these taxes, with the exception of the tax upon whisky, ought not to be and will not be needed for revenue if appropriations are kept within reasonable bounds and rigid economy is established in all branches of the public service, I see no good reason for their continuance. Taxes upon agricultural productions, although indirectly levied, are inconsistent with our general policy, and tobacco is the only one of these productions which has been taxed. An article which is so generally used, and which adds so much to the comfort of the large numbers of our population who earn their living by manual labor, can not properly be considered a luxury, and as the collection of the tax is expensive and troublesome to the Government, and is especially obnoxious and irritative to small manufacturers, the tax upon tobacco should, in my judgment, be removed.

The tax upon whisky could not be repealed without a disregard of public sentiment, nor without creating a necessity for higher duties upon imported goods, but while this is true the tax upon the alcohol used in manufacturing might be removed with decided benefit to home industry and foreign trade.

On the subject of our shipping interests Secretary McCulloch urges the prompt removal of the unjust tariff taxes which have driven American vessels from the sea and paralyzed ship building in this country. He does not, however, consider the restoration of our merchant marine an easy matter. We have been out of the carrying trade so long and foreign companies have such enormous capital invested that an attempt on the port of the United States to gain supremacy on the seas would meet with most vigorous competition. On this point Mr. McCulloch says:

There is, in my opinion, no prospect whatever that the United States will ever share to a considerable extent in the foreign carrying trade without Government aid. It is for Congress to determine whether this aid shall be granted or whether our foreign shipping interest shall remain in its present death-like condition. The let-alone policy has been tried for many years, during which our ships have been swept from the ocean, and we pay every year many millions of dollars to foreign ship owners for freights and fares. Ought this condition of things to be continued?

Entertaining these views, I do not hesitate to express the opinion—

1. That without Government aid to United States steamship lines the foreign carrying trade will remain in the hands of foreigners.

2. That as we ought to have an interest in the business which we create, and as the restoration of our shipping interest is important, if not essential, to the extension of our foreign trade, subsidies in the form of liberal payments for the transportation of mails or in some other form should be offered as an inducement to investments of capital in steamships. The amount of necessary aid would be insignificant in comparison with what has been granted to manufacturers by protective duties, and nothing would be paid until the services were rendered.

On the subject of the continued coinage and unlimited legal-tender quality of the silver dollar the Secretary says:

I have been forced to the conclusion that unless both the coinage of silver dollars and the issue of silver certificates are suspended there is danger that silver, and not gold, may become our metallic standard. This danger may not be imminent, but it is of so serious a character that there ought not to be delay in providing against it. Not only would the National credit be seriously impaired if the Government should be under the necessity of using silver dollars or certificates in payment of gold obligations, but business of all kinds would be greatly disturbed; not only so, but gold would at once cease to be a circulating medium, and severe contraction would be the result.

The United States is one of the most powerful of Nations—its credit is high, its resources limitless; but it can not prevent a depreciation of silver unless its efforts are aided by leading Nations of Europe. The suspension of its coinage might depress the market price of silver for a time, but the ultimate effect would doubtless be to enhance it. The production of gold is diminishing, that of silver has practically reached its maximum, and there are strong indications that from this time the yield of both gold and silver mines will speedily decline. At the same time the demand for both for coinage and in manufactures will increase. The very necessities of the commercial world will prevent a general and continued disuse of either as money. The European Nations which hold large amounts of silver must sooner or later come to its rescue, and the suspension of coinage in the United States would do much to bring about on their part action in its favor. But whatever might be the effect of the suspension of the coinage upon the commercial value of silver, it is very clear that the coinage can not be continued without detriment to the general business and danger to the National credit.

The amount of one dollar notes in circulation is $26,763,007.80; the amount of two dollar notes in circulation is $26,778,738.20. Congress would, I think, act wisely in putting an end to their circulation. Nor do I hesitate to express the opinion that the country would be benefited if all five-dollar notes should be gradually retired and the coinage of half and quarter eagles should be increased. If this should be done, the circulating medium of the United States below ten dollars would be silver and gold, and we should be following the example of France, in which there is an immense circulation of silver coin, which in all domestic transactions maintains a parity with gold. In this event, also, the Treasury would be relieved from the burden of silver in its vaults, and it would not be long before the coinage of silver might be resumed.

In conclusion, the Secretary recommends that immediate action be taken by Congress relative to the basis of National bank circulation, now seriously threatened by the rapid call for bonds on which it is based, and that the system be continued substantially as it now is, except that the tax on circulation be repealed; that our subsidiary silver coins should be recoined and increased in weight; that the trade dollars should be purchased at a slight advance only upon their bullion value, and not at all unless presented within a year, and that additional vaults for the storage of silver be constructed.

Estimates for the Next Fiscal Year.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 3.—The following estimates have been submitted to the House Committee on Appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886:

Pensions	$30,000,000
Military Academy	328,344
Fortifications	7,896,000
Consular and Diplomatic expenses	1,623,176
Navy	30,654,103
Post-office Department	56,099,164
Indian Bureau	7,338,045
Army	26,110,486
Legislative, Executive and Judicial expenses	[illegible]
Agricultural Department	699,116
Sundry Civil expenses	32,326,402
District of Columbia	1,740,073
Improvement Rivers and Harbors	8,177,400
Total	$254,820,706

The estimates for the present fiscal year were $213,269,650, and the appropriations $177,776,450. The increase in estimates for the next fiscal year over those of the present year are $48,462,054; and over the appropriations of the present year $82,816,077.

Tried to Avenge His Daughter's Death.

LINCOLN, ILL., Dec. 3. O. A. Carpenter arrived here from Dakota yesterday morning. This evening, as he was sitting in the office of Uriah Hill, on Broadway street, W. H. H. Burns, the father of Zora Burns, passed by and saw him there. He went by the window, and, turning toward the door, drew a large revolver from his pocket and fired at Carpenter. The bullet struck the iron door-post and glanced off, doing no harm. Burns did not wait to see the effect of his shot, but walked quietly on around the square and went home. On the way he met a man named Primm and said to him: "Well, I have killed Carpenter." Burns has not been arrested. It is thought the old man's mind has been unbalanced by his trouble. Carpenter was very much frightened.

Measures to Bar Out the Plague.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 3.—Surgeon-General Hamilton, of the United States Marine Hospital, in his annual report says 44,752 patients received relief during the year. The cholera prevalent in Europe had been watched, and cargoes and steerage passengers in vessels arriving in United States ports had been carefully inspected. Effective quarantine measures against yellow fever were found to be not equally so against cholera, and it was recommended that in addition disinfectants and isolation should be compelled. The Surgeon-General refers to the temporary embargo placed on old rags, and recommends that the law be so amended as to provide that no rags be imported in future or transported from one State to another until they had been baled.

THE COMMONWEALTH.

Louisville Leaf Tobacco Market.

There has been a very brisk, healthy trade on the breaks, with one or two private sales of Green River fillers, very satisfactory to sellers. Burley tobaccos have not varied much in tone or prices, though once or twice the scale of prices on medium leaf was considered a shade less full. The very small percentage of rejections, however, indicates that sellers are very well satisfied, and we find no cause to alter our quotations. Other grades of leaf as also lugs have ruled steady. Dark and heavy styles, so far as tested, have been very firm all around, with the single exception that low grade lugs are a trifle softer. Green River fillers have sold at rather the best prices of the year. On the whole, the action of the market has been satisfactory. We quote full-weight packages sound tobacco of the 1884 crop as follows:

	Dark and Heavy.	Burley.
Trash	$4 50@ 5 00	$ 4 25@ 4 75
Common lugs	5 25@ 6 00	4 50@ 5 00

STEPHEN MORGAN, of Harrison County, was fined twenty-five dollars and imprisoned ten days, at Nicholasville, for displaying a revolver to the proprietor of a gun store. The City Marshal happened to be present and informed on him.

THE Kentucky Court of Appeals decides that a crime committed by an insanely drunken man is as punishable as one committed by a sober man. The decision had reference to the case of Guss Finley, of Floyd County, who, while insanely drunk, murdered young James Hunt. Finley was under sentence to hang. The execution has been stayed to allow him to file a petition for rehearing.

CALVIN SMITH was shot and killed by his brother-in-law, James Nolan, at Mt. Pleasant. Nolan was drunk, and began firing at Smith's house. The latter appeared at the doorway and said, "Shoot me, but spare my wife and children." Nolan took deliberate aim and fired, shooting Smith through the head. Nolan fled to the mountains of Virginia, closely pursued by a band of enraged citizens. Nolan has killed several men.

REV. WM. WEATHERFORD is under arrest at Saline, Livingston County, charged with stealing $740 in cash and $5,000 in notes from John Tiner, a merchant.

GOVERNOR KNOTT has pardoned Milt Halsey, accomplice of Cash Halsey sent to the penitentiary for killing Ed. Baxter at Athens, Fayette County, several years ago.

PROF. D. C. DUDLEY, who resigned as Superintendent of the Kentucky Institution for Deaf Mutes, on account of ill-health, has improved enough to accept a similar position in a State Institition in Colorado.

A SCHEME is on foot to hold an international fair at Louisville, for which Congress is to be asked to contribute $1,000,000.

FIFTEEN boys made their escape from the Louisville House of Refuge a few days ago.

GEORGE W. SECKLER, tried at Covington on five charges of housebreaking and larceny, received a total sentence of thirteen years in the penitentiary.

ABOUT the close of the war Jesse Small, Hart County, farmer, and Rebecca Woodson, the belle of the country side, full of sympathy with the lost cause, agreed not to marry—though their troth had been plighted before the war—until the Democratic cause should triumph over the party which was then ascendant. They wanted each other badly, but stuck nobly to this resolution, until the other day, when conditions political made their wedding possible, and the rites were duly celebrated at Louisville. Jesse is forty-four and Rebecca thirty-nine.

MONROE COUNTY is strongly Republican. There is one precinct in which there are but twenty Democratic votes cast.

CHAS. BODKINS, Marshal of Blandville, was acquited the other day for the killing of Steve Russell, colored, a week before, on grounds of justification, it being proved that Russell was hunting Bodkins with a pistol.

THE general store of John Lay and John Conoley, at the forks of Little Poplar creek, in Knox County, burned, together with its entire contents, a few nights ago. The loss is about $1,500. At the time of the fire, Mr. Lay was in Louisville purchasing a stock of goods for the winter trade.

DOCK LONG, who lives about two miles from Richmond, was killing hogs, a few days ago, and his wife was superintending the rendering of lard. Their only child, a little girl about six years of age, came in the way, when the mother, being slightly irritated, struck it a slight blow on the head with a switch or a small stick, and, to her horror, the child fell into convulsions and died in a short while.

THE other afternoon, about five miles from Mt. Sterling occurred a fierce and bloody affray. Dave Anderson and Lee Wiggenton were the participants, and the difficulty arose from a misunderstanding about a gun. Meeting on the pike, and both men being armed with double-barreled shot-guns, they proceeded to adjust their difficulties by the stern arbitrament of battle, and fired. Both contestants fell mortally wounded, Anderson near the heart, and Wiggenton in the head. Anderson has since died, and Wiggenton cannot live.

JOHN SMITH, of Knott County, was captured in Covington, a few days since, by Officer Thos. Dunn and lodged in jail on the charge of murder. About three weeks ago he quarreled with a man by the name of Lewis Gerhardt and his father, during which he shot and killed the son and seriously wounded his father, breaking his thigh and shooting him in the arm. Another man by the name of Zeke Cody was also implicated in the fuss, and he made his escape, but will probably be apprehended.

J. W. LAWRENCE, of Livingston, compromised a very ugly case against him. He took J. T. Roberts' horse, without permission, and called on some lewd women. The horse, being hitched near the railroad track, was badly injured by the train.

A PENNSYLVANIA man is in Lewis County contemplating the building of an immense aviary. The Vanceburg Courier says that several persons are bee-keepers on a small but profitable scale, and that climate, vegetation and location all favor the prosecution of the business in that section.

THERE appears to be an organized band of mule-stealers in Warren County. Four were stolen in a single night.

NEWPORT wants electric lights, and has taken steps to obtain them.

THE Hartford girls have organized a brass band.

THE firm of Hill, Fletcher & Co., of Louisville, dealers in notions and dry goods, and the individual members, assigned for the benefit of creditors.

TWO freight trains collided at Rocky Hill the other morning. The cars were badly wrecked, and a tramp who was stealing a ride between two cars was mashed into a jelly. Nothing about him went to show his identity.

A DEMAND FOR RAPID TRANSIT.

The growth of commerce, the increase of population, the extent of modern cities and the general progress of the age seem to demand increased facilities for transportation in our great thoroughfares of trade.

A few years since the most available means of transit in cities was the omnibus. This gave place to the horse car, and the latter in some places to elevated steam rail-cars: but in large cities, in the hurry and press of business, people want to travel near the ground and do not like nor can they take time to ascend and descend a flight of stairs every time they wish to step into a car. This objection, it would seem, may prevent the general introduction of elevated street-rail-ways.

The cable-road, a recent invention has been introduced and is now in successful operation in some of the larger cities and bids fair to supersede the horse-care entirely. The traveling public desire a more expeditious and the operators a cheaper means of travel than the horse car. During one day last summer thirty-three horses are said to have died on Third Avenue road N. Y., in one day from the combined effects of heat and fatigue. Large numbers of these animals are yearly sacrificed in this slavish work.

The cable-road it is thought combines both speed and economy, and supplies a want felt in all large cities where many of the business men reside far from the marts of trade.

The following description of the road itself we take from the Microcosm. "Imagine sail tracks, similar to those of a double track horse-car road, running through some straight street of a city for a distance of five, six or more miles. Central between the two rails of each track, sunk level with the surface, runs a trench of cast iron framework filled in with concrete, the cross-section of which resembles a capital U turned upside down, with a slot in the center, at the top, thus ∩. This slot about five eighths of an inch wide, runs longitudinally the entire length of the road, the top of this trench as just stated being level with the surface of the track. This trench is designed as a channel through which an endless cable for propelling the cars is to run up one track and down the other. The cable is composed of a twisted rope of steel wire about one and a half inches in diameter with a center core of hemp to give flexibility to the cable, so that it may pass freely around the drums and pulleys of the driving machinery at the ends of the road. The cable is first stretched along the two tracks within these trenches and then spliced so as to form little or no enlargement at the place of the splice. In order to allow the cable to travel without abrasions, there are what are called line pulleys or sheaves set in ranges at the bottom of the trench about 30 feet apart for supporting the cable. These sheaves run on spindles with journals at their two ends, which have to be oiled frequently to prevent friction which would [illegible] wear. To accomplish this work of oiling there is a man-hole provided in the trench over each pulley, which can be opened and closed for this purpose.

Perhaps the most mysterious thing to the uninitated in connection with this novel system of propelling, is the method by which the car takes hold of the continously running cable located as it is below the surface of the track. Let us see if we can explain it intelligible. Imagine two broad, thin steel bars both together not so thick as to fill the slot dividing and extending along the top of this trench. These are called grip-bars, and are attached firmly to the bed of a car, which takes the place of the dummy of a common street railroad. These grip bars pass down through the slot in the trench, having connected with their lower end the grip jaws proper, consisting of two brass bars groved longitudinally to fit upon the two opposite sides of the cable. By moving a lever upon the car in a certain way, the manager slides these bare one up and one down, thus closing the jaws and pinching the cable which slides between them till the grip car and its train of passenger cars attached get under way, and move at the same speed as the cable; the steel grip bars in the meantime passing along the slot in the trench as the car moves. To stop the train the manager reverses the lever, thus opening the jaws and releasing the cable to slip loosely between them while the train is stopped by applying brakes in the usual way.

Although it has been proved by actual experiment that cable roads, with all their present drawbacks and imperfections, are a great saving in first cost and running expense over a horse railroad of the same carrying capacity, yet it is a fact which stares these companies and their engineers in the face that the steel cable, one of the chief items of expense, ought to and would last twice as long as it now does but for this slipping process in passing it between the brass jaws of the gripping device in getting the train in motion from a state of rest, which has to be so continuously repeated as done on all the cable roads yet constructed. The careless habit of inexperienced grip men, bringing down the lever suddenly, thus causing the jaws to seize the cable with full force, necessarily produces a great strain on the strands of the wire; and in this way it not only causes delays to traffic, but often seriously damages the cable. This wear of the cable increases in direct proportion to the rate of speed adopted for the cars to travel. At the rate of ten miles per hour, the present rate adopted on the East River bridge, it is not possible for the best cable to last more than six months with such a positive gripping device in use, and we are informed that on one of the San Francisco roads even at less speed the cable was used up and removed in about six months.

This leads us to conclude that the only truly mechanica land economical method for gripping the cable while it is in motion and thus starting the cars without shock or strain, is that now in use on the bridge between New York and Brooklyn, namely, a grooved roller or sheaves applied to the opposite sided of the cable allowed to roll against it while being gradually checked up by brakes, thus allowing the cars to start very slowly at first and gradually to increase in motion till their speed equals that of the cable, when the grip rollers of course cease to revolve. By this method of starting any abrasion or sudden strain on the cable is impossible, and the train starts so softly that persons inside would scarcely know they were in motion without observing objects outside.

ONE of the greatest drawbacks to the success of our Common School system is the irregular attendance of many of the pupils. In almost every school there are children who seem to attend by fits and starts, who are in their places to-day and absent tomorrow. At the end of the term they are decidedly behind their more punctual fellows, and the responsibility is almost invariably put on the unfortunate teacher. Parents who permit their children to absent themselves from school upon the most trivial pretext, are almost the most severely critical in their attitude toward teachers. They do not seem to remember that their children have only been in the school room semi-occasionally, or if they do remember it, they appear to esteem it as a matter of minor importance. Yet it is a fact that no child who is irregular in his or her attendance at school, will make much progress. Parents ought to remember this truth and improve in this respect. Send your children to school every day and you will be agreeably surprised at the result.

THE official vote of the United States for Presidential electors shows that there was 9,092,825 votes cast at the late election. Cleveland's plurality of the vote is 70,930. By the the way of comparison we give below the vote for 1880 and 1884:

	1880	1884
Democratic	4,447,888	4,907,527
Republican	4,450,921	4,836,597
Greenback	307,740	17,883
Prohibition	10,305	130,818
Total	9,216,754	9,992,825

Republican plurality, 1880, 3,033.
Democratic plurality, 1884, [illegible]

The increase in the vote for four years is 775,661, of which the Democrats received 450,639 and the Republicans 385,676. The Greenbackers have lost 189,857 votes, and the Prohibitionist have gained 120,513.

THE following counties have adopted local option in this State: Bullitt, Breckinridge, Bell, Hardin, Clay, Letcher, Cumberland, Laurel Ballard, Martin, Pike, Wayne, Lewis, Perry, Owen, Hopkins, Breathett, Washington, Rock Castle, Jackson, Owsley, Knox, Whitley, Robertson, Magoffin, Harlin, Leslie, Bracken, Union, Hancock. Outside of the counties 150 odd magisterial districts in other counties, and fifty odd towns in other counties have adopted local option.

THE Attorney-General renews the recommendation contained in last year's report as to fees of witnesses and jurors. He favors radical changes in the fee bill, the adoption of a system by which attorneys and marshals of the United States should be compensated solly by salaries, and the erection by the government of a penitentiary for the confinement of offenders against its laws.

Cultivation of Tobacco.

The foundation for success in 1885 must be laid now if at all. The corner stone is fall plowing. Any apparent advantage of dispenses with late plowing in the fall is a delusion and a snare. The advantages of fall plowing are, first, the destruction of the miller and insects that feed upon the plant; second, the assistance of Jack Frost in pulverizing the soil; and third, time and labor saved in the busy spring days. Make everything bend to get your ground plowed now.

A matter closely associated with fall plowing is the selection of fields and fertilization. The best authors agree that shallow river bottom land with underlying gravel, level clay uplands, and shallow, impoverishable or poorly drained lands regardless of location must be avoided. Red clay, rolling upland, clay and sand loam, deep loam and sand creek bottoms or second river bottom lands, naturally or artificially drained and heavily fertilized are unquestionably best for all varieties of cigar leaf. Look well to the matter of drainage selecting soil for '85 in order to avoid the extremes of drought or flood, as the case may be. Don't "bite off more than you can chaw!" In other words, lay out more ground for tobacco than you can fertilize heavily. The matter of fertilizing in the fall or spring or both is merely a question as to the condition of the manure to be applied. If it is coarse and raw it is best not to use it at all. Every planter ought to keep enough stock to insure a high state of fertility in his tobacco lands, and everyone should have a cemented pit into which the liquids from the stables could be drained. One barrel of this liquid is worth more than a car load of so-called "manure" that has been bleached and leached by sun and storms. Well rotted manure ought to be prepared under cover—Bulletin.

GOV. HOADLY commuted Geo. Oliver's sentence of death to imprisonment for life, consequently Cincinnati had no hanging last Friday as was anticipated.

MR. BEECHER said to a reporter: "I hope Cleveland will give nothing in his Cabinet to the Independents. We went in for right, and as soon as the disinterestedness is taken away down goes the independence. No, this country proposes holding. Mr. Cleveland and the Democratic party responsible for this administration. The principal thing I hope to see is a revival of business in the South."

Judge Charles M. Thomas, United States District Attorney for Kentucky, and a very strong Republican, though we believe a fair-minded man, was interviewed by the Lexington Transcript in regard to the Federal offices:

"What do you think of the Republican office-holders holding over by tenure of the Civil Service Rules, under Cleveland?"

"That is all bosh; it amounts to nothing; the Democrats have won the race fairly, are entitled to all the offices, and should have them. All terms end with the administration, and it is right. A President is responsible for his administration, and he should have the power to fill all vacancies. The Senate will confirm all proper appointments."

The Hartford girls have organized a brass band.

Monroe county is strongly Republican. There is one precinct in which there are but 20 Democratic votes cast.

The South Kentuckian says you can't throw a rock in the average Kentucky town without striking a candidate for postmaster.

Mason county, which has become a tobacco growing county but recently, produced more than 6,000,000 pounds of that staple this year.

The insurance companies have become so alarmed over the wholesale barn-burning near Versailles that they have canceled their policies.

The convicts at work upon the Lexington water works will be taken upon the completion of work there, to Clarke county, to work upon a new turnpike.

The Paducah News, from reliable data, thinks a big boom will strike that place in the early springtime, and that the city will be "dazzling" with water works, sparkling fountains, electric light, &c.

The Transcript thinks Lexington should be the gateway for all the railroads built in Central Kentucky, and also bewails the fact that parsimony and lack of enterprise permitted the Kentucky Central extension to slip away from the city.

The Glasgow Times says there is talk of organizing a vigilance committee for the benefit of the enterprising horse and mule thieves who have been doing that section with most flattering success. The Times chronicles six stealings in the last two issues.

The President-elect has one relative in this county—Maj. Cleveland Flowers. His mother was a Cleveland, and undoubtedly a relative of the Governor's. All applicants for offices will file their applications with the Major, and leave a dollar with him to insure strict attention.—Bourbon News.

FARM NOTES.

A prize essay in an Eastern exchange has so much pith and point in it in short paragraphs, that we copy it in its entirety:

In the purchase of a farm, select a desirable location with a good soil.

Plow and cultivate in good season, and when the ground is not too wet.

Fallow plow for winter crops, fall plow for spring crops.

Seed no more ground than you can thoroughly cultivate and keep free from weeds.

Keep up a rotation of crops with clover, and apply as much manure every year as is taken from the soil.

Select the best seeds, and if you have to purchase them, buy only of a reliable firm, even if you have to pay an extra price.

When you have good seed, save the best and most productive.

Sow this in a separate plot for your future stock.

Keep this system up as long as you can make any improvement in your seed.

Select your seeds early in the season so you will have them on hand when required.

Strive to be ahead in all your work, and be certain to have your crops in the ground in due season.

Do not put off until to-morrow what you can do to day.

Plant corn, potatoes and cabbage on rich ground.

Plow deep and thoroughly, and pulverize the ground well; but give the crops only shallow tillage when once in the ground.

The more frequent, however, this culture, with the addition of the hoe the greater will be the yield.

Use a drill for wheat and rye, and you will find little complaint about your crops "freezing out" by the vicisitudes of winter.

Sow oats and spring wheat as early in the spring as the ground will work well; the earlier the better will be your crops.

Plant peas, onion sets and seeds at the same time, the latter on clean rich or new ground.

Keep good stock; grade up what you have, if you can not afford the best.

Do not over work your horses, and never feed or water them when very warm.

"Make hay while the sun shines," prepare it and your fodder in proper season and condition.

Put up sufficient to feed your stock well; feed regularly and shelter your stock from weather.

Better feed your hay, straw and corn than sell it; by that means you "kill two birds with one stone"—you feed your land as well as your stock.

Keep your farm implements clean, bright, in good order, the woodwork well painted and house from the weather.

Keep the tires on your wagon tight and the axles and harness well oiled.

A workroom with a few tools will often save a day of valuable time going to a shop, besides the expense.

On wet, idle and wintry days, repair and fix up; remember, "a stitch in time saves nine."

"Haste, as well as neglect, makes waste."

Keep orders, have a "place for everything and everything in its place."

Set out an orchard on the highest eligible ground you have, setting the trees forty feet apart each way.

Set out a few pears, peaches, plums and quinces—such as succeed best in your neighborhood.

It often takes more time to find a tool than it does to do the work.

Keep your fences up and in good repair.

Raise neat and comfortable buildings but not beyond your means.

Head your trees when young to a proper height and natural form.

Trim them mostly when young.

The greatest enemy to the orchard is the round-headed borer.

A band of strong tarred paper put around the trees next the ground, twenty inches high, is the best preventive of injury from this pest as well as from rabbits.

When once in the trees lose no time in cutting them out with a knife.

Thorough and repeated culture should be your motto with all kinds of fruit.

House your poultry and do not make your fruit trees a roost for the fowls.

Do not mortgage your property when once paid for.

Keep out of debt. Pay what you owe. Buy only what you need.

Use no tobacco or alcohol, and discourage its use in others.

THE Louisville people will continue to take their morning bitters as usual, as the sale of whisky carried the day at the city election last week.

GEN. GRANT has emphatically refused to allow Congress to pension him. Three cheers for the General.

Don't fail to come and examine our stock of Toys and Fancy Goods when in town, it will please you and you will be certain to buy. Everybody says R. G. Langsdales is the place, Rising Sun, Indiana.

The literary society was held in secret last Friday night. It seems that an institution for the propagation of information should throw its doors open to the public. Take your light from under the bushel.

F. Riddell has caught the spirit of improvement, and has had commodious offices arranged in the old Sherrill property, where will hereafter be found the firm of Riddell & Stephens, with willingness for new business in new quarters.

Mrs. Lillie Cloud, has just finished a series of lessons to a number of Burlington ladies, in Kensington and effective and brush painting. Her ability as a teacher is proven in the rapid progress of her pupils. She leaves for her home in Missouri in a few days.

A little colored girl who recently worked for J. M. Riddell in Williamstown, while ironing for a family for whom she was at work in the Big Bone neighborhood last Thursday had her clothes take fire, which so severely burned her that she died the next day.

Buckley's Detacher is an article that everyone who uses a buggy, spring wagon or carriage needs, because it is safer more convenient and very durable. They are used by J. A. Huey. John M. Hoshal and others, who say the time will come when no other singletree will be used. For sale by A. M. Acra, Burlington, Kentucky.

Quarterly and County Court passed off Monday without any incidents of peculiar interest. There were many inquiries for money, and few lenders. But one contested case was disposed of in the Quarterly Court, that of Watts vs. Whitlock, the judgment of which suited neither party. County Court was continued until the 8th.

The Weekly Blade, (Nasby's Paper,) of Toledo, Ohio, is now the Largest and Best Dollar Family Newspaper published. During the recent campaign, it reached the enormous circulation of 208,000, and it leads all other papers by many thousands. They will mail specimen copy free on receipt of address. See advertisement elsewhere.

A grand display of Holiday Goods. You can buy dolls, wagons, sleds, hobby horses, all kinds of albums, in fact anything you want. We are going to give away $25 worth of prizes; 1 prize doll, writing desk, toilet set and plush photo album. Anyone buying $1 worth of goods gets one ticket. R. G. Langsdale's, is the place, Rising Sun, Ind.

James. A. Riddell's Richwood Hambletonian was exhibited on the street Court day, and a magnificent young horse he is. Seeing the horse with his style, carriage and gaits, explains how Jimmie competes successfully with aged horses at St. Louis and other fairs, but don't just see how we could have withstood the $2,000 offer for him lately.

We have heretofore commented on H. P. Stephen's horse trading propensities and abilities. He claims, however to have dropped his mantle on Dr. Furnish since the Graham sale of horses. Anyhow, having witnessed the trotting race on Monday evening between his bay Hambletonian and Riddell's Richwood, we advise Perry to let the doctor keep the mantle.

Quite a number of our citizens have received very handsomely designed invitations to the wedding of Miss Virginia D. Smith, daughter of Dr. J. F. Smith, to Charles H. Campbell, in the Presbyterian church, Sanford, Florida, on the 17th inst. Pussie, as she was familiarly called here, has many friends who wish her all the happiness married life affords.

Mr. Henry Smith aged 72, and who lived at Plattsburg has been missing since last Friday morning, he left home while his wife was milking. Last seen of him he was in the vicinity of the river at the mouth of Woolper Creek, near which place his cane was found. It is thought that he was demented, and has drowned himself. The river was being dragged for him Monday, but without effect. Mr. Smith weighs about 200 pounds, and when he left home he wore a suit of jeans (brown vest and gray coat and pants) and heavy cowhide boots. His family offers a reward of $25 for him.

Married—On Thursday, Dec., 4th, by Rev. Geo. Froh, Mr. Sidney Stephens and Miss Nettie Stephens, second daughter of Mr. L. L. Stephens. Nothing has occurerd in society circles that was more elegant than the reception of this couple. The bride was one of our most popular young ladies, and has a large circle of friends who were in attendance. The attendants were Miss Jessie Stephens and R. T. Stephens. A large number of handsome as well as useful presents were received. The supper was all that could be desired. To "Sid" and his fair bride we extend our heartiest congratulations. May peace and joy abound with them through this life, is the wish of your scribe.—Rising Sun Recorder.

[Sta]te College of Kentucky.

Lexington, Ky., Oct. 3d, 1884.

Hon. N. S. Walton:

Dear Sir,— Your representative district is entitled to send four properly prepared students to this College free of Tuition. I regret to say the County Court has failed to make the appointments to which your district is entitled. I will, therefore, receive and admit, tuition free, any whom you may send, and recognize them as appointees of the district. I am sure you will esteem it not only a duty but a pleasure to promote the interest of your constituency, and the college by sending your quota to enjoy the benefits of its instructions.

Yours truly Jas. K. Patterson.

Parties desiring to take advantage of the above proposition should apply to Mr. Walton without delay.

NEIGHBORHOOD NEWS.

Hebron.

There are a great many hops and parties laid out for christmas.

The scarlet fever has gone and the school has commenced again.

Jacob Tanner and scholars will meet on Saturday evening for practice.

T. A. Rouse has been dealing in stock cattle to some extent. He has refused 4.50 for a fine bullock.

John Clore gave the young folks a hop last Friday night, and all present had a jumbo of a time.

Mr. John Bebb had the misfortune to lose the only horse he had. This is the third one he has lost this year.

Gunpowder.

Fine weather the past week.

Farmers are nearly all through gathering corn.

John Surface has sold his farm to his brother Eli.

The spelling school at Pleasant Valley is progressing.

Mrs. Elen Smith has just recovered from a severe attack of malaria.

Fine weather for hunting and the boys are taking advantage of it.

John Tanner and wife have moved in our neighborhood. We gladly receive them as our neighbors.

"DAN'EL'S GONE TO RES'."

You kin hang de plow line up, folks
An' turn de critters out
Lay de ole man's ax up, oar, folks,
On de cross-sticks, by de spout.
Shove de wag'n in de shade, folks;
Take de halter off ole Bess;
Don't do no work to-day, folks;
Kase Dan'el's gone to res'.

I know'd dat deff was nigh, folks,
By signs dat neve' fail.
De dog laid on her back, folks,
An' h'ist her legs no' tail.
De screech owls in de holler
Dey screech dey very bes',
An' de rooster on de door step crow'd
'Fore Dan'el went to res'.

You'll miss him when de horn bloa's
To start de plow han's goin';
You'll miss him when de crap's pitched;
You'll miss him wid de hoein'.
You'll miss him mos' at ginnin' time;
Fur de quickes' and de bes'
Uv all de ginners lef' de stan's
When Dan'el went to res'.

I'll miss him mos' uv evenin' times.
Who'll drive de cows home now?
Who'll eat his bowl of clabber up?
Who'll feed de ole blue sow?
Ole Shag, his dog, she takes on bad!
She wurrent much, at bes',
But she ain't no 'count at all, now,
Sence Dan'el's gone to res'.

The sun don' seem to shine, folks,
Jus, like it allers does.
The house is still so' lonesome like,
(I hears de skeeters bozz')
We's in de Farder's ban's, folks,
An' I 'spose He knows de bes';
But it's hard to stay behin', folks,
W'en Dan'el's gone to res'.

Den step up to de House, Liz,
An' tell 'em Dan'el's gone;
An' ax 'em fur a pa'r uv sheets;
Fur mine is clean done gone.
An' I'd thank de Boss's wife, too,
Fur a secon' han' black dress.
I'd like to look de mourner now
Dat Dan'el's gone to res'.

It seems fur all de worl,' folks,
Like haff uv me wuz gone;
We've lived together, Dan an' me,
Sence Sandy thar wuz bo'n:
An' we'll live together yet, please God.
In de relms uv de blest'
So I'll wait in lowly pashuns
Till we bof shill be at res'.

ONLY TWO BEECHNUTS.

An Interesting Love Story of Revolutionary Times.

An old brown farm house has stood for years on the highway between Ridgefield and South Salem, in Connecticut. It was so near the New York and Connecticut boundary line that a stone could be thrown twenty yards or more from the door steps into either State. It has sheltered generation after generation of the same family for more than a hundred years. A few days ago it became necessary to tear down this old building, and in removing the discarded furniture that had grown shaky with years of solitude in the musty garret, a small chest was found. Nothing was in it but a package no larger than a spool. On opening the tattered, faded paper covering two beechnuts were disclosed, exactly alike, perfectly preserved and whose shells were as hard as glass. An examination of the crumbling inclosure revealed some writing that was scarcely legible. The almost vanished sentence was deciphered as follows:

"These are the beechnuts that Philip and Martha exchanged October 19th, 1778."

The little nuts that had lain for a hundred years untouched are now to be carefully preserved, especially as associated with them is a family tradition. The history which the discovery of these beechnuts has revived is as follows: A huge bowlder frowns upon the old Salem turnpike perhaps a mile from the New York State line. It conceals the highway toward the west by reason of the sharp turn that is made around it. Leaning against the bowlder one mild afternoon in October, 1778, was a young man. His eyes were resting on the vista of buff, brown, and scarlet foliage that stretched far away, and through which patches of blue water of the lake beyond could be seen.

"Beautiful," he said. "Ah, if I only—if I had not this business in hand: and their outposts are just beyond."

Even as he spoke he started, listened, and in an instant so changed his manner that he seemed a tired and listless soldier, with no care for the landscape that had charmed him.

As the footsteps that had caused the change of manner approached, and seemed about to round the boulder, he still kept his eyes half closed with the expression of weariness, nor did he lift them until the steps stopped in front of him. Then looking up he saw a child, a girl of ten or twelve, may be. The little one spoke.

"Where is your musket?" she asked.

"Are you then so used to seeing soldiers with guns, my maid, that you wonder I haven't any?"

"Not always, but now. Why, my father and my brother John have gone away with their muskets, and so has every one."

"Mayhap they have gone shooting the game?"

"Oh, no; for they put on their three-cornered hats, like yours, and I did hear my brother say surely there'd be a battle to-morrow."

The young soldier no longer assumed the look of wearied indifference. His manner, however, did not suggest to the child that he burned within.

"My little maid," he said, "I have something better than a flint-lock. I will show it to you."

From the inner folds of his homespun coat he drew forth a small portfolio, and then, sitting on a shelf of the rock, opened the case, placed it upon his knee, and then sharpened a crayon.

"Your pretty face, my maid, is set so charmingly by the bright leaves on the bank back of you, that if you will let me I will sketch it, and you may have the portrait."

The child's eyes sparkled, but she said: "You were tired and almost asleep as I came."

A slight, quick smile, though tempered with sadness, flitted over the young man's face, and he said: "Yes, but you have awakened me. Now stand as still as you can."

With quick, vigorous strokes the young man plied his crayon, now and then glancing up at the child's face. Both were silent some moments. At length he said: "And so your brother does predict a battle to-morrow?"

"Yes. He did say so, and did ask sister Martha to make cartridges for him."

"And now he has gone—there, there, my maid," for he saw her chin quiver. "He will come back. Mayhap there'll be no battle."

They were silent a few moments longer; then he said: "Which way did your father and brother go, my child?"

"By the turnpike to the White Plains."

"Oh, ho! oh, yes, of course, to the White Plains. There," holding up the portrait, "there, I have foreshortened the nose a little too much. When I have fixed that it will be done." Then with a few rapid strokes he finished the sketch and gave it to the child.

"It's my face! It's my face!" cried the child.

"Now, what is your name, that I may write it beneath the protrait?"

She told him, and he wrote:

"Ruth Phillips, by Philip."

"There," he said, "my first name is the same as your last one. That is nice, isn't it?"

As she stood gazing at the portrait the young soldier quickly took a small map from his portfolio and traced with his finger the highway until it stopped at a point marked White Plains. Then he studied it a moment, and was about to turn away when the clatter of horse's hoofs startled him. The rider, by the sound, was pressing his steed to his best mettle. Almost abruptly the young soldier seized the child and led her to the seat on the rock. Then, with such fluency as caused her to raise her eyes in some surprise, he spoke of the picture, and was thus engaged, as he intended to be, when the horseman dashed by. The horse was checked as suddenly as though shot dead, and the young man thereupon lifted his tall figure that had been bending over the child, turned slowly, and when he looked up the weary careworn expression was again on his face. It was changed, however, to a look of surprise that was not counterfeited as his eyes fell on a young woman. Though the soldier steadily received the look that the girl gave him from eyes that were rounded with astonishment as they were luminous and searching, yet he did not fail to note the exquisite picture that she made. The high and jauntily poised riding hat that the burning leaves of a maple almost touched as with a fiery plume; the thick roll of hair, the complexion that was brighter than that of a leaf that almost rested on the cheek; the figure seated as though horse and rider were molded together; the coal-black animal gently pawing the earth, all backed by the brilliancy of the forest, this picture gladdened his artistic eye. Yet his active mind was busy with queries as to her identity. But the little girl solved the question. She said: "Oh, Patty, see the picture of me the man did draw."

The older sister put out her unoccupied hand and received the portrait, not yet taking her eyes from the soldier. At last she glanced at the portrait, then scrutinized it more closely till it seemed to the young man that many minutes had passed. At length she turned to him, and said: "You did this!"

The soldier bowed, and the young woman made mental note of the grace with which this common soldier made courtesy.

"What for?" she asked, though her tones were not so abrupt as the words.

"The little maid pleased me."

"It is almost perfect."

"I am as well aware as you that it is not so."

"Who are you?"

He smiled slightly, for he could not help it, at the imperious manner of the girl, but he said, quietly: "A Continental soldier."

"You w... ...up, and fell behind.

The soldier bowed.

"Don't you know you are on dangerous ground. You are within the British lines."

"I hope soon to be safe."

The young woman gathered up her reins, saying as she did so: "Ruth, you should not stray so far from home. Come with me." Then she seemed to hesitate, and at length said to the young soldier, who had not stirred: "How long time needed you to draw this?"

"But a few minutes."

"They are precious. Dare you draw mine?"

"It would be a pleasure."

"Will you?"

"Remain, then, as you." Again drawing forth his portfolio and fixing one long, searching glance on the girl, he began his work. As he went on she had both desire and opportunity to observe him. She saw that he was tall, sinewy, young, and, as he looked up with the inquiring glance of the artist, it was impressed upon her that he was handsome and strong beyond all men she had ever seen. She saw the quick, sometimes strong, sometimes delicate strokes of the crayon, and saw grace in both. He ventured not a word. At length the girl said: "Who is your commander?"

He seemed not to hear, and she asked again. Without pausing in his work he said: "Colonel Tyler of the Seventh Connecticut."

"You are from below?"

"I was."

"That is what I mean. You were a portrait sketcher?"

"Yes, in New York, before the war."

Suddenly she said: "Do you know you may be killed to-morrow?"

"Perhaps."

"I mean that a great battle is expected."

The young man made a most vigorous stroke, but without looking up said, quietly: "You are better informed than I. I shall reach my command to-night."

"I have been doing my part, too," she said. "I myself rode to Danbury this morning bearing the commission to the commanding officer that the British troops were gathering at the White Plains, and that he and his command must march at once and concentrate at Bedford before daylight. I tell you," she added, "because by taking the short cut you might fall in the sooner with the army."

Here the young man snapped a crayon, and, while sharpening it, said: "Thank you, for the suggestion. It must be ten miles to Danbury?"

"Yes."

"You must have pushed your horse?"

"Indeed, I did."

When next he looked up the portrait was done. He gave it to her with a graceful bow, and the manner of indifference, but she saw that his face was as white as the paper itself. For some moments she studied the picture. Then she said: "It is a marvel. It must be my very truthful portrait. I thank you, sir," and she extended her hand.

As he took it, she said: "I wish I had something that I might give you in return for this." I now fear that I was far too presumptuous to ask you to do this."

"Your honored me, and have repaid me."

"We may meet again, sir, when I can better repay you."

He said: "We may: who knows?" Then as his eyes fell on the ground he spied a number of beechnuts that had fallen from the tree overhead. He picked up two of them.

"See," he said, "these nuts are exactly alike. You said we might meet again. I will give this one and will keep the other. If we meet again we will put them side by side as they are now. You can repay me by doing this. It is only a whim of mine."

She looked at him curiously for a moment and then said: "Why, that is a playful thing to do; but if you wish it I will," and she thrust the beechnut under her glove. When she looked back after she had gone down the road a piece he still stood there with head uncovered as when she quitted him. Had she looked later she would have seen the young soldier rushing with mighty strides in a direction opposite to what he had all day been taking, and if she had read his thoughts she would have known that he was thanking God he had met her.

One evening in mid-winter, more than a year later, there were gathered about the open fire-place in the living room of the Phillips' mansion, the young woman, Martha, her little sister Ruth, and an elderly woman, who was plainly the mother. A tap at the door did not fail to cause all three to start a little. Troublous times again had come on this part of the country. Rumors of an advance prevailed. Father and brother had again set out with the contingent troops to repel a threatened invasion. However, Mistress Martha did not hesitate to open the door. So far, at least, their home had been respected by both armies. There stood on the steps a tall man, whose great coat was slightly sprinkled with the snow that was beginning to fall. He did not offer to enter until bidden; but he said, with great courtesy, that he was a belated traveler, compelled to ask shelter and food, if so be the inmates felt safe in extending such hospitalities.

"Bid the gentleman in, Martha," said the mother, and when he had, with exquisite grace, bowed and thanked her, he asserted that nothing but the direst necessity would have compelled him to intrude himself.

"These are, indeed, sad times, sir," said the mother. "Twice before my husband and son have been called away to defend the country. I know not where they may be to-night, but the good Lord will protect them and us."

"Is there, then, disturbance in these parts?" asked the stranger.

"Have you not heard and seen, sir, and you a traveler?"

"I had supposed the operations were to the west, else I might not have ventured on my journey."

The old lady glanced quickly at him for a moment, as though wishing to scan so strange a person as this, who did not know what was going on about him, but neither by hint of word or action did she betray any surprise.

The stranger was young and neatly dressed in a heavy, close-fitting surtout that reached to his top boots. His hair, which was long, fell in curly locks almost to his shoulder, and it was of a yellow tinge, almost approaching whiteness. The old lady at once perceived that whoever her guest was, he was a gentleman, and as he addressed himself entirely to her she soon found herself interested in him. Though she frequently referred to the topic that was uppermost in her mind, he seemed to care little about the war. The old lady decided that he must be a merchant from below, who had ventured thus far towards the British outposts—which then included the Phillips' homestead—for purposes of business. Meanwhile Martha had herself prepared a repast, of which she at length invited the stranger to partake. Then for the first time he took note of the girl.

"We have simple fare, now," she said.

"The simplest fare has always been my choice and habit," he said, and then added: "This must be a lonely life for you, though perhaps an exciting one."

"Not lonely when father and brother are here and when there is no war."

"Your father and brother are in the field?"

"Yes, sir."

"It is a pitiable lot for you, indeed?"

"No, sir; no, indeed! We are glad we have a father and brother to fight for our country."

The stranger looked at her for a moment with such admiration as could give no offense. Then he said: "That is, indeed, true patriotism."

She was silent for so long a time that he stopped for a moment as he ate and said: "Is there, then, to be fighting near by?"

"Father did say to us as he went away: 'There will be no general battle, but we are going with the contingent and regulars to cut off the approach of the British.' They do expect by night of to-morrow to have thrown up such forts or defenses as will head off the British, and as it is but twelve miles away where they do so at the Carmel Cross Roads, may be father and brother will be home Saturday."

Here the stranger seemed much occupied with his meal, nor did he pause in the eating of it until, seemingly conscious that some one was gazing fixedly at him, he looked up and encountered the steady eye of the little Ruth. He smiled pleasantly and said: "How, then, little maid, do you, too, miss your father?"

"You do make me think of my picture man," the child said.

"Have you a picture man?"

"The man who drew my picture. Shall I show it to you?"

"Yes, indeed."

The child brought not only her own, but the crayon of her sister.

"They are well done: well done, little maid, but you have grown older since this was made."

"Yes, more than a year."

"A year, indeed," said he half meditatively.

"My sister Patty looks every day at hers, and sometimes I do hear her say: 'I wonder if I shall ever see him again.'"

"Hush, Ruth, the gentleman cares for nothing of that sort," said Martha.

"But I am interested."

As they sat by the fire, later, chatting, and while Martha was meditating upon which of the two spare rooms to put the stranger into for the night, there was heard without a sound that rose above the moaning of the wind.

"What is that?" asked Martha.

The stranger hastened to the window, and even as he did so the sound grew louder and more significant. It was the yell of maddened men, and now as the curtains were tossed aside, they saw a yellow light through and beyond the thick falling snow flakes. The light grew brighter and brighter.

"It is the army," said Martha.

"Which one?" asked the mother.

"The British, I think. Look, they are burning Neighbor Keeler's house. They will come here. They have threatened before. They will burn the house and they may kill us. See there, over the hill; they are coming. There, they have set fire to the hay rick. Mother, be calm. They shall not hurt you, I will not let them," and the girl turned with flashing eyes and flushed cheeks and seemed to be going to seek for a weapon. But she was stayed. The stranger, whom they had forgotten, had gently restrained her. She looked at him inquiringly, and he said: "They will do you no harm."

The madmen rushed on down the hill, and there were two big fellows at the front. They wore the uniform of the British army. They were, indeed, on a tour of devastation and ruin. Just as they reached the stone fence that inclosed the yard before the house, and were about to surmount it, the stranger went out, and stood with the snow whitening his bare head. He lifted his arm, and the two big men stopped, as did those behind them, and after the stranger had said a word or two to them, they turned and went their way. When he returned to the house his manner was as calm as it had been an hour before. To their thanks he simply replied: "You deserved protection. You have earned it."

Then he bade them farwell, though they expressed much astonishment thereat, and pleaded with him to stay. "I must hasten on my journey," he said. "Before I go, however, I would ask if Mistress Martha can produce the counterpart of this?" and, thrusting his hand into his bosom, he drew forth a beechnut.

"I knew it. I did know it," said little Ruth; but Martha made no respone, only turned for a moment so that her face and her bosom were turned from him, and when she again faced him she, too, held in her hand a beechnut.

"I am very glad," he said. "When we meet again you may then not know me except by this same token."

He said this somewhat sadly, and before another word was said, departed. A moment later he mounted a horse that had been held in waiting for him in the highway, and galloped forth into the snow and darkness.

When the buds were bursting into blossoms some five months later, and when Martha was reaching her dimpled arms up among the lilac flowers one day, she turned suddenly and there behind her stood a tall young man in the uniform of an American officer. His hair was black, his face pale and unshaven, and he was plainly laboring with excitement or trouble. He said nothing until she had first spoken.

"You have come again," she said, with tone half tremulous, half cold.

"This time a supplicant. I see you know me now. I am my natural self, but for these clothes. Protect me, mistress, I beseech you!"

"Protect you?"

"Yes, for unless you do in an hour I shall be captured. I can escape no further."

"Why should I? You saved us that night: you—you—no, I will not. You betrayed my girlish, foolish confidence twice, and may thereby have cost us our country's cause. From my words the day you drew my picture you learned enough to enable your army to defeat us at White Plains. From my foolish speech the night you rescued us you gathered enough to foil the plans of our people, and cause thereby my brother to be brought home dead. I trusted you then for what you assumed to be. They have told me whom I did then harbor."

"Then you know my name?"

"Yes."

"Well, tell me."

She leaned forward, and her face was white as her neck as she whispered.

"Yes," he said, "I am he."

"Then you must go your way."

"You forget. I only did my duty, and I never asked you for the words you spoke."

"And I must do my duty now."

"My pursuers will be after me in a moment."

"Do not ask me to do this. I can not."

He returned and saw the cavalry coming over the hill, and then he turned again and looked at her with unspeakable sadness. She saw the horsemen, too, and knew that he had given up hope. He tore open his vest and drew some papers therefrom that he rapidly destroyed. Reserving one, he held it to her and said in the saddest tones she had ever heard:

She would neither take it nor speak, but the paper was taken from his hand by little Ruth, who had come there unobserved.

"I will, Mr. Picture Man."

"Thank you, and God bless you, my child! You keep it, and give it to your sister by noon of to-morrow."

The cavalry had now spied him, and were putting their horses to their best. He held his hand out to Martha. In it was the beechnut. Without taking her eyes from his, she thrust her hand into her bosom, and when she withdrew it there was within it the other beechnut. When the soldiers a moment later seized him he bade Martha farewell and kissed little Ruth. Then he took Martha's limp hand and placed therein the beechnut. Then they led him away.

At evening two soldiers delivered to Martha a crayon likeness of herself that they said their commander had instructed them to bring. They said it had been taken from the man who was captured there that morning. It had been drawn from memory, according to the note at the bottom.

"Where is he now?" she asked.

The soldiers seemed confused. At last one pointed to the ground, and then they both rode rapidly away.

"Dead," she said, "I did not think it meant that. I let them kill him," and an hour later they found her there under the lilac trees. When, a year later, just after they returned from the old burying ground, where they had laid Martha's body, they found among her other treasures the two beechnuts wrapped together. They put them away in the old chest.—N. Y. Sun.

REPPED FABRICS.

Three Varieties of Imported Goods From Which Stylish Costumes May be Made.

Repped fabrics are largely used in imported costumes, and are shown here principally in three materials, viz., Sicilienne, gros-grain, and Irish poplin. The Sicilienne is silky and soft, alike on both sides, drapes beatifully, and is now shown in the single widths that cut advantageously for dresses. It comes in all the dark rich colors for the entire dress, with elaborate embroideries wrought on the material or else applied for the trimming. The plum and dahlia shades are particularly stylish in Sicilienne dresses, and black dresses of this material are very elegant, and are liked more especially by elderly ladies. Gros grain, faille, Bengaline and Victorienne are the pure soft silks so much used by Worth in combination with figured or with plain velvets. There are elegant black gros grain or faille dresses now made with their only ornament pinked flounces of the material laid on pinked bands of velvet. For instance, the round skirt has the short apron drapery and long back drapery of plain black gros grain, while across the front and side breadths covering the space from the apron down are three gathered ruffles of the silk pinked in leaves two inches deep, resting on straight black velvet three inches wide that is pinked in similar leaves. The silk basque has a plain postilion back, but the front has a pleated vest, with the inner pleats falling on two pinked velvet bands. This simple design is repeated in all dark silks, and affords a relief from the elaborate combinations so much used at present. Pym's Irish poplins are again in the market in all the stylish shades of brown, dahlia, and smoky grays, and are also used in London dresses in bright shades of poppy red and in navy blue. The striped poplins are in great favor abroad, especially in red with green, blue, or brown, and are employed for skirts, with a basque of the solid-colored poplin in either the bright or dark shade. There are also pretty house dresses imported in very light shades of poplin, such as ecru, fawn, pearl, gray, or the palest sky blue. These are made in the quaint yet simple-looking styles that young English women have adopted, with the round waist folded in front in surplice fashion, and gathered to a belt, while the skirt has very long and graceful drapery that nearly covers the foundation, requiring only a ruche or narrow ruffles at the foot; this in the lightest golden brown shades is worn by brunettes and blondes. It is thought sufficiently dressy for an afternoon reception, a short mantle is added of velvet of the same shade, and the toque—which partakes both of a bonnet and a turban in shape—is made with a brim of blue velvet and a soft crown of the poplin.—Harper's Bazar.

—It takes one thousand roses to yield two grains of attar. In the morning the red blooms are collected by hand and distilled into clay stills with twice their weight of water—the water which comes over being set to cool all night, and throwing up the thin film of oil, which covers it in the morning like cream on new milk. This is the attar, which must be carefully swept off with a feather, and transferred to a small vial. After repeating this operation night after night and morning after morning, nearly the whole of the oil has been extracted, the little which it is impossible to separate so flavoring the liquid that it is sold as "rose-water."—Boston Transcript.

—One most enjoyable feature of the legal anecdote is that the joke is generally at the narrator's own expense, instead of ours—as the law in other respects is so apt to be. This gives all the charm of novelty, and it is cheering to reflect that lawyers do have anything at their own expense, if it's only a joke.—San Franciscan.

HOME AND FARM.

—Cover plants with a newspaper before sweeping. Also put a little ammonia upon them once a week.

—Hemorrhages of the lungs or stomach may be quickly stopped by small doses of salt or half-teaspoonful doses of powdered charcoal every half hour.—Toledo Blade.

—To feed potatoes, carrots, beets or parsnips to horses, cut them into slices not more than an inch thick and sprinkle them liberally with bran, to which a little salt has been added.—Prairie Farmer.

—Fodder that is properly saved and fed in combination with clover hay and grain is of equal value with timothy hay by weight, says Prof. Sanborn; but such fodder is very different from that which is exposed to frost and bleaching rains.—Troy Times.

—Apple Johnny Cake: Take one pint of white Indian meal, two tablespoonfuls of sugar, a half teaspoonful each of salt and soda, one teaspoonful of cream tartar, milk enough to mix quite soft, and three apples, pared and sliced. Mix in the order given and bake in a shallow cake-pan thirty minutes.—The Household.

—The fine dust from much traveled roads has considerable manuring properties. Some farmers have used it as a divisor to more evenly distribute phosphate in drilling grain. It is excellent to cover hen droppings, as it absorbs the ammonia which would otherwise escape.—New England Farmer.

—After the crops are all harvested, the wood lot should receive attention. Trimming off the low branches of trees intended for timber, and cutting out the lower underbrush, will admit more air and light and promote a quicker growth. A good part of the supply of fire wood may perhaps be thus obtained which otherwise would be mostly wasted.—N. Y. Herald.

—It is well understood by farmers that there is a joint worm that attacks barley, and often makes it light weight. It is similar to but distinct from a joint worm that attacks wheat. It is believed, however, that the barley joint worm also, under some circumstances, attacks the winter grain, and hence is suggested a caution against preceding wheat with barley, which is quite common in winter wheat growing localities.—Exchange.

—Housekeeper's Weights and Measures: Two gills make half a pint. Two pints make one quart. Four quarts make one gallon. Half a gallon is a quarter of a peck. Two gallons make one peck. Four gallons make half a bushel. Eight gallons make one bushel. About sixty drops of any thin liquid will fill a common-sized teaspoon. Four tablespoons, or one-half a gill, will fill a common-sized wineglass. Four wineglasses will fill a half pint measure, a common tumbler, or a large coffee-cup. Ten eggs usually weigh one pound before they are broken. A tablespoonful of salt weighs one ounce.

THE ENAMELING ART.

One of the Oldest in the World—Works of Leonard Limousin.

The renaissance enamels of Limoges in general, and of Leonard Limousin in particular, must, although during many generations they suffered under a curious depreciation in price, continue to be precious and eagerly sought for, for the simple reason that "grandes pieces" of this wonderfully beautiful ware are exceedingly scarce, and that it was precisely in 1555 that this rare talent had reached its acme. Enameling is one of the oldest arts in the world, but that which may be termed painter's enamel, or enamels executed on a single surface, instead of incised surfaces, is a distinct outcome of the rennaisance, and was provoked by the desire to possess imperishable reproductions for decorative purposes of the great works of art which had been painted in Italy by Leonard da Vinci, by Raphaelle, and their successors. The movement began in the first years of the sixteenth century; among the first promoters of the new process was a glass painter of Limoges named Nardon Penicaud, one of whose masterpieces, executed for the poet king Rene of Taudemont and Lorraine, and dated 1503, is now in the Cluny Museum, at Paris. In 1532 Francis I. of France, who with all his faults was as magnificent a patron of the arts as our Charles I. was afterward, caused to be established a manufacture of enamels at Limoges, the direction of which he intrusted to Leonard, called "Lemousin," or "Limosin." The artist, by express directions from his royal master, procured from Italy accurate copies of the best works of Raffaelle, Giulio Romanon and Pinnaliccio, and he also had recourse to the great draughtsman and sculptor of the French renaissance, Jean Cousin. The earlier works of Le Limousin had been medieval and almost Byzantine in style, but the contemplation of the renaissance models sent him from Italy led him to imitate the purer and more correct forms of revival of Greek art. His mode of treatment was essentially his own. The general effect of his work was brilliant, light and harmonious, relieved and cheered by bright sky, blue tints and turquoise-blue sparkling on a shining ground. He was specially distinguishable by a bright yellow which he introduced into the hair of his personages, and by pink and limpid flesh-tints, which added to the feeling of delighted surprise excited by his enamels, the effect of which has been compared to the chameleon-like brilliancy of shot satin. No one knew so well as he how to make touches of gold with which to brighten the effect of his medallions on a black ground. During his years of active life his productiveness was astonishing, but his later enamels, which come down to 1574, show the marks of an aged and failing hand. Yet, notwithstanding the multitude of dishes, vases, ewers, goblets, portraits and plaques in grissaile, cups and bowls, signed by his well-known monogram of "L. L.," sometimes accompanied by a fleur-de-lis, the more important pieces of "The Limousin," soon grew rare. Many of his works have mysteriously disappeared. A large proportion of these vanished enamels were, in all probability, melted down during the stormy days of the first revolution in France, the perpetrators of the acts of vandalism being under the impression that the enamels were painted on gold and silver plate, whereas in the great majority of instances a substratum of copper was the material used. A very singular fate overtook no fewer than a score of enamels on which he had most sedulously labored. Francis I., being desirous of decorating the saloons of his newly-erected Chateau de Madrid, in the Bois de Boulogne, with the most splendid specimens procurable of Limoges enamels, commissioned Limousin to paint twenty pictures of the extraordinary dimensions of five feet in length by four in height illustrative of the heathen mythology. Twenty years were spent by the master enamellist of Limoges and his pupils in execution of these pictures; but Francis died in 1574, and not one of the twenty enameled pictures was ever delivered. They remained in the possession of the heirs of Leonard le Limousin until the outbreak of the revolution—a period of more than two hundred years—and a French critic, writing in 1810, stated that the twenty enamels of extraordinary dimensions were purchased in 1808 by a Milor Anglais, who sent them to England. Where are they, and how many guineas apiece would they bring were they put up at public auction?—London Telegraph.

The Exclusive Briton and the Yankee.

The following anecdote is told in relation to the unsociable habits of Englishmen who travel. An old American gentleman was traveling from Liverpool to London. Three gentlemen in all occupied the carriage; and for an hour after the train had begun its journey never one exchanged a syllable with another. At last the American broke silence, and said: "Gentlemen, I am I—— D——, I have come from ——, I have been a merchant for fifty years, and now I am living in ease. I am eighty years of age, and I have two eyes and one tongue, and, like a great many of my countrymen, I take pleasure in using them. My eyes feel the period in which they have done me service, and I can not read for the motion of the train. Having introduced myself, I trust gentlemen, you will not look upon me as a pickpocket." At this one of the gentlemen drew out his card-case and gave his card. This example was immediately followed by the other. "What, gentlemen," said the American, "you do not seem to know one another; let me introduce you;" and with that he crossed his arms and presented the card of one to the other. This was the beginning of a warm and long friendship.—London Echo.

At the Skating Rink.

"Never was so insulted in my life," said Mrs. Jones when she came home from the Casino the other night.

"What's the matter now?" inquired Jones, looking up from his paper.

"Why, I put on roller skates for the first time in my life to-night, and I was skating beautifully, when some one must have jostled me, for I felt myself going down, and I just caught hold of a lady who was skating near to save myself. Talk about women standing by each other!"

"They can't on roller skates," suggested Jones. "What did the woman do?"

"Do! She jerked herself away and screamed out so's everybody heard her, 'Take your hands out of my pocket!' The idea."

"Did you have your hand in her pocket?" asked Jones, getting interested.

But Maria gave him a withering look and was silent.—Detroit Free Press.

A Day of Suspense.

"Mr. Smartman, that wretched dog of yours digs and scratches in my garden all day, chases my hens till they can't lay and then howls and barks the live-long night."

"Oh, well, tie him up, then, if he annoys you. I don't hear him. Haven't time to look after him myself, but if he bothers you, tie him up."

Three days later. Mr. Smartman has been hunting high and low for his dog the past forty-eight hours.

"Slowboy, I can't find my dog anywhere. Has he been about your place?"

"Certain. He's in my barn now. You told me to catch him and tie him up."

Smartman goes into the barn and finds his dog "tied up" to a rafter fourteen feet from the floor by a piece of rope five feet long. Tableau, with red fire and slow curtain.—Burdette in Brooklyn Eagle.

The Carman's Smart Horse.

A gentleman traveling through Ireland with a very stout companion had occasion to hire a jaunting-car, and, having agreed with the driver for half a crown, stepped back to the inn where he was staying and called his fat friend. The driver, as soon as he caught a glimpse of the enormous dimensions of his "face," walked up to the head of his horse, and holding up the tattered lappets of a worn-out jacket, said: "Whist, sir, get up as lightly as ye can, will ye?" "What, is your beast skittish?" "No, sir," said Pat, with an inimitable shrewd leer, "but if he saw the big gentleman he'd most likely say, 'Whist, Pat, but it ought to be five shillings.'"

—A gentleman who was traveling through West Virginia went to a house and got food for himself and companion and their horses. He wanted to make payment, but the woman was ashamed to take money for a mere act of kindness. He pressed the money upon her. Finally she said: "If you don't think I am mean I will take one quarter of a dollar from you, so as to look at it now and then, for there has been no money in this house for a year." The little farm and barter at the store had supplied all the absolute wants of this woman.—N. Y. Herald.

—Nearly a million and a half of dollars for the land skirting Niagara Falls on the American side seems to be an imensely inflated price, seeing the poor uses to which it has hitherto been put; yet still it is better to be swindled in a lump even to that amount than to tolerate any longer the humiliating extortions and frauds to which visitors are put.—Philadelphia Public Ledger.

—There is a general harmony between the colors of an animal and those of its habitation. We have the white polar bear, the sand-colored camel, and the dusky twilight moths. There are birds and reptiles so tinted and mottled as exactly to match rocks, or ground, or bark of the tree they frequent.

—Says the London St. James' Gazette: "Murders of the most atrocious character are now common incidents, and there probably never was a time when, if the truth were told, life was so unsafe as it is in London at the present moment.

What to Leave Out.

It is quite impossible to read everything, to go everywhere, to see everybody, for all of which opportunities offer, without losing in this rush of life the power to take a distinct impression. Now to hold one's self susceptible to impressions; to keep one's self en rapport with select and sympathetic currents, to be responsive to the finer and subtler influences, is to hold the key of the situation. It is often the book we do not read, the entertainment at which we do not assist, the individual we do not see, that does the most real good. Life becomes deteriorated and miscellaneous if it is not subjected to the severe scrutiny of selection—a matter of which it is easier to preach than to practice. Over-possession is the fatal endowment of modern life.—Lilian Whiting

$20,000 Gone!

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.—The Chronicle publishes in substance the following marvel. "Captain W. F. Swasey, the oldest pioneer of the coast, makes a statement of the intense suffering of his friend Colonel D. J. Williamson, an Army officer of distinction, and an Ex-U. S. Consul, who was attacked in the winter of 1861-2 with violent rheumatism. So great was his agony in after years he became a helpless cripple, and after trying numberless remedies, the baths of other countries and spending a fortune of $20,000, the disease seemed to assume a more virulent type. Finally, he was persuaded to try St. Jacobs Oil, the great conqueror of pain. It worked a miracle of cure. In a letter to the Chronicle he confirms Captain Swasey's statement and adds: "I cheerfully give my unqualified attestation to the truthfulness of the statement, because I feel perfectly certain that a knowledge of my cure by St. Jacobs Oil will prove the means of relieving hundreds of sufferers."

PETROLEUM is evidently going to be the fuel of the future, and it is desirable that the deposits, which appear to exist in almost every country, and to be practically inexhaustible, should be tapped and made available. The indications are that it will be so cheap in the future that it will not bear transportation, and each section will depend on its own product.

IT seems that the Nile expedition is to cost England besides the $1,500,000 which was voted at the first flush, $5,000,000 for the army and $1,720,000 for the navy. Of course these expenses, coming unawares, must be met by new means. In this instance it is by an increase of 1d. to the income tax, which will yield $9,600,000 of increase to the income of the Government.

PROF. BECK, of Williamsport, Pa., has made a series of microscopic investigations of beer. He says he found two hundred bacteria—living microbes in a sample of beer which was magnified eight hundred diameters by a microscope, and proved to his own satisfaction, and the disgust of beer-drinkers, that that particular sample of beer averaged about 8,000,000 parasites to a drop, 480,000,000 to a teaspoonful, and 25,000,000,000 to a schooner.

ONE of the early contributions toward building the Washington monument was a block of African marble, sent by the Pope. One Sunday night in March, 1854, a few disguised men broke into the lapidarium where it was placed and the watchman quieted by a pistol pointed at his head. The Pope's gift was then placed on a truck carried to the bank of the Potomac River, loaded on a scow, taken to the middle of the river, thrown overboard and sunk.

EVERY committee room of the Senate has been supplied with an electric bell, which is rung by a touch upon a button in the Senate chamber. The sound of the bell at any time during the sessions of the Senate will be a summons to Senators in the committee rooms to appear in the Senate chamber. Under the old plan, when a roll-call came up, or any business demanding the presence of Senators, pages had to be sent in search of those not in the chamber.

The Sentence of the Cannibals Commuted to Six Months' Imprisonment.

Explosion Under the London Bridge—Baby Insurance—Toys Under Censorship.

LONDON, December 14.—A terrific explosion occurred yesterday morning under the London bridge. The latest account shows explosive material was thrown from the bridge, and striking the water burst into flame. The explosion was heard ten miles outside of London. At Woolwich arsenal the gates were shaken. The police think a boat containing the explosive with a burning fuse attached was allowed to drift beneath the bridge. A careful inspection of London bridge was made to-day. It was found that no injury to the structure whatever was done. A policeman who at the time of the explosion was standing on the top of the steps leading to the steamboat pier on the Surrey side of the river, with his back to the stream, says he saw a blinding glare, like a sheet of lightning, which was followed by a terrific report. He was almost stunned, and his helmet was blown some yards away by concussion. The houses damaged were on the Middlesex side, where the windows were smashed as far as Billingsgate Market. Several panes of glass were broken in Fishmongers' Hall, but otherwise the building received no damage.

LONDON, December 14.—The sentence of Captain Dudley and Mate Stephens, the Mignonette cannibals, is commuted from hanging to six months' imprisonment without labor.

PARIS, December 14.—The Prefecture of Police in Paris has ... on the models of all the Christmas toys being submitted for censorship. All models recalling the war in China were prohibited, Mandarins and Black Flags were not allowed to be caricatured, nor the storming of Sontay to be celebrated, but a figure of the Mahdi was passed, according to which he is a portly Turk, and he spins around, being touched by a spring.

Masonic Convention.

BOSTON, December 14.—A Masonic Convention was held the past week of all Masons of the United States of America having taken "the ninetieth degree or ninety-fifth degree of either the Rites of Memphis or Mizraim or thirtieth degree or thirty-five degree of the ancient and primitive rites, no matter when or from whom, or under what jurisdiction," for the purpose of "considering the advisability of establishing a Union Sovereign Sanctuary, embracing all the mysteries of the above named rites from the fourth to the ninety-sixth degree inclusive, to be known as the Sovereign Sanctuary of the Royal Masonic Rite for the United States of America." The body organized with Judge Isaac H. Parish, of Michigan, as Most Illustrious Past Grand Master.

Colored Oystermen Drowned.

BALTIMORE, December 12.—Officers of the steamer L. Weems, which arrived this morning from the Rappahannock River, Virginia, report a fearful loss of life among colored oystermen on that river in the storms of Tuesday last. About twenty-five colored men were out in their boats tonging for oysters when the storm arose. The gale capsized almost all of them, and those who escaped were unable to reach the shore in safety. The men were thrown into the rough water, unable to swim ashore. Many of them clung to the boats for a time, but were finally washed away and drowned. Very few escaped. Eleven bodies have been recovered already, and as many more are said to be missing. It is scarcely possible that any of the latter have escaped death.

Destructive Conflagration.

INDIANAPOLIS, IND., December 14.—A special to the Times gives some details of a disastrous conflagration at Brookville. Early this morning a fire started in Joseph Schmidt's clothing store, and the principal block on the main street of the town was entirely destroyed. The merchants who lose heavily are: J. A. Popper, Joseph Schmidt, A. H. Kaiser, G. T. Hutchinson and Mrs. Link. Odd-Fellows' Hall was also consumed. The total loss on buildings and stock will aggregate $80,000. The insurance is placed partially in the Franklin, of Indianapolis, and the Home, of New York.

Sunday-School Celebration.

BALTIMORE, December 14.—The pulpits of all the Methodist churches in this city were occupied to-day by delegates to the Centenary Conference. In the afternoon there was a Sunday-school celebration. Twenty-five thousand children participated. It was held in twenty-one churches, fifteen white, representing forty-three congregations, and six colored, representing thirteen congregations.

Temperance Revival.

PITTSBURGH, December 14.—The Murphy temperance revival, started here two weeks ago, is growing rapidly. Six thousand have already joined the blue ribbon army. At a meeting to-night nearly 7,000 persons were present, and 1,100 signed the pledge.

A Young Burglar.

The Extreme of Villainy.

BOSTON, December 12.—Three weeks ago Henry W. Meyers, aged eighteen years, robbed his mother of a bank-book calling for $870. An acquaintance of his named Lizzie Jones personated his mother at the Provident Savings Bank, and drew the entire amount. Subsequently, during the absence of his parents, young Meyers removed all the furniture from their home, and, hiring an old man to personate his father, he succeeded in placing the furniture as collateral with the Boston Loan Company for a considerable sum. Meyers and his accomplices are in custody.

Immigration into Canada.

OTTAWA, ONT., December 14.—From the 1st of January to the 30th of November the total arrivals of immigrants into Canada was 144,000 against 172,000 for the same period last year. Of this total, $64,000 were of persons to settle in Canada, the rest came as passengers to the United States. During the same period last year there arrived 103,000 immigrant settlers for Canada.

HEALTH CONFERENCE.

Recommendations as to the Best Method of Preventing the Introduction of Cholera.

WASHINGTON, December 12.—The Committee on Federal Legislation, appointed by the National Conference of State Boards of Health, has completed a bill which embodies the views of the Conference as to the best methods of preventing the introduction into the United States of cholera and other diseases dangerous to the public health. The first of the ten sections comprised in the bill provides for a National Board of Health, to consist of one member from every State Health Board, now or hereafter established, to be appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate. This differs from the original act, in that it largely increases the membership of the Board and excludes from it medical officers from the army, navy and marine hospital service, and the law officer from the Department of Justice. The second section of the new bill provides, as did the corresponding section of the original act, for the collection and dissemination of sanitary information, etc., but greatly enlarges the scope of the Board's powers by authorizing it to frame rules and regulations for Government quarantine service of the United States, and by vesting in it (the Board) all authority which is now or may hereafter be provided by law for control and protection of the public health. It directs the National Board to co-operate with local Boards as far as it lawfully may and aid in the enforcement of the latter's rules and regulations; but it also authorizes the National Board, upon direction of the President, to act in several States independently, and make and enforce there its own rules, regardless of local Boards. The third section relates to the regulation of the marine quarantine serv... authorizes the National Board to frame rules to be observed by all vessels sailing from foreign ports to ports of the United States; and provides that such rules, when approved by the President and issued by the Department of State, shall be enforced by all consular officers and agents of the United States, as well as by medical officers serving under this act. Section 4 provides that any vessel from any foreign port which shall attempt to enter any port of the United States in violation of the above-mentioned rules and regulations shall be liable to process in the proper District Court of the United States, and upon conviction shall forfeit to the United States a sum to be awarded in the discretion of the Court, not exceeding $1,000, which shall be a lien upon the vessel. In order to show that it has complied with these rules and regulations, every vessel shall be provided with a proper certificate from the U. S. Consular or medical officer at the port of departure, who must be satisfied that the statements therein contained are true. Section 5 provides for a similar observance of these rules, and a corresponding certificate from the health officer at the port of entry. Section 6 authorizes the President of the United States in any threatening emergency, to make known by proclamation, measures which he may think necessary to meet it, such as suspending the introduction by land or sea of any dangerous kind of merchandise, or prohibiting entirely the entry into United States ports of vessels from infected countries. He shall at the same time convene the National Board of Health, in special session, and the measures devised by the latter shall, upon approval by the President, supersede the Executive proclamation. The remaining four sections provide for collection by consular officers of sanitary statistics and information in foreign ports; for detail by the President's departmental officers to serve temporarily under direction of the Board without extra compensation; for the appropriation of $50,000 to meet expenses incurred in carrying out the provisions of the bill, such sums to be distributed under the National Board's direction, and by its own disbursing agents; and for the repeal of all acts inconsistent with the terms of this one. A delegation of physicians and members of State Boards of Health placed the bill in the hands of the House Committee on Public Health this afternoon.

Three Girls' Horrible Fate.

DETROIT, MICH., December 12.—At a quarter past five o'clock this evening the girls employed in the second story of Gray, Toynton & Fox's candy factory, on Woodbridge street, were terrified by seeing fire break out in the rear of the department in which they were employed. A rush was immediately made for the fire escape at the front of the building. The upper sash of one of the windows had been lowered, and the young women had to climb over it in order to reach the balcony. One in descending the ladder slipped and fell to the pavement and was seriously injured. Three girls were then seen to advance to the window, and immediately afterward a volume of fire and smoke burst out over their heads and they were soon hidden from view. When the fire in the second story had been partly subdued the bodies of the three girls were discovered. One lay in the middle of the floor. Her face was badly burnt. The other two were stretched upon benches just beneath the partly open window. Their faces were blackened and presented a saddening sight, but the flames had not touched their bodies.

Idle Workmen.

DETROIT, MICH., December 14.—It is said there are now fully ten thousand men out out of employment in this city, and many more whose time and pay have been reduced. The only interests not affected are tobacco manufactures, furriers and brewers.

New Cable.

PARIS, December 12.—The submarine telegraph cable between Senegal and France has been completed and the first messages passed over the wire, expressing the devotion of the colony to the mother country and reciprocal feeling on the part of the latter.

Salvation Army Captured by Police.

MONTREAL, December 14.—The Salvation Army opened its campaign to-day. At an open-air meeting the crowd was very disorderly, pelting the salvationists with snow and ice. The police took the army to the police station. The army was later bailed, and at night held a meeting in a hall. The crowd again howled the army down, broke the seats, and did considerable other damage. The army retired, followed by the mob yelling and pelting them with snow and ice.

A Dynamite Bomb.

NELSONVILLE, O., December 14.—A dynamite bomb was exploded at the house of a miner named Louderbeck, living in this place. The building was much damaged. Louderbeck is one of the strikers who returned to work.

Big Contracts.

NEW YORK, December 14.—Brown, Howard & Co., of Chicago, have been awarded contracts amounting to $5,297,000, in connection with the building of the new aqueduct for this city.

Ex-Congressman Dead.

LANCASTER, PA., December 12.—Ex-Congressman John Strohm died to-day, aged ninety-one years.

STORM-BEATEN.

The Sea-Wall at Buffalo, N. Y., Broken Down, and Several Houses Washed Away—A Church at Erie, Pa., Leveled.

BUFFALO, N. Y., December 15.—A great wind-storm commenced last evening and in a few hours was blowing at a speed of sixty-four miles an hour. The water in the harbor and creek rose rapidly until it was higher than it had been for years. The tow-path was flooded, and occupants of dwellings along that thoroughfare beat a hasty retreat. Accidents were numerous, many chimneys and portions of partially-erected brick walls falling. Branches of trees were scattered in all directions. The chimney of School No. 8 was blown down and crashed through the roof, but no one was hurt. The residents of the island awoke this morning to find the waves beating against the sea-wall with a violence never before equalled, and a storm raging which bid fair to render them homeless. About nine o'clock the island was no longer an island, but a sand-bar, over which the waves were rushing with almost uninterrupted fury. The island consists of a narrow strip of sand stretching away on the right of the light-house, and on the left the shore curves south-east for some distance. Back from the beach is the sea-wall, a barrier of stone four feet thick and from six to eight high, which in ordinary weather protects the row of little houses built under its lee. These are occupied by fishermen, boatmen and others. When visited this morning the whole island was covered with water to a depth of three or four feet and the wind blowing sixty miles an hour. The houses were all washed away and the beating of the sea had broken down the sea-wall for a distance of fifty feet. The storm has subsided considerably and a snow-storm has set in.

ERIE, PA., December 15.—The storm of last night leveled the beautiful Polish Church recently dedicated by Bishop Mullen. Tearing down the doors, the wind forced out the sides and split the roof in twain. The structure fell with a crash, and is a complete wreck. Many thousands of dollars of property all over the surrounding country is destroyed.

Cheaper Postage.

WASHINGTON, December 15.—It is quite likely that Congress will, during the present session, take one further step in the way of cheap postage. The result of the reduction of letter postage to two cents has been so gratifying that it will encourage Congress to adopt Mr. Bingham's bill increasing the weight of single postage letters to one ounce, instead of one-half ounce as now. The reduction of postal rates to two cents has really, it is understood, reduced the revenues of the Department by only about two million dollars, and it seems probable that this amount will be regained during the coming fiscal year. This fact will encourage Congress to make the change in regard to the weight of letters, which will really be a great convenience to the letter writing public and will not materially reduce the receipts of the Department. It may also result in the passage at this session of the bill for the reduction of local postage to one cent.

Rough Weather at Sea.

NEW YORK, December 15.—Officers of incoming transatlantic steamers report this as the roughest passage ever experienced. From December 2 until the 10th all vessels encountered heavy storms and hurricanes. On the Newfoundland Banks a tremendous sea and heavy fog are reported. A number of regular steamers are overdue.

Train Runs Into a Landslide.

PITTSBURGH, December 15.—A freight train on the Pittsburgh and Western Railroad ran into a landslide near Geyers' Station, thirteen miles from this city, this morning, wrecking the engine and seven cars. Engineer Daniel Costello was killed instantly, and fireman John Taterall fatally injured.

Deliberately Beheaded Himself.

PEORIA, ILL., December 15.—As the east-bound C., B. & Q. passenger train passed through Elmwood, this county, this morning, J. P. Reagan, aged thirty-five, deliberately lay down on the track, with his neck on the rail, and the train passed over and beheaded him. He leaves a family.

Fatal Bridge Accident.

ST. HYACINTHE, QUE., December 15.—A span of the new bridge here was blown down to-day. A man named Allard was killed, and one named St. Germain and another are dying. Fifteen others were seriously though not fatally injured.

Charges Preferred.

WASHINGTON, December 15.—General Hazen has preferred charges against Lieutenant Garlington for disobedience of orders in connection with the command of the Proteus expedition for the relief of Greely.

Steel Works Shut Down.

BRADDOCKS, PA., December 15.—The Edgar Thomson Steel Works shut down indefinitely, throwing about sixteen hundred men out of work and indirectly affecting nearly four thousand.

Saved After Two Death Sentences.

KANSAS CITY, December 15.—George Grant, colored, was allowed to plead guilty to manslaughter for killing Police Officer Fredericks in 1882. Grant has been twice sentenced to death, and has had four trials.

Want the Treaty Rejected.

PHILADELPHIA, December 15.—The Board of Trade has directed the preparation of a memorial to Congress, praying that the Spanish treaty be rejected. The Lowell bankruptcy bill is indorsed.

Two Suicides.

CINCINNATI, December 15.—Marshal H. McGeary, of Pittsburgh, and Daniel McGinnis, of Bellefontaine, O., committed suicide to-day by shooting themselves through the head.

One Hundred and Six Years.

CINCINNATI, December 15.—Frederick Weigmann, a German, living in this city, is in his 106th year, having been born in Germany, October 26, 1779.

—A prominent Californian says emigrants are now pouring into that State at the rate of about sixteen hundred a week. The great majority settle in the southern portion of the State, organize colonies, and engage in fruit and wine culture. A large per cent. are men of means, and even of wealth, who go there mainly for health, but combine business also. The poorer classes generally settle in the northern portion of the State, the agricultural regions. The population of the State is now estimated at one million.—San Francisco Call.

—In an insane asylum in New York State is confined a young lady of twenty-four, who in her own right is worth $4,000,000 or $5,000,000, and whose patronymic is a synonym of wealth and social position. So violent is the form of her malady that her hands are continually covered with padded gloves, lest in one of her spells she should tear her eyes out, as she has frequently endeavored to do. For days at a time she is strapped to the bed in which she is lying, or to the chair in which she fancies to sit.—Albany Journal.

—Uranium ore from the Black Hills is shipped to Germany.

XLVIII. CONGRESS.

Second Session.

WASHINGTON, December 9.—SENATE.—Mr Hale called up the naval appropriation bill which at the close of last session was in the hands of the Conference Committee, and as to which that committee reported it had been unable to agree. He moved the Senate further insist on its amendments, and order a new conference. So ordered. Mr. Sherman introduced a bill to provide for the erection of a statue in memory of Lafayette. Mr. Slater called up the Oregon Central land forfeiture bill, but the Senate, by a vote of 29 yeas to 30 nays, refused to consider it. It was then decided, by a party vote of yeas 34, nays 25, to take up the bill for the admission of Dakota, the Republicans voting in the affirmative and the Democrats in the negative.

HOUSE.—Mr. Chalmers introduced a bill to restore a republican form of Government to the State of Mississippi. Referred. It provides that Congressional and State elections shall be held the same day in that State. Each candidate for Congress shall be permitted to appoint in writing one inspector and one clerk at each voting precinct, who shall be permitted to witness all proceedings. It is made a crime punishable with fine and imprisonment for any person to assault, intimidate, threaten, or insult, any inspector or clerk. In consideration of the inter-State commerce bill having been resumed, Mr. Barksdale addressed the House in constitutional argument in support of the right of Congress to legislate on the subject.

WASHINGTON, December 10.—SENATE.—Mr. Sherman presided over the Senate to-day. The Chair laid before the Senate an invitation to that body from the Commissioners of the New Orleans Exposition to participate in the opening of the Exposition on the 16th inst. The communication was laid on the table. That being the usual formal disposition of such documents in the Senate when no special or immediate disposition is demanded by any Senator. The House joint resolution for continuing the work of the census bureau passed.

HOUSE.—The Speaker laid before the House a communication from Representative Scales, of North Carolina, announcing his resignation, to take effect December 30. Tabled. The House went into Committee of the Whole (Mr. Cox, of New York, in the Chair) on the Military Academy Appropriation Bill.

WASHINGTON, December 11.—SENATE.—A resolution was offered favoring an amendment requiring that treaties which concern matters of revenue be considered in open session. Discussion on the Oregon Central land forfeiture bill and the Dakota bill occupied much of the day. A joint resolution was passed fixing February 21 for the ceremonies connected with the completion of the Washington monument. Adjourned until Monday.

HOUSE.—A concurrent resolution was presented providing for a committee of five Representatives and three Senators of the next Congress to investigate the capacity of the canals of Maryland. The resolution was adopted calling on the Secretary of the Interior for information relative to the fees of claim agents in the pension cases. On motion of Mr. Weaver, the Senate bill was passed authorizing the First National Bank of Omaha to increase its capital stock.

WASHINGTON, December 12.—SENATE.—Senate not in session.

HOUSE.—On motion of Mr. Ellis the concurrent resolution passed, reciting that the exigencies of the public service prevent the attendance of Congress at the opening of the World's Industrial and Cotton Exposition at New Orleans; that the President has decided to open the Exposition by telegraph, and start the machinery thereof by electricity from the Executive Mansion in the presence of his Cabinet and foreign representatives, and requesting the President of the Senate together with a committee of thirteen Senators and the Speaker of the House, with one Representative or delegate from each State or territory to attend at the Executive Mansion, Tuesday, December 16, at 12:30, to witness on behalf of the Congress of the United States the opening of the Exposition by the President, and to adopt and forward therefrom such addresses of congratulation as may seem appropriate to the occasion. Adjourned until Monday.

WASHINGTON, December 15.—SENATE.—Mr Sherman, of the Committee on Library, reported favorably a bill providing for the erection of a statue of General Lafayette. Mr. Logan presented a large number of petitions from tobacco and cigar manufacturers and labor organizations of Illinois, New York and other States protesting against ratification of the Spanish treaty. Also petitions signed by over 7,600 ex-soldiers of the Union army praying that Congress purchase for the Capitol at Washington a portrait of General George H. Thomas, and recommending that it be executed by Miss Ransom. Referred. The Dakota bill was considered after which Mr. Hill addressed the body on the silver question. A bill was passed authorizing the erection of a public building at Akron, O., appropriating $100,000.

HOUSE.—Bills introduced and referred: To declare forfeited to the United States all unearned land grants, and to provide for adjudication of controversies in relation thereto. To regulate the Hot Springs Reservation in Arkansas. Also, to complete the improvement of Hot Springs Creek. Granting the right of way through Indian Territory to the Kansas City, Arkansas and Fort Smith Railroad Company. A resolution calling on the Secretary of State for information as to the mode and manner in full detail of the expenditure of $825,000, appropriated by Congress for the expenses of the French and American Claims Commission; for the creation of the ... River Commission. To encourage the holding of an agricultural, horticultural, mining, timber and live-stock exposition at Louisville. To provide for refunding the public debt and secure the stability of National bank circulation. Mr. Aikins, from the Committee on Agriculture, moved to suspend the rules and pass a bill to establish a Department of Agriculture. Messrs. Blount, Potter and Browne (Ind.) spoke in opposition to the motion, which was advocated by Messrs. Wilson (Ia.), Aiken, Budd, Hardeman and Cox (N. Y.). The motion to suspend the rules was agreed to—yeas, 166; nays, 90.

A Notable Incident.

WASHINGTON, December 14.—Commissioner General Moorehead, of the World's Exposition, who will represent the Board of Management at the Executive Mansion on Tuesday, when President Arthur starts the machinery in the building by electricity, has invited to be present on that occasion the Governors of New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Delaware, Maryland, Virginia, and the New England States, as well as the Mayors of the principal cities of those States. The District of Columbia will be represented by a number of distinguished citizens, with the ladies of their households.

Reuben Springer's Will.

CINCINNATI, December 14.—Reuben R. Springer, the philanthropist, in his will bequeaths to the Archbishop in trust for charities, $200,000; an additional endowment to the College of Music of $2,500 per annum. To the Music Hall Association he leaves an additional income of $5,000 per annum. His two female servants receive $25,000 jointly and his coachman $10,000 and his horses carriages and harness.

To Lobby Against the Spanish Treaty

NEW YORK, December 14.—The Executive Committee of the Cigar-makers' Union at a meeting this afternoon, appointed a committee of five to go to Washington for the purpose of opposing the ratification of the Spanish treaty.

—A rich New York widower is the possessor of a fine portrait of his wife who died over ten years ago. At the end of five years he engaged an artist to retouch the picture and add that time to the age of the subject, so that the pictured face of the wife whom he adored might keep pace with his own increasing years. The act was done with all sincerity and tenderness, and now it has again been done, and the dress of his lost beloved is brought to the prevailing fashion of 1884 and the face made correspondingly older.—*N. THE COMMONWEALTH.

Louisville Leaf Tobacco Market.

The market for Burley tobaccos has been again distinctly more active, and in the first half of the week a competition so keen among buyers was developed that an advance of $1@1.50 was at one time established. This was in leaf only, and mainly in medium to good fillery leaf. Latterly with soft, warm weather, promising larger receipts, this advance has been partially lost, but at least for medium and good grades we may claim another advance for this week, as we have noted for nearly every week in the last month. Low grades have not advanced quotably, and common lugs are about steady. These remarks relate to new tobaccos, as old stocks have developed no new features. Dark and heavy styles of leaf have been firm, with very little offerings either old or new. Common lugs are considered a trifle lower. We quote full weight packages sound tobacco of the 1884 crop as follows:

	Dark and Heavy.	Burley.
Trash	$4 50@ 5 00	$ 4 25@ 4 75
Common lugs	5 25@ 6 00	4 50@ 5 00
Medium lugs	6 25@ 6 75	5 25@ 5 50
Good lugs	7 00@ 7 25	5 75@ 8 50
Common leaf	6 25@ 6 75	6 75@ 7 75
Medium leaf	7 50@ 8 25	9 00@10 50
Good leaf	8 50@10 00	11 50@15 00
Fancy leaf	12 00@13 50	....

Berry immediately jumped upon the negro and gave him a sound thrashing. When Bush was turned loose he ran to his cabin near by, and, getting a shot-gun, returned in search of Berry. He found him in his front yard, and without a word raised his gun and fired, filling Berry's side with nearly a full load of squirrel shot, after which he ran away. Parties have been scouring the country for Bush since, but he has not been found yet. Some of the shot went entirely through Berry's leg, and he is seriously hurt. If the negro is caught he will probably be lynched.

IMPAIRED VISION.

The Causes That Induce Partial Blindness—Injudicious Reading.

"With the single exception of the insane, I don't think any class appeal more strongly to us for sympathy than the blind," said a well-known and philanthropic physician yesterday. "Truly they are deserving of pity. But despite their terrible and irreparable loss, it is a great mistake to imagine that they wander through the world as if they were shut up in an iron cage. True, while in the midst of light and air, and where laughter is heard and tears are shed, and where looks are interchanged the blind are shut out. But then blind men and women have much enjoyment in their own peculiar way. They can appreciate the glories of external nature and the sweetness of social intercourse as much as any one. I often think that when they feel the warmth of the sun a picture of exceeding brightness is formed in their minds. The different tones loved voices have for their ears betray to them often more quickly than the most careful study of a face will do what is going on in the hearts and minds of their friends."

"Do you come across many cases of blindness in your practice?"

"Well, I encounter many cases of impaired vision or partial blindness. I dare say two out of every three persons are troubled with some eye disease, which materially affects their vision. It is a terrible thing even to contemplate the number in this city who thus suffer. One of the most common complaints is short-sightedness. The people suffering from this could not be enumerated, for their name is legion. I tell you the American people do not take nearly enough care of their eyes. The unimpaired sense of sight is a priceless boon, and too much care can not really be bestowed in order to keep the delicate optic organs free from disease."

"What causes this impaired vision?"

"Mainly injudicious reading. Many people have had their eyes ruined at school; and teachers, I am bound to say, are largely responsible for this. Many instructors of youth permit the little ones to read with their books close up to their eyes. This is a grave mistake, and the practice is productive in the highest extent of short-sightedness. Then, again, some people contract disease by reading in dim and flickering lights. This practice can not be too strongly condemned. The use of tobacco in excess will also produce disease of the eye."

"Are there any intellectual fields of labor open to the blind?"

"Are there? Yes; more than the casual thinker might suppose. A blind man or woman musically inclined can earn no inconsiderable income as an organist or teacher of music. Most of the schools for instructing the blind recognize this fact, and cultivate to the utmost their pupils' musical powers. I consider the study of languages, and especially the foreign tongues, a valuable accomplishment to the blind. It would afford them lucrative employment, and would also be comparatively easy of attainment."

"Any other field of labor?"

"Yes; that beautiful and wonderful machine, the American type-writer. It promises to open a new gate in the world's vast workshop for the blind to enter at. The simple expedient of the letters and the numbers being carved upon the keys, instead of being printed, as is ordinarily the case, makes this accomplishment easily learned by a blind person, with but moderate application."—Albany Express.

A GIRL ACCOMPLISHMENT.

Every Young Lady Should Be Instructed in the Science of Carving Meats.

One of the minor accomplishments to be acquired by every girl is the science or art of carving. Let her learn how to cook by all means, if she has any gift for that divine art, but to understand the graceful dissection of a joint or a fowl is still more important if she ever intends being at the head of an establishment. Generally this duty fails to the man of the house, who, though he may not be skillful, is yet strong of wrist, and whose right it is to hack and slash without reproof from the other end of the board. But when a lady can easily and dexterously perform this share of man's prerogative, it has a very pretty appearance. There must be many persons in Boston who can recall the dignity and the elegance with which Mrs. Harrison Gray Otis always presided at her little dinners in Mount Vernon street, for whoever saw her at such times would not be likely to forget the hostess or the quaint charm of the surroundings of that hospitable and now memorable abode. Mrs. Otis was the only woman in Boston who had sufficient tact and intellectual power to hold a salon where all cliques and classes of society were welcome, and she was also one of the few, if not the only woman, who understood the art of giving a comfortable, choice dinner, without any of the display that detracts so much nowadays from true hospitality. She would sit at her table and carve the roast, cooked in her kitchen before an open wood fire with as much ease as though she sat on a throne, waving a sceptre that acted like a magician's wand. The guests who never numbered more than three or five, watched the proceeding with delight or they were unconscious of any effort being made to supply their wants, for Mrs. Otis was a most brilliant conversationalist, and this matter in hand of cutting up the piece de resistence of a dinner never for one instant disturbed the mental flow or reduce the table to silence. It was an education to see Mrs. Otis at those moments, and not all the ponderous butlers that have come since those days into fashion can serve a dinner half so well or so noiselessly as the "Mary" who stood beside her chair. Had Mrs. Otis been richer perhaps this famous phase of her famous hospitality would not have had reason for being, and she would only be remembered as a public-spirited woman who did more to enlarge Boston thought and improve its social culture than has been done before or since her day.—The Beacon.

On being questioned she calmly surveyed the group and at length answered: 'I think I know of a lady that will wash for you women.'" —Boston Transcript.

A STRANGE ATTACHMENT.

The Love a Chinaman Bore for a Little Baby Girl.

In Alaska street, on the corner of a narrow alley below Sixth, there is a dingy laundry, with the name of "Wah Kee" painted in flaming letters on a crazy sign above the door. This is where Wah Kee lives and works and spends his lonely life.

The house across the alley is just as old, and the roof is just as crazy, and the folks that live there are just as poor and lonely as poor Wah.

That's where Tot lived. Everybody knew Tot. Tot's clothes were old, and Tot's face was wan, but somehow the soul of the little one crept into the heart of the lonely Chinaman, and Wah Kee's eyes beamed as they never beamed before.

So he would stand by the door and look across the alley at Tot and smile—and Tot would patter across the little ocean of dirt and water, and clasping her chubby hands around Wah Kee's legs, look up into his face and coo.

Tot's folks chided the little one—for they hated the sight of "the haythen," as they called Tot's friend.

One day Tot stayed away and Wah Kee looked in vain for the baby. Another day passed and then Wah Kee's face grew sad and his heart heavy, and he shambled across the narrow alley and begged Tot's folks to tell him where Tot was.

They told him she was sick, that it would be many days before Tot would be about.

So Wah went back to his dingy shop and rolled up his sleeves and went to work again, but his head was heavy and his heart was across the alley in the little house where Tot lay ill.

One day Wah Kee looked over the way to the little house and his heart gave a great leap, for there, pressed against the window, was the face of wee Tot—white and wan, but smiling. And Wah Kee dropped his iron and ran across the pavement and stood by the window.

Tot's voice was weak and Tot might not have the window up, for it was cold and damp, but Wah Kee stood outside and talked in pantomime and Tot, punching her fists against the murky pane, laughed with glee.

So every day Tot was propped up in the window and Wah Kee stood in the shop and looked at the little face and sighed.

Sometimes when Wah Kee's countrymen came to see him they laughed, and Hop Long and Lee Yeo and Wong Sing Lung chided him for the strange love he bore the baby, but Wah Kee only shook his head and answered:

"Wah Kee has no one else. Tot is Wah Kee's baby."

But Tot died, and yesterday they buried her. There were only two carriages—there was one for Tot and the father and mother of the dead baby—and Wah had a carriage, and, all alone, in the silence of the tight-closed cab, he rode and grieved for the sunny face and prattling nonsense of the child he had worshipped with all the devotion of his pagan faith.

They buried her at Fernwood in a little grave in a little plot almost as small, and Wah Kee stood by the grave and cried, and the great tears streamed down his face, and, dropping upon the grave, kissed the place where Tot—or all that was left of her—slept in silence.—Philadelphia News.

MR. CLEVELAND will resign the New York Governorship January 6.

WASHINGTON CITY is now washing her face and arranging her best bib and tuck for Cleveland's inauguration.

WHEN Mr. Arthur is elected United States Senator (?) he will not order his pants made by his present measure.

TEXAS gave Cleveland 135,855 votes more than Blaine. That majority is in proportion to the magnitude of the State.

GOV. PORTER, of Indiana, surrenders his office to Gov. Gray whom he succeeded, the like of which is an unusual occurrence in politics.

MR. BLAINE declines to prosecute his slander suit against the Indianapolis Sentinel, on the grounds that he cannot get justice. That's too thin.

THE plugue which has been so fatal up in the mountains has subsided to a great extent. About 2,500 persons died from it. The doctors pronounce it a virulent type of flux.

VANDERBILT has recovered a judgement against Gen. Grant for $150-000 money loaned him. Probably Vanderbilt thinks some fellow will start a five cent contribution to pay of the judgement for the General.

HAD it been so Owen could have competed in all the classes at the Scott County Tobacco Show, probably she would have walked off with all the premiums. But the rules prevented her making a hog of herself.

THE Newport police force has recently captured enough silverware to equip a large jewelrystore, in that line. Every person in that town who has lost such property in the past forty years will take part in trying to indentify it.

CLEVELAND has, in a quiet and polite way, told the Cabinet makers that he is mechanic enough to do his own work in that particular. It does seem very much like that man Cleveland has a head of his own, and is able to take care of himself.

H. T. STANTON, of the Yeoman, was the messenger to convey Kentucky's electoral vote to Washington, to which place he went last week. That was one occasion on which Stanton can truthfully say he carried the vote of Kentucky in his pocket.

BY this date last year the major part of the tobacco crop in this county had been sold and many crops delivered, but at present a tobacco buyer cannot be found, while last winter two out of every three men you met were buying. The '83 crop was death to the local dealers.

THE fire bugs are yet getting in the central part of the State, tobacco barns being their principal prey. It is a pity that the scamps cannot be detected and hung to the most convenient limb. Not until some of them are thus disposed of will the frequent destruction of tobacco barns cease.

SEVERAL of the counties now have candidates in the field for Representative. Boone does not begin looking after that interest at such an early date, but when she does commence considering the matter, she generally has about as interesting a time while it lasts as any of her sister counties.

IF Burlington wants a town hall, and she should evidently have one, now is the time to secure it. Mr. F. P. Walton offers to sell the old Methodist church building to the town, we understand, at a very reasonable price. Properly furnished and managed, no doubt, a town hall at this place, would pay something on the investment, besides being a very great convenience in many instances.

PRESIDENT ARTHUR has consented to comply with the request made by the Director General to start the machinery of the World's Exposition at New Orleans on the 16th inst., by electricity. A wire will be connected direct from the Executive Mansion to the Exposition building in New Orleans so arranged that when the President opens the circuit, the motive power of the exposition will be set in motion. The Cabinet, Members of the Supreme Court, delegations from the two houses of Congress and the Diplomatic Corps will be in attendance at the Executive Mansion to witness this unique formal opening.

EDUCATIONAL.

[Communications for this column must be addressed to Prof. T. H. Stephenson, Burlington, Kentucky.]

OUR EDUCATORS.

One fact, noticed, perhaps, by all readers is, that a large majority of our books is made in the eastern States. This is particularly true of our text-books.

The Eastern States, from their maritime situation, rapidly settled and soon became densely populated, rendering the various pursuits of art, trade, manufacture, &c., a necessity. The people of that section early adopted and have sedulously followed the trade of book making. They became from force of circumstances, the educators of the other sections of the Union. Through their books they have essayed to educate public sentiment. Remembering some of the peculiar traits of that people, it is peculiarly unfortunate that they should, to so great an extent, have become the educators of public sentiment. They have not failed to obtrude their own peculiar notions and customs on their readers. They have eulogized their virtues and concealed their faults. They have arrogated to themselves the chief honors of every thing in which they have been concerned. Where they have not been participants the voice of praise has been silent. They have given undue prominence to events connected with their own history, while they have passed with bare mention notable events in the history of others. They fled from England to escape persecution, and themselves established a more relentless persecution than that from which they had fled. New England became the hot-bed of superstition and persecution. They did not hesitate to denounce their enemies as heretics, and in the name of that religion whose spirit is mercy, they hung and burned witches, bored the tongues of Quakers with a hot iron, and banished Roger Williams, the best man in their colony, because he was a Baptist and for declaring from the pulpit, "That a State is bound to protect every denomination of christians," a truth which no one now doubts. The Puritans could not conceive that it was their duty to protect anyone that differed from themselves in belief. They were Procrusteans in practice, making every belief conform to their creed, cutting off when too long, and stretching when too short. Bigotry and intolerance were prominent traits in the Puritans character. They still exist, and manifest themselves under a more skillful disguise as great zeal in opposing what they deemed wrong. This they show in their treatment of slavery. They built at Marblehead, Mass., the first slave-ship in America and were the first to engage in a crusade against it. Public sentiment condemns slavery, but it was as impossible for a Puritan, as for a Pharisee, to see a mote in his brothers eye and not gouge it out, even though there might be a beam in his own.

It is difficult to believe the good Puritans ever saw witches riding a straddle of broom stick forty-five miles high, and it is equally difficult to believe they posessed all the virtues they claimed, or did not possess many of the vices they disclaimed. New England has been the source of most of our isms and the great majority of our schisms, spiritualism, socialism, free-love-ism and mormonism have sprung up in their soil. But lest it might be thought that injustice has been done to the Puritan character, we will give a short extract from Macauley, the greatest of English historians. He thus writes of them in his own country: "Persecution produced its natural effect on them. It found them a sect, it made them a faction. To their hatred of the church was now added hatred of the crown. The two sentiments were intermingled, and each embittered the other. In 1604 Queen Elizabeth died, and was succeeded by James of Scotland. A charge, to some extent, has taken place in the principles and practice of the Puritans. The persecutions which they had undergone has been severe enough to irritate, but not severe enough to destroy. They had not been tamed into submission, but baited into savageness and stubbornness. After the fashion of oppressed sects, they mistook their own vindictive feelings for emotions of piety; encouraged in themselves, by reading and meditation, a disposition to brood over their wrongs, and when they had worked themselves up into hating their enemies, imagined they were only hating the enemies of of heaven. In the New Testament there was little indeed, which, when perverted by the most disingenuous exposition, could seem to countenance the indulgence of malevolent passion" "But the Old Testament contained the history of a people elected by God to be witnesses of His unity and ministers of His vengeance, and specially commanded by him to do many things which, if done without his special command, would have been atrocious crimes. In such a history it was not difficult for fierce and gloomy spirits to find much that might be distorted to suit their wishes. The extreme Puritans began, therefore to feel for the Old Testament a preference, which, perhaps, they did not distinctly avow even to themselves, but which showed itself in all their sentiments and habits. They paid to the Hebrew language a respect which they refused to that tongue in which the discourses of Jesus and the epistles of Paul have come down to us. They baptized their children by the names not of christians saints, but of Hebrew patriarchs and warriors."

"In defiance of the express and reiterated declarations of Luther and Calvin, they turned the weekly festival, by which the church had, from primitive times, commemorated the resurrection of her Lord, into a Jewish Sabbath. It was a sin to hang garlands on a may-pole, to drink a friends health, to fly a hawk, to hunt a stag, to play at chess, to wear love-locks, to put starch into a ruff, to touch the virginals, to read the Fairy Queen. Rules such as these, rules which would have appeared insupportable to the free and joyous spirit of Luther, and contemptible to the serene and philosophical intellect of Zwingle, threw over all life a more monastic gloom. The extreme Puritan was at once known from other men, by his gate, his garb, his lank hair, the sour solemnity of his face, the upturned white of his eyes, the nasal twang with which he spoke, and, above all, by his peculiar dialect. He employed, on every occasion, the imagery and style of scripture. Hebraism violently introduced into the English language, and metaphors borrowed from the boldest lyric poetry of a remote age and country, and applied to the common concerns of English life, were the most striking peculiarities of this cant, which moved, not without cause, both prelatists and libertine. * *

WILLIAM SAYERS, who has been connected with the Covington Commonwealth for many years, and who has an extensive acquaintance in this part of the State, died at his home in Covington last Saturday night of an affliction of the bowels. He was in his 65th year, and was a pioneer citizen of Kenton county.

WHILE Congress has so much money with which to pay pensions all the Mexican soldiers should be put on the rolls. They are much more entitled to them than thousands of those who draw pensions on account of the rebellion. The survivors of the Mexican war are comparatively few in number, and their valuable service, deserves the recognition of the country they so bravely represented on the field of battle.

MR. F. T. FORTUNE, editor of the Freeman (negro organ) has published a long address to his race, of which the following are concluding extracts:

"The period of sentimental politics is past forever. What we gain hereafter will be the result of our own untiring efforts, our own wise leadership, our own demonstration of capacity. Send the demagogue of the race to the rear. The Democratic party is the natural enemy of the black man and his rights. The Republican party has ceased to be his champion. Political benefits are conferred only when benefits can be given in exchange. Henceforth seek the men among you of intelligence, honesty and courage, and put such men into State, county and municipal offices. Self-preservation is the first law of nature, and a black man in official position is more likely to stand up for his and your rights than a white man who owes his elevation to your votes. Imitate those Irishmen who seek by parliamentary agitation to establish the rights of their people Distrust the Democrat party; watch the Republican party. Look no more upon promises, but results. Your future is in your own hands."

THE Yeoman says: "We understand that the Auditor is preparing for publication a list of all the sheriffs in the State, and opposite the name of each the amount of revenue charged against the county, together with the amount paid into the treasury.

"This he does in order that, should there not be a sufficient amount of money to the credit of the school fund with which to pay the January school drafts, the county commissioners and teachers will understand the reason.

"Unless there may be enough to pay all, he will, in issuing his warrants on the treasury, discriminate in favor of those counties whose sheriffs have paid the largest proportion of the revenue charged against them.

"This, it seems to us, is eminently just and proper—for it does not seem fair that the county whose people are the slowest to pay their taxes, and whose sheriff is the most negligent in the discharge of his duty, should be the first to receive the money due them from the school fund. If, therefore, there should be any disappointment on the part of the teachers, they should hold their sheriffs responsible, and not censure Auditor Hewitt."

If the Auditor pursues the above course, we don't apprehend that the teachers in this county will be delayed in receiving their money, as has been their experience the past few years. Besides it will have a tendency to hasten the collection of the revenue.

"AS FOR me, I do not believe what I do not understand." "Do you understand how it is that fire will soften butter but will harden an egg?" "No." "Yet you believe in an omelet!"

"Picked-Up" Knowledge.

How can everybody know everything? And we may observe in fact, everybody does not know everything. It came out upon the Labouchere-Lawson trial, that Lord Chief-Justice Coleridge had never heard of Mr. Corney Grain. His livelier predecessor frequently betrayed a somewhat surprising ignorance of things that were, so to speak, in the air. Mr. Carlyle, who was very fond of referring to Morison's pills, never succeeded in spelling the name correctly. It may be noted, when a distinguished man dies, that the funeral sermons are many of them, full of blunders—not mere mistakes, such as any one might make, but downright bad shots, which show that the preachers did not know how to take aim. These prove ignorance; but they often prove besides that on account of some irreceptivity of mind, true knowledge was impossible to the speakers; they have "crammed" all of a sudden, and have shown the texture of their faculties in doing so. The judges are, as a rule, wonderful fellows; but in spite of the peculiar habit of "cram" which belongs to barristers, they sometimes fail in their estimates of men and things for want of what we roughly describe as picked-up knowledge. Not long ago Mr. Gladstone admitted that he did not know what spruce beer and mum were. Most of us knew what spruce beer was, and journalists have, perhaps, more picked-up knowledge than any other class; but it is to be suspected that there was much searching of heart and turning over of cyclopædias before the world was informed, in those buoyant short leaders of the next day, what mum was. Spruce is, or was say, in the days of old Weller, supposed to be wholesome to drink, and good for colds and coughs, and it was and is sold in all public-houses; but as to mum, would Whewell himself have known what it was?

It is easy to see that the gift of taking in knowledge as you go along is a very different thing from that of cramming, or of study in the higher and better sense. It goes rather with "mooning" than with application and inquiry, though, of course, not with stupidity. It is different from the gift, natural or acquired, which Houdin, the conjuror, possessed and conveyed to his son by a process which he has in a well-known stock quotation described. And though it goes with "mooning," it by no means follows that all who take life easily should have it, if they own in addition a certain amount of ability. For example, Lord Palmerston did not possess this gift. He would certainly have known what spruce beer was, but some of his speeches displayed just the sort of inaptitude that never exists along with the kind of receptivity we mean, and his pensioning Poet Close stamped the ultimate character of his mind. If a man has the faculty in question, it does not matter how busy he is, or whether he is great minister or a mere clerk—whether he dwells in marble halls or in small lodgings—somehow or other he knows things and puts them together.

We constantly hear that women are more quick to observe than men. But more quick to observe what? Discursive receptivity is not specially a faculty of women; they have, fortunately, less of it than men. Nor have they, in general, the scientific receptivity or faculty of observing and combining which stands at the pole opposite to theirs. Making every allowance for the peculiarities of the lives led by most of them, we find that with all their faculty of observation and their sensitiveness of temperament they are not remarkable for picking up miscellaneous facts. Nor are scientific men nor administrators, if you take them off their beat. Nay, administrators and high officials are often curiously ignorant of matters on their beat, and just for want of this very gift of miscellaneous receptivity. There is many a live journalist, with half the brain to ce of, say, Colonel Henderson or Sir William Harcourt, who could tell either of them things on his own line which he would get on all the better for knowing.—Spectator.

Wasn't Proud.

At Grand Island the other day a passenger found three flies in his tea at the eating house. He called the waiter to him and said: "You are in error about me. You evidently think I am traveling in a special car and putting on a great deal of dog. I'm riding second-class without baggage, and am only entitled to one fly. Give this cup to that big, fat man at the corner table. He is a director of the road and is entitled to three flies in his tea and a dead cockroach between his pancakes. I cannot travel second-class and usurp the rights of first-class passengers. Please to pass the entomological mustard before you go, and set the adamantine prunes where I can reach them. I may want to throw one at the head waiter occasionally to attract his attention."—Bill Nye.

GEORGE was a good boy. He was always willing to take good advice. The teacher told him one day that he should avoid the appearance of evil. George remembered this. When he stole Farmer Clover's apples that night, he saved all the cores and dropped them in front of Dick Blatherskite's yard. Dick was a bad boy and got punished for stealing Farmer Clover's apples, but George avoided the appearance of evil. He ate the apples. The good are always rewarded in this world and the bad punished.—Boston Transcript.

Why Novelists Prefer England.

The hard experience of American authors makes the task of writing books for the enlightenment or pleasure of the reading public on this side of the Atlantic so uninviting that the wonder is, not that we do not have a large class of writers, but that any one thinks it worth his while to devote time and attention to this work. An American novelist commonly depends for his profit on the sum he receives for the sale of his story to the publishers of one or another of the widely circulated monthly periodicals. What they pay him is a matter of trade, and the price given must vary very greatly, though as an average it may be said that $1,500 for a story running through from eight to twelve numbers would be a tolerably high rate of remuneration. After the work has appeared in this form, it is the custom to republish it in book form, the author receiving a commission on the sales. If from these he nets $500, he may consider himself exceptionally fortunate. Assuming that an author writes two novels in a year, and if the work is faithfully and carefully performed, this is about all that he can expect to do, his income will not be over $4,000 per annum, a small return when the talent required for the service is taken into account. Novel writing is, however, a monkey-making employment when compared with the returns received for some other forms of literary work. For example, it was not until his fourth book had been published that Mr. Ralph Waldo Emerson received a penny in return for the literary work he had done, and the sum total he has received during his life-time would doubtless represent but a very modest amount. Mr. James Russell Lowell was compelled to publish his first book of poems at his own expense, and at the end of a year, in making up the publishers' accounts, it was found that only forty-five copies of it had been sold. In this instance it would be unnecessary to say whether it was Mr. Lowell or the American public that was at fault. As a contrast to the foregoing it may be said that according to common report Mr. William Black has of late years received from £3,500 to £4,000 for each novel that he has written. From this one reason may be drawn why Henry James, Julian Hawthorne, and other American novelists prefer to make their home in England.—New York Times.

Christmas turkeys are ripening.

Talbott's Patent Flour is the best.

Talbott's Patent Flour is the best.

One week from to-morrow is Christmas.

John I. Bruce has been on the sick list for several days.

You may now look out for bad weather in unlimited quantities.

You can have the RECORDER from now until January 1, 1886, for $1 50.

Three of David Utz's children are quite sick with some throat trouble.

The inclement weather curtailed the attendance at Sabbath-school last Sunday.

Roosters now crow at all hours of the night, rejoicing at the near approach of Christmas.

We will have for Christmas a fine beef, fresh oysters and cellery. Give us a call. WESBRAY & HALL.

The financial collapse of John R. Smith has somewhat of a deleterious effect in his immediate neighborhood.

As yet nothing has been heard of Mr. Henry Smith who disappeared from his home on Woolper creek last week.

W. E. Piper & Bro., will have during the holidays, oranges from Dr. J. F. Smith's grove in Florida.

The County Clerk has received the acts of the last Legislature, and will distribute them as directed by the State.

The literary society threw open its doors to the public last Friday night, and it had "one audience," we are informed.

Buy Candies and Nuts of all kinds, Figs, Raisins, Lemons, Currants, Citron, &c., for the Holidays at W. E. Piper & Bro's.

Mrs. Bettie Riddell, Charles Riddell and H. C. White, of Williamstown, attended Mr. Kerrick's burial at this place last Friday.

The colored church at which Rev. Bush officiates will have a Christmas tree for the encouragement of its Sunday-school scholars.

The fox hunters have not fairly opened the season yet, and who has the fleetest dog has not become a question for general discussion.

The coal fleet that came down last week gladened the hearts of many a poor fellow out of whose reach the price of coal was climbing.

Notice to Bidders--The undersigned will receive sealed or verbal bids from now till 12 m. the 25th inst., to Christmas dinners. The right to accept two bids is reserved. RECORDER.

Don't fail to come and examine our stock of Toys and Fancy Goods when in town, it will please you and you will be certain to buy. Everybody says R. G. Langsdales is the place, Rising Sun, Indiana.

Our stock of Holiday goods is now complete in every respect and we defy competition. Goods are cheaper than ever before. Kris Kringle in show window is the place. R. G. Langsdale, Rising Sun, Ind.

Simeon Terrill, who lives on Riddell's Run, while grooping around in an out building one night last week, was struck in the eye by a stick which came near destroying the optic. He has suffered much pain from the wound.

Fillmore Black who has been quite sick for several weeks, attempted suicide by cutting his throat with a razor last Thursday. He laid open a terrible gash but severed no arteries. It took nine stitches to close the wound.

An entertainment will be given in the Bullittsville Christian church, December 24th. The programme will consist of Reading, Recitations, Tableaux and Music. Doors open at 6½ p. m., exercises to commence at 7½ o'clock. General admission 25 cents.

Christmas tree fruit is now being inquired for, while Santa Claus is busy stocking up for a tour of the country on Christmas eve night, among the juvenile inhabitants, who are full of conjectures as to what the old gentleman will donate to them.

"We are selling for cash" signs are becoming very popular among the country merchants, and on the few who run long accounts without any intention of paying them, they have the same effect that a red handkerchief waved at a mad bouvine has.

The literary society took a tilt at the Morman question last Friday night, but, as yet, the Mormons are not fleeing from Salt Lake City as anyone is aware, although they may be slightly frightened, as the assault on their institutions, it is said, was crushing.

In the Grant Circuit Court last week the case of the Com'th. vs. Jump for the killing of J. W. Green was continued; same vs. Wm. Saddler, for horse-stealing, a verdict of not guilty; same vs. W. S. Alexander for killing Jce. T. Elston, a verdict of acquittal.

The report that the flouring mill recently sold in Lawrenceburg, would be dismantled and the machinery moved to Bellevue, is not true, the purchaser intending to operate the mill where it is now located, having put in a lot of new machinery for that purpose.

It is rather discouraging for the "good little boy" to learn that Old Santa has been quite as liberal with the "bad little boy" as with him. It makes him think that the old gentleman has exercised very poor judgment in making his distribution. That's the way it used to effect us.

Owing to the very recent sore affliction of the writer and wife, it has been very difficult to issue a papper with delay, and we shall not attempt to get out another issue before the 31st inst., feeling that we are not in a condition to do our readers justice, all of whom we trust will enjoy the holidays.

They have arrived, Genuine Florida Oranges from Dr. J. F. Smith's farm, and will be found at W. E. Piper & Bro.

An effort will be made to have a post-office established at Florene X-Roads to be called "Rouse." It will, no doubt be kept by Rouse Bros, in their store. The mails are received there regularly now, but only through arrangements made privately with the Burlington and Florence postmasters.

From the demonstration made by Perry Stephens the other morning when three or four ferocious old sows threatened to annihilate him, it is evident that he can out kick four of the livliest kicking mules in the county. He kicks in a circle and so rapidly that both feet appear to be in the air all the time.

A grand display of Holiday Goods. You can buy dolls, wagons, sleds, hobby horses, all kinds of albums, in fact anything you want. We are going to give away $25 worth of prizes; 1 prize doll, writing desk, toilet set and plush photo album. Anyone buying $1 worth of goods gets one ticket. R. G. Langsdale's, is the place, Rising Sun, Ind.

Again we request every justice of the Peace in the county whose time of holding court is not in the RECORDER directory, to furnish us with the time, that we may complete our County Directory. We have made this request several times before, and hope that the Justices will now take interest enough in the matter to furnish us the information desired.

"Town Hall" on the posters and programmes announcing the entertainment for the nights of the 18, 19 and 20 of this month, at this place, means the Methodist church, where a commodious stage has been erected and furnished with new and appropriate scenery, and all necessary arrangements made for the accommodation and comfort of all who attend.

From the number of fruit tree agents who have, for several winters past, canvassed this county, we judge that the farmers are being well supplied with choice fruit. A good orchard of carefully selected fruit is a valuable feature on a farm, being a source of considerable revenue, besides being a liberal furnisher of supplies for the table. In fact there are numerous ways in which a good orchard is to be appreciated.

The Methodist church, where the entertainment will be given, has been put in good order for the occasion. A commodious stage has been erected, and new scenery is being prepared. The church building being located in the center of the town will be a great advantage to the entertainment, which the present indications lead us to believe will be the best ever given in the town. Joe Reed himself can make a good show, and with the support he will have, the entertainment is bound to be first-class.

A shooting occurred Monday evening between F. M. Little, of Mason, and Benjamin Green, of Downingsville, in front of Dr. O'Hara's drug store, in which Little was shot in the right breast by Green, inflicting a painful but not serious wound. In the commencement, as we understand it, Mr. Little told Mr. Green he had saved him killing a man once, and he ought to be very thankful to him for it. Green replied, yes, you did keep me from killing a man, but you hip shot me while another man hit me with a rock. Frank says, you oughtn't hold malace against me, for I have nothing against you. Green replied that he would hold malice against him as long as he lived. Frank says, well yau have a d—d poor way of helping yourself, and stepped back, when Green immediately pulled his pistol and fired three shots, one taking effect as above stated. Green escaped through O'Lee's restaurant, and down into the celler and out the back way. By this time three or four of Littell's friends had congregated on the scene in hot pursuit of Green but up to this time he has not been heard from. Littell is resting easy.—Williamstown Courier.

DIED.

Died—On the 10th inst., of quinsy, after several days illness Mrs. Utz, wife of David Utz and daughter of Feeiding Rouse. The deceased leaves several small children, besides a large circle of friends and relatives to mourn her loss.

On the 13th inst., at her residence, near Sandford, Florida, Virginia Smith, wife of Dr. J. F. Smith.

The family has the sympathy a very large circle of friends in this county.

On the 16th inst., of typhoid fever, Katie Slade Riddell, aged 3 years 2 months and 10 days, and daughter of W. L. and Carrie P. Riddell.

After a short funeral service at the residence, by Rev. J. A. Kirtley, the remains of this dear little one were taken to the receiving tomb in Highland Cemetery where they will rest until the return of spring when she will be buried.

On the 11th inst., at the residence of J. M. Riddell, in Williamstown, Thos. Kerrick, in the 67th year of his age.

The remains were brought to Burlington and interred last Thursday afternoon. Mr. Kerrick had been in Williamstown but a few weeks, but had been in very poor health for sometime.

On the 12th inst., at 1 o'clock a. m., at the residence of his son, T. W. Finch, in Burlington, Adam Finch in the 87th year of his age.

The deceased was born near Paris, in Bourbon county, this State, and came to this county several years since, where he has been at all times an honored and upright citizen. He had been married three times, all of his wives having gone before him, leaving a family of children. Mr. Finch was a very active, energetic man through life, and not until a few hours before the final summons came did he yield to the burden of old age and its consequent infirmity, and take his bed to pass quietly and peaceably to that born from whence no traveler ever returns. He was a mason, belonging to Good Faith Lodge No. 95, at Florence, and was a faithful member of the craft, being the oldest mason in the county, if not in the State. He has heard the sound of the gavel the last time, and has been called from earthly labor to eternal refreshment, to become a living stone of that building not made with hands, but eternal in Heaven. He was interred with Masonic honors at Florence Saturday morning.

Personal Mentions.

(If you have friends from a distance visiting you or expect to be away from home on business or pleasure, let us have the item for this column.)

Mr. J. W. Calvert spent several days in the city last week.

J. Frank Grant and father, of Petersburg, were in town Friday.

W. J. Cowen returned from Tennessee last week, on the sick list.

Dr. L. H. Platt, of Bellevue, is under medical treatment at Louisville.

Dr. Bange and A. M. Acra attended Sunday-school in the city Sunday.

Archibald Thompson, our oldest townsman, has been in a precarious condition for several days.

Mr. Warren C. Graves, a prominent farmer of Scott county made our office a brief call one day last week.

Miss Sophia Finch arrived last Wednesday at noon from Missouri, in response to a dispatch sent on the Sunday before informing her of the illness of her father.

The County Judge requests us to say to those who expect to file claims for sheep killed by dogs, that it must be done before the 10th of next month, and that each claim must be proven by two disinterested housekeepers living not less than one mile from where the sheep were killed, and not related to the claimant.

NEIGHBORHOOD NEWS.

Gunpowder.

Miss Emma Barlow visited Miss Fannie Tanner last Sunday night.

Geo. Barlow has got the Missouri fever very bad.

John Long has sold one hundred and thirty-five turkeys at $1 25 each.

Petersburg.

After a long silence, caused by the election, we again endeavor to send you a few items for the RECORDER, but we can not say that we will be punctual, as we will have to find time in which to prepare for an office, as you well know there will be a great many to let after the 4th of March. The letting of the post-office is the topic of talk now, but as there will be about forty applicants of course 39 will be left to apply for something else, such as guager or store-keeper. As for my-self, I want a Cabinet position, therefore it will take a great amount of time and labor if I get there. If the whole country is as full of office seekers as this locality, there will be no cause for an office. One of my particular friends received a letter from a very prominent Democrat offering his assistance.

We will soon have to add another addition to this place as the houses are rapidly filling up.

Dr. J. E. Terrill has his new residence enclosed, as the weather is unfavorable for plastering he has postponed work until spring.

Miss Pauline Terrill, of Owensboro, Ky., is visiting relatives in this vicinity.

Florence.

If the great depression in the news market had continued much longer in this vicinity, would most assuredly, as a correspondent, been compelled to make an assignment. 'Tis true our assets are at all times in excess of our liabilities but of such a nature as not to be available to meet the demands of the reading public; for instance as are embraced in the common routine of business and every day life, buying and selling, visiting, births, deaths, marriages, &c. We are a nervous, restless nation, and we want to be astonished occasionally when we take up a paper and there is an item of marriage, let it be a runaway match, with the gal as pretty as a peach and the "feller" as ugly as a mud fence or vice versa, or one rich and the other poor, if it be an excursion of some pleasure party, let there be a collision, with some hair breadth escapes, and a hero or heroine of the day; if a political meeting nothing short of a row and the introduction of a few "English bull-dogs," will suffice to satisfy the popular appetite. But we can't always have these things in our own immediate community, and I am sometimes puzzled as to what would be acceptable to our readers. 'Tis true taste are as varigated as the rainbow, and there are some whose extreme sensibility would not permit them to brood over freaks of fortune or horrifying disaster. But the paper must be printed and news we must have and give, and if I fail to satisfy one perhaps I will please another, so it goes: Births, none to record this week. Marriages, one in Florence last Tuesday at the residence of the bride's father, Mr. Pat McMann to Miss Mary Loline, by Elder Ed Stephens. I had no card, consequently can't particularize. We heard no objections, however to the match, and presume it was a good one, and that Uncle Ed tied a good, hard knot.

The death of Reuben R. Springer, the millionaire and philanthropist, of Cincinnati, last week, caused considerable anxiety with some of his distant relatives. H. C. Springer left here last Friday, to be present at the probating of the will on Monday.

During the holidays the Baptist denomination will give a musical festival for the benefit of the church here.

A few evenings since a number of the young folks of this place and Burlington met at the residence of I. Baily in the suburbs, by invitation, to have a good time generally. The order of the evening was music, vocal and instrumental, dancing, talking and eating all the good things imaginable. I said young folks met, but I'll insure if any of the married ones knew of it, they were on hand likewise, for if there is a place on this green earth that a person can be made comfortable it is at Baily's. I didn't go because I didn't know of it in time. If you have the blues or dispepsia, or anyother aliment go to Baily's "sure-cure"—better than any patent medicine, and while there don't forget to have him tell his adventure with the elephant.

On Saturday night our town was made hideous by a drunken carousal of a lot of hoodlums who came in from the country to expose their depravity, and who imagined it was "fun for the boys," but the sequal may prove "it was death to the frogs."

If our County Judge will appoint us constable, we will take it as a favor.

Beaver Lick.

During the past week the farmers have had an abundance of fine stripping their golden "weed," of which this locality con bost of baving some of the very finest. Tobacco buyers, that is those who bought last year, seem to have felt something "drap" during the past season, and appear to stand in with the idea that the farmers can sell their tobacco themselves. Some one ought to take hold of the tobacco market and give it a little boom ere he lose one of the bright opportunities of his life.

Our turnpike leading from Big Bone Springs to Hamilton, is now, thanks to the perseverance of a few faithful, is completed. It is pronounced by those who ought to know, to be a number-one pike. It should be continued to Beaver, now, without delay.

Oscar Folks, quite a genius in his way, attends the repairing of old "leathers" now in Beaver. Beaver has long felt the want of such a man as Oscar, and we hope for him a prosperous business.

Born to Thomas Coyle and wife, on the 8th inst., a beautiful little girl. Tom is a good Democrat and couldn't help naming it Jennie Cleveland Coyle.

The season since the break up of the drought has been very favorable to the farmer, and there will be plenty of food to take all the stock through the winter.

Preferred the Hospital.

Zach Chandler was not only a strong man and expert boxer, but he had the sand to back his muscle, and it didn't take all day to rile him. Just at the close of the war, and the day before the grand review in Washington, the Senator came out to Bladeasburg to visit the Michigan cavalry. The boys were in high spirits, and many of the Sixth were interested spectators of a boxing match, or rather of a series of set-to's with the gloves. Zach took his place in the circle unknown to all and attracted no attention until one of the boxers was driven back upon him. Leaning forward the Senator whispered:

"Young man, I saw a dozen good chances for your left in there."

"Say, old coon, maybe you're on the box!" called the other, as he overheard the remark.

Zach peeled off his alpaca coat, put down his hat, and took the gloves from the one who had been worsted. The other man was the best boxer in the regiment, and there was intense excitement as the two squared off. Not a pass was made for a minute, and then the Senator found an opening and sent a left-hander so straight and solid that his opponent went down like a log. He got up slowly and in a dazed condition, and, removing the gloves from his hands, approached the Senator and asked:

"Say, did you hit me with a brick hospital?"

"No, I struck with this," replied Zach, as he held out his left.

The man surveyed it, felt of it, run his hand up and down the Senator's arm, and turned to the boys and observed:

"That settles me. I prefer the brick hospital!"—Detroit Free Press.

The Queen Invited to "Sit Down."

Since Dean Stanley died, a story he often told of Carlyle has been recalled by many who heard him tell it. Some years ago, when the Queen was at Windsor, she said to Lady Augusta Stanley that she would like to meet, in a way that would not be ceremonious, a few eminent men of letters, and soon afterward the day was fixed. The guests were to be seven in number, two of them to be ladies, and, in all, were as follows: Sir Charles and Lady Lyell, Mr. and Mrs. George Grote, Robert Browning, Charles Dickens and Mr. Carlyle. Her Majesty had before met them all except Carlyle. Him she had often read and appreciated, and her interest chiefly centered in him. She started as the subject of conversation the probable future of the second French empire—a subject on which Carlyle was greatly at home, for, in those days, he was predicting, with singular clearness of vision, how the whole Napoleonic drama would be extinguished in flame and smoke from beneath the stage on which it is acted. Both were standing when the talk began, and, as he warmed with his subject, the Queen still remained on her feet. He desired greatly to sit down; was, in fact, weary, and finally said to her: "If your Majesty would be seated we could carry on the discussion with more ease." Of course, she had never realized his fatigue, but at once the Queen of England—and, probably, for the first time in her life as a Queen—took a seat at the invitation of a subject.

"Dot Poy of Mine."

One of the teachers in the public schools actually received the other day an excuse unique in its way, and written in behalf of a delinquent pupil by the father. No teacher could hold such an excuse not valid, even under the requirements of the new code of the Board of Education. It runs in this wise:

"MR. TEACHER: Dot poy of mine vas absent de oder day ven he shtaid out. He got von big colt mit in his neck vat make him much drouble all de vile. Please don't give him some bunishment ven he vas late mit the morning. He voult got there shust in time every day, but he ish not himself to blame, he ish got no mudder. She vas ded ten years ago. I am this poy's barent, by his mudder before she vas ded."—New York Express.

JIM WEBSTER sighed heavily. "What's de matter, Jim?" asked Uncle Mose, in a sympathizing tone. "I has made up my mind to quit the chicken business. I's tired being arrested, and hiring lawyers and habin' folks ask, 'What's my chickens?' I am gwine inter a bizness whar I'd be respected, and whar de police won't neber bodder me no moah." "What business am dat, Jim?" "Gam-bler."

COMING INTO PORT.

I have weathered the turbulent cape of storms,
Where the winds of passion blow,
I have sheered by the reefs that gnash to foam
The shallows that lurk below,
I have joyed in the surge of the whistling sea,
And the wild strong stress of the gale,
As my brave bark quivered and leaped, alive,
To the strain of its crowded sail
Than the masterful strain was on me,
And with Nature I wrestled glad,
And danger was like a passionate bride,
And Love was itself half mad
Then Life was a storm that blew me on,
And flew as the wild winds fly,
And hope was a pennon streaming out,
High up—to play with the sky.

Oh, the golden days, the glorious days
That so lavish of life we spent!
Oh, the dreaming nights with the silent stars
'Neath the sky's mysterious tent!
Oh, the light, light heart and the strong desire
And the pulse's quickening thrill,
When Joy lived with us, and Beauty smiled,
And Youth had its free, full will!
The whole wide world was before us then,
And never our spirits failed,
And we never looked back, but onward, onward
Into the Future we sailed.
Ever before us the far horizon,
Whose dim and exquisite line
Alone divided our Earth from Heaven,
Our Life from a Life divine.

Now my voyage is well-nigh over,
And my stanchest spars are gone;
And my sails are rent, and my barnacled bark
Drags slowly and heavily on.
The faint breeze comes from the distant shore
With its odors dim and sweet,
And soon in the silent harbor of peace
Long-parted friends I shall greet.
The voyage is well-nigh over,
Though at times a capful of wind
Will rattle the ropes and fill the sails,
And furrow a wake behind.
But the sea has become a weariness,
And glad into port I shall come,
With my sails all furled, and my anchor dropped
And my cargo carried home.

OLGA MOROSOFF'S ESCAPE.

An Interesting Episode of Nihilism in Russia.

In November, 1879, Olga fell into the hands of the police. It should be explained that when these succeed in arresting a Nihilist they always leave in the apartments of the captured person a few men to take into custody any one who may come to see that person. In our language, this is called a trap. Owing to the Russian habit of arranging everything at home and not in the cafes, as in Europe, the Nihilists are often compelled to go to each other's houses, and thus these traps become fatal. In order to diminish the risk, safety signals are generally placed in the windows, and are taken away at the first sound of the police. But, owing to the negligence of the Nihilists themselves, accustomed as they are to danger, and so occupied that they sometimes have not time to eat a mouthful all day long, the absence of these signals is often disregarded, or attributed to some combination of circumstances—the difficulty, or perhaps the topographical impossibility, of placing signals in many apartments in such a manner that they can be seen from a distance. This measure of public security frequently, therefore, does not answer its purpose, and a good half of all the Nihilists who have fallen into the hands of the Government have been caught in these very traps.

A precisely similar misfortune happened to Olga, and the worst of it was it was in the house of Alexander Kviatkovsky, one of the Terrorist leaders, where the police found a perfect magazine of dynamite, bombs and similar things, together with a plan of the Winter Palace, which, after the explosion there, led to his capital conviction. As may readily be believed, the police would regard with anything but favorable eyes every one who came to the house of such a man.

Directly she entered, Olga was immediately seized by two policemen, in order to prevent her from defending herself. She, however, displayed not the slightest desire to do so. She feigned surprise, astonishment, and invented there and then the story that she had come to see some dressmakers (who had, in fact, their names on a door-plate below, and occupied the upper floor) for the purpose of ordering something, but had mistaken the door; that she did not know what they wanted with her, and wished to return to her husband, etc.; the usual subterfuges to which the police are accustomed to turn a deaf ear. But Olga played her part so well that the pristav, or head of the police of the district, was really inclined to believe her. He told her that anyhow, if she did not wish to be immediately taken to prison, she must give her name and conduct him to her own house. Olga gave the first name which came into her mind, which naturally enough was not that under which she was residing in the capital, but as to her place of residence, she declared, with every demonstration of profound despair, that she could not, and would not, take him there or say where it was. The pristav insisted, and, upon her reiterated refusal, observed to the poor simple thing that her obstinacy was not only prejudicial to her, but even useless, as, knowing her name, he would have no difficulty in sending some one to the Adressni Stol, and obtaining her address. Struck by this unanswerable argument, Olga said she would take him to her house.

No sooner had she descended into the street, accompanied by the pristav and some of his subalterns, than Olga met a friend, Madame Maria A., who was going to Kviatkovsky's, where a meeting of Terrorists had actually been fixed for that very day. It was to this chance meeting that the Terrorists owed their escape from the very grave danger which threatened them; for the windows of Kviatkovsky's rooms were so placed that it was impossible to see any signals there-from the street.

Naturally enough the two friends made no sign to indicate that they were acquainted with each other, but Madame Maria A., on seeing Olga with the police, ran in all haste to inform her friends of the arrest of her companion, about which there could be no doubt.

The first to be warned was Nicholas Morosoff, as the police in a short time would undoubtedly go to his house and make the customary search. Olga felt certain that this was precisely what her friend would do, and therefore her sole object now was to delay her custodians so as to give Morosoff time to "clear" his rooms (that is to say, destroy or take away papers and everything compromising), and to get away himself. It was this that she was anxious about, for he had been accused by the traitor Goldenberg of having taken part in the mining work connected with the Moscow attempt, and by the Russian law was liable to the penalty of death.

Greatly emboldened by this lucky meeting with her friend, Olga, without saying a word, conducted the police to the Ismailovsky Polk, one of the quarters of the town most remote from the place of her arrest, which was in the Nevsky district. They found the street and the house indicated to them. They entered and summoned the dvornik (doorkeeper), who has to be present at every search made. Then came the inevitable explanation. The dvornik said that he did not know the lady, and that she did not lodge in that house. Upon hearing this statement Olga covered her face with her hands, and again gave way to despair. She sobbingly admitted that she had deceived them from fear of her husband, who was very harsh, that she had not given her real name and address, and wound up by begging them to let her go home.

"What's the use of all this, madam?" exclaimed the pristav, "Don't you see that you are doing yourself harm by these tricks? I'll forgive you this time, because of your inexperience, but take care you don't do it again, and lead us at once to your house, or otherwise you will repent it." After much hesitation, Olga resolved to obey the injunctions of the pristav. She gave her name, and said she lived in one of the lines of the Vasili Ostrox.

It took an hour to reach the place. At last they arrived at the place indicated. Here precisely the same scene with the dvornik was repeated. Then the pristav lost all patience, and wanted to take her away to prison at once, without making a search in her house. Upon hearing the pristav's harsh announcement, Olga flung herself into an arm-chair and had a violent attack of hysterics. They fetched some water and sprinkled her face with it to revive her. When she had somewhat recovered, the pristav ordered her to rise and go at once to the prison of the district. Her hysterical attack recommenced. But the pristav would stand no more nonsense, and told her to get up, or otherwise he would have her taken away in a cab by main force.

The despair of the poor lady was now at its height. "Listen!" she exclaimed. "I will tell you everything now." And she began the story of her life and marriage. She was now the daughter of a rustic, and she named the province and the village. Up to the age of sixteen she remained with her father and looked after the sheep. But one day an engineer, her future husband, who was at work upon a branch line of railway, came to stop in the house. He fell in love with her, took her to town, placed her with his aunt, and had teachers to educate her, as she was illiterate and knew nothing. Then he married her, and they lived very happily together for four years: but he had since become discontented, rough, irritable, and she feared that he loved her no longer; but she loved him as much as ever, as she owed everything to him, and could not be ungrateful. Then she said that he would be dreadfully angry with her, and would perhaps drive her away if she went to the house in charge of the police; that it would be a scandal; that he would think she had stolen something; and so on. All this and much more of the same kind, with endless details and repetitions, did Olga narrate; interrupting her story from time to time by sighs, exclamations and tears. She wept in very truth, and her tears fell copiously, as she assured me when she laughingly described this scene to me afterward. I thought at the time that she would have made a very good actress.

The pristav, though impatient, continued to listen. He was vexed at the idea of returning with empty hands, and he hoped this time at all events her story would lead to something. Then, too, he had not the slightest suspicion, and would have taken his oath that the woman he had arrested was a poor, simple creature, who had fallen into his hands without having done anything whatever, as so frequently happens in Russia, where houses are searched on the slightest suspicion. When Olga had finished her story the pristav began to console her. He said that her husband would certainly pardon her when he heard her explanation; that the same thing might happen to any one; and so on. Olga resisted for a while, and asked the pristav to promise that he would assure her husband she had done nothing wrong; and more to the same effect. The pristav promised everything, in order to bring the matter to an end, and this time Olga proceeded toward her real residence. She had gained three hours and a half; for her arrest took place at about two o'clock, and she did not reach her own home until about half-past five. She had no doubt that Morosoff had got away, and after having "cleared" the rooms had thrice as much time as he required for the operation.

Having ascended the stairs, accompanied by the dvorniks and the police, she rang the bell. The door opened and the party entered, first the antechamber, then the sitting-room. There a terrible surprise awaited her. Morosoff in person was seated at a table, in his dressing-gown, with a pencil in his hand and a pen in his ear. Olga fell into hysterics. This time they were real, not simulated.

How was it that he had remained in the house? The lady previously mentioned had not failed to hasten at once and inform Morosoff, whom she found at home with three or four friends. At the announcement of the arrest of Olga they all had but one idea—that of remaining where they were, of arming themselves, and of awaiting her arrival, in order to rescue her by main force. But Morosoff energetically opposed this proposal. He said, and rightly said, that it presented more dangers than advantages, for the police being in numbers and reinforced by the dvorniks of the house, who are all a species of police agents of inferior grade, the attempt at the best would result in the liberation of one person at the cost of several others. His view prevailed, and the plan, which was more generous than prudent, was abandoned. The rooms were at once "cleared" with the utmost rapidity, so that the fate of the person arrested, which was sure to be a hard one and was now inevitable, should not be rendered more grievous. When all was ready and they were about to leave, Morosoff staggered his friends by acquainting them with the plan he had thought of. He would remain in the house alone and await the arrival of the police. They thought he had lost his senses; for everybody knew, and no one better than himself, that, with the terrible accusation hanging over his head, if once arrested it would be all over with him. But he said he hoped it would not come to that—nay, he expected to get clear off with Olga, and in any case would share her fate. They would escape or perish together. His friends heard him announce this determination with mingled feelings of grief and astonishment and admiration. Neither entreaties nor remonstrances could shake his determination. He was firm, and remained at home after saying farwell to his friends, who took leave of him as of a man on the point of death.

He had drawn up his plan, which by the suggestion of some mysterious instinct perfectly harmonized with that of Olga, although they had never in any way arranged the matter. He also had determined to feign innocence, and had arranged everything in such a manner as to make it seem as though he were the most peaceful of citizens. As he lived under the false passport of an engineer, he covered his table with a heap of plans of various dimensions, and, having put on his dressing-gown and slippers, set diligently to work to copy one, while waiting the arrival of his unwelcome guests.

It was in this guise and engaged in this innocent occupation that he was surprised by the police. The scene which followed may easily be imagined. Olga flung her arms around his neck, and poured forth a stream of broken words, exclamations, excuses and complaints of these men who had arrested her because she wished to call upon her milliner. In the midst, however, of these exclamations, she whispered in his ear: "Have you not been warned?"

"Yes," he replied in the same manner, "everything is in order. Don't be alarmed." Meanwhile he played the part of an affectionate husband mortified by this scandal. After a little scolding and then a little consolation, he turned to the pristav and asked him for an explanation, as he could not quite understand what had happened from the disconnected words of his wife. The pristav politely told the whole story. The engineer seemed greatly surprised and grieved, and could not refrain from somewhat bitterly censuring his wife for her unpardonable imprudence. The pristav, who was evidently reassured by the aspect of the husband and of the whole household, declared nevertheless that he must make a search.

"I hope you will excuse me, sir," he added, "but I am obliged to do it; it is my duty."

"I willingly submit to the law," nobly replied the engineer.

Thereupon he pointed to the room, so as to indicate that the pristav was free to search it thoroughly, and having lit a candle with his own hand, for at that hour in St. Petersburg it was already dark, he quietly opened the door of the adjoining room, which was his own little place. The search was made. Certainly not a single scrap of paper was found, written or printed, which smelt of Nihilism.

"By rights, I ought to take the lady to prison," said the pristav, when he had finished his search, "especially as her previous behavior was anything but what it ought to have been; but I won't do that. I will simply keep you under arrest here until your passports have been verified. You see, sir," he added, "we police officers are not quite so bad as the Nihilists make us out."

"There are always honest men in every occupation," replied the engineer with a gracious bow. More compliments of the same kind, which I need not repeat, were exchanged between them, and the pristav went away with most of his men, well impressed with such a polite and pleasant reception. He left, however, a guard in the kitchen, with strict injunctions not to lose sight of the host and hostess, until further orders.

Morosoff and Olga were alone. The first act of the comedy they had improvised had met with complete success. But the storm was far from having blown over. The verification of their passports would show that they were false. The inevitable consequence would be a warrant for their arrest, which might be issued at any moment if the verification were made by means of the telegraph. The sentinel, rigid, motionless, with his sword by his side and his revolver in his belt, was seated in the kitchen, which was at the back, exactly opposite the outer door, so that it was impossible to approach the door without being seen by him. For several hours they racked their brains and discussed, in a low voice, various plans of escape. To free themselves by main force was not to be thought of. No arms had been left in the place, for they had purposely taken away. Yet without weapons, how could they grapple with this big, sturdy fellow, armed as he was? They hoped that as the hours passed on he would fall asleep. But this hope was not realized. When, at about half-past ten, Morosoff, under the pretext of going into his little room, which was used for various domestic purposes, passed near the kitchen, he saw the man still at his post, with his eyes wide open, attentive and vigilant as at first. Yet when Moresoff returned Olga would have declared that the way was quite clear and that they had nothing to do but to leave, so beaming were his eyes. He had, in fact, found what he wanted—a plan simple and safe. The little room opened into the small corridor which served as a sort of ante-chamber, and its door flanked that of the kitchen. In returning to the sitting-room, Morosoff observed that when the door of the little room was wide open, it completely shut out the view of the kitchen, and consequently hid from the policeman the outer door, and also that of the sitting-room. It would be possible, therefore, at a given moment, to pass through the antechamber without being seen by the sentinel. But this could not be done unless some one came and opened the door of the little room. Neither Olga nor Morosoff could do this, for if, under some pretext, they opened it, they would of course have to leave it open. This would immediately arouse suspicion, and the policeman would run after them and catch them perhaps before they had descended the staircase. Could they trust the landlady? The temptation to do so was great. If she consented to assist them, success might be considered certain. But if she refused! Who could guarantee that, for fear of being punished as an accomplice, she would not go and reveal everything to the police? Of course she did not suspect in the least what kind of people her lodgers were.

Nothing, therefore, was said to her, but they hoped, nevertheless, to have her unconscious assistance, and it was upon that Morosoff had based his plan. About eleven o'clock she went into the little room where the pump was placed, to get the water to fill the kitchen cistern for next day's consumption. As the room was very small, she generally left one of the two pails in the corridor, while she filled the other with water, and, of course, was thus obliged to leave the door open. Everything thus depended upon the position in which she placed her pail. An inch or two on one side or the other would decide their fate; for it was only when the door of the little room was wide open that it shut out the view of the kitchen and concealed the end of the antechamber. If not wide open part of the outer door could be seen. There remained half an hour before the decisive moment, which both employed in preparing for flight. Their wraps were hanging up in the wardrobe in the antechamber. They had, therefore, to put on what they had with them in the sitting-room. Morosoff put on a light summer overcoat. Olga threw over her shoulders a woolen scarf, to protect her somewhat from the cold. In order to deaden as much as possible the sounds of their hasty footsteps, which might arouse the attention of the sentinel in the profound silence of the night, both of them put on their goloshes, which, being elastic, made but little noise. They had to put them on next to their stockings, although it was not particularly agreeable at that season, for they were in their slippers, their shoes having been purposely sent into the kitchen to be cleaned for the following day, in order to remove all suspicion respecting their intentions.

Everything being prepared, they remained in readiness, listening to every sound made by the landlady. At last came the clanging of the empty pails. She went to the little room, threw open the door, and began her work. The moment had arrived. Morosoff cast a hasty glance. Oh, horror! The empty pail scarcely projected beyond the threshold, and the door was at a very acute angle, so that even from the door of the sitting-room where they were part of the interior of the kitchen could be seen. He turned toward Olga, who was standing behind him holding her breath, and made an energetic sign in the negative. A few minutes passed, which seemed like hours. The pumping ceased; the pail was full. She was about to place it on the floor. Both stretched their necks, advanced a step, being unable to control the anxiety of their suspense. This time the heavy pail banged against the door and forced it back on its hinges, a stream of water being spilt. The view of the kitchen was completely shut out; but another disaster had occurred. Overbalanced by the heavy weight, the landlady had come half out into the corridor. "She has seen us," whispered Morosoff, falling back pale as death. "No," replied Olga, excitedly; and she was right. The landlady disappeared into the little room, and a moment afterward recommenced her clattering work.

Without losing a moment, without evening turning round, Morosoff gave the signal to his companion by a firm grip of the hand, and both issued forth, hastily passed through the corrider, softly opened the door, and found themselves upon the landing of the staircase. With cautious steps they descended and were in the street, ill-clad but very light of heart. A quarter of an hour afterward they were in a house where they were being anxiously awaited by their friends, who welcomed them with a joy more easy to imagine than to describe.

In their own abode their flight was not discovered until late into the morning, when the landlady came to do the room.—Cornhill Magazine.

OVER-MENTAL WORK.

People Who Wear Themselves Out by Undue Exertion of the Brain.

Any person, who has moved in the usual circles of society, must have noticed that children rarely reach the growth and stature of their parents. They possess poorer health, and so are less able to endure the wear and tear of life. The parents may have led lives not exactly in harmony with the laws of health. They may have had no regard to ventilation, nor cleanliness, yet are stout and firm, and duly reach old age. Their children were well bred, and faithfully observed the laws of health and growth. They were careful to obtain a full supply of fresh and invigorating air, and yet were less able to endure the cares and toils of life than their parents. The generation of girls coming upon the stage of life at the present period are likely to be less healthy, less robust, less able to endure the activities of life than their mothers. Many causes exist for this condition of our girls. But a leading one is that they have less physical exercise, and more mental than the mothers. One hundred years ago girls were limited in their studies to reading, writing and arithmetic as far as the Rule of Three. They were allowed to run and scream; to rest and sleep, to spend their days cheerfully, and their nights quietly. But now girls spend ten years of their time in school, urged forward and compelled to exert their minds more and more. Every hour of the day and evening is occupied in studying music, the languages, history, and the various branches of mathematics. Some have no time for proper sleep, their minds are so full of thoughts that are useless and even harmful. So much brain force is consumed in mind work that they have but little left for exercising the functions of the body. Their appetite often fails, or if they consume a small amount of food, it does not easily digest or nourish them. One cause, then, is that our girls now-a-days are subject to a greater mental strain than were their mothers. So many of them really break down physically, and even mentally long before they reach their growth.

The proper purpose of education is to develop the intellectual powers—to cultivate them in such a way as to give them strength and to store them with a certain amount of knowledge. Now the general law in all nature is that moderate exercise of mind or body promotes their growth and strength, while excessive exercise debilitates them. Our girls, very often, are compelled to keep their minds in excessive exercise, and so, instead of strengthening and enlarging them, actually weaken and belittle them. The most distinguished scholars in our seminaries for females are not usually those who are the most useful in the ordinary walks of life. We may find among the graduates of these seminaries many illustrations of this fact. We have known professionally many girls who were nearly, if not quite, ruined by over-straining of the mind, and we have rarely known them entirely to recover. The usual result of over-tasking the intellectual powers is, ordinarily, a chronic disturbance of the brain and general feebleness. We have known some girls who were completely ruined for this world by over-exertion of the mind and under-feeding of the body. School girls rarely consume food enough, if over-tasked in mind, to sustain the functions of the body.

A young lady of unusual strength and beauty, the daughter of robust parents, was nearly ruined years ago by this wicked process of over-tasking and under-feeding at a boarding-school. The principle may be true, but its application was false. The principle was, that a girl can not eat heartily and study well. The brain can not supply force at the same time to the mind and stomach. No person can think clearly, and at the same time, digest a proper dinner. The inference, the principal and manager of this seminary made was, that girls could study hard, or exercise their intellectual power only on a light and innutritious diet. In harmony with this thought, this girl was over-worked and under-fed. The result was what we should expect. After a few months from her entrance on this course of treatment, her sufferings began. She lost her appetite, had headache and vertigo. She had dreams about her studies; she was studying hardly less by night than by day. Finally her brain was so much disturbed, and her health was so seriously impaired, that she was compelled to forego her ambitious aspirations and retire to a quiet and peaceful life. A few years of good sleep, pure air, exposure to the genial influences of the sun, nutritious food and cheerful friends, gradually restored her to her former health and beauty. A few years passed away and she was married. Her four children inherited her enfeebled brain and could endure only a moderate amount of mental exercise without suffering headache, dizziness, or some other disturbance of the brain.

Such cases are often charged to constitutional delicacy. They retard the development of the body and create disorder of the brain, from which few ever entirely recover. The mature and tough may endure hard labors of mind and body, but not the young and growing. We often now-a-days meet with adults who are suffering from excessive mental toil expended in their youthful days. They were rendered feeble because when coming to maturity, they indulged in excessive exertions of their mental powers; had no proper or sufficient rest, and no opportunity to consume and digest food enough to keep their physical machinery in good order.—C. Allen, M. D., in Western Review.

—Here is a lovely incident: Fifteen years ago Sir Moses Motefiore, then eighty-five years old, was walking in a little garden in Ramsgate, on the coast of England. Near a noble tomb was one filled grave and an empty one. A friend who accompanied him asked: "Why this empty grave?" "That is for me," replied the philanthropist; "in the other lies my wife. Her soul is with me still, as she was with me in life. She was my guiding-star, and now looks down upon me."

A RAILROAD REMINISCENCE.

How the Oldest Employe of the Consolidated Road Cleaned Out a Gang of Roughs.

The New Haven Register has the following to say about William Mack, the Belle Dock switchman, who has been longer in the service of the New York, New Haven & Hartford Road than any of its other employes, having worked for it thirty-seven years:

"On one occasion he did the line a good turn, which it is likely will never be forgotten so long as Vice-President Reed lives. It was many years ago, when the traffic between New York and Hartford was less than a twentieth what it is now. The Hartford & New Haven Road then ran to Belle Dock and connected there with the steamboat for New York. By this means the road was building up a handsome traffic when the Hartford and New York steamboats were put on the Connecticut River and the Hartford depot of the road was filled with runners who netted nearly all the passengers for these boats. The railroad company gathered its shop hands and drove the runners out on several occasions, until finally the steamboat company brought up a gang of New York roughs, headed by a big bully. These cleaned out the shop hands and then marched in and took charge of the depot and began scooping in the passengers, howling defiance at the officers of the road. The latter were in despair. Finally one of them thought of Mack, who at that time was conductor of a gravel train and was working down near Meriden. Mack then stood six feet one in his stockings, a powerful, good-natured man, who never knew what it was to feel fear. But he was a perfect demon when maddened. The following dispatch was wired him from Hartford:

"'William Mack, Meriden, Conn., come in at once with your men.'

"Conductor Mack knew nothing of what was going on in Hartford, but in five minutes' time he was flying toward that city with an engine and one gravel car full of laborers. At Hartford the roughs still held the depot. Conductor Mack was directed to arm his men with clubs and drive them out. Said he:

"'I'll do it alone.'

"No amount of talk would dissuade him from entering the depot at once and alone, although the officers drew up his men for assistance, if necessary. He stepped rapidly forward and confronted the bully with an upraised and clinched fist and with flashing eyes. All he said was: 'Now, curse you, get out of this, quick!' The bully was completely over-awed by the threatening aspect of the man who crowded down upon him, and who seemed by his manner determined to override everything. He fell back, and speedily he and his whole crowd were outside the depot. They made no more trouble. After this Mr. Mack was frightfully mangled in a railroad accident, and later he was again badly hurt. Now, aged and crippled, but still a man of iron will and vise-like grip, he attends to a half dozen switches about his little switch-house in Belle Dock Yard. One day an official of the road, high in authority, came by his house and saw him limping to a distant switch. He shouted to him in a voice of thunder: "What do you mean by hopping all over this yard to tend those switches? There are two switches by your door. Do you tend them, and don't you let me hear of your touching any more.' But William Mack, true and tried, will remain faithful at his post while he lives. He covers the same amount of work as before, and has never made a mistake during all these years he has been throwing switches."

A SUBTLE POISON.

A Compound of Whose Effects Science Could Give No Explanation.

There never, perhaps, was a period so frightfully productive of crimes of what may be called private poisoning, as distinguished from that which was practised by public men and for more or less public ends, than the seventeenth century. This seems to have been chiefly owing to the fact that a knowledge of arsenic had then become popular. The notorious "Naples water" employed and sold freely by the woman Toffana, or Tofania, was believed at the time to be a preparation of arsenic, and there was another preparation of the same deadly substance in use about the same time. Both these poisons were more virulent than arsenic, and one of them at least is said to have been prepared by means which modern science has only recently come to understand. Recent research, it is said, has proved that arsenic, when applied to organic matter, such as flesh, forms compounds of a character far more poisonous than arsenic itself. This is a singular fact that seems likely to present some curious developments, and it would seem to be not merely arsenic that may be intensified in its action this way. Dr. Burdon Sanderson says the medical officer of health for St. Pancras, experimenting with the material taken from the abdominal cavity of a dog that had died from inflammation of the peritoneum, found that when injected into the abdominal cavity of another dog, the virulence of the poison was rapidly increased, and that thus it was possible, by passing this poison through a number of dogs, to breed a poison which was as intense as that of a snake. So, also, it is suspected by some that diphtheria will result from a simple sore throat, developing its true character after passing through successive individuals. It was by a knowledge of some law, which seems to be thus obscurely indicated, that aequetta di Perugia was produced, and the production of this poison led to the forming of an association of young married women for the assassination of their husbands. The "Naples water," however, was more extensively used than this. It was as clear as water, and five or six drops would cause death, which, however, would not be immediate, and of which the best science of the day could give no explanation. The woman Toffana is said to have confessed to 600 murders by its means, and is known to have used it with impunity for half a century.—London Globe.

Sophie's Kiss.

The following is given as a true story, and the little comedy was played in the night "Pullman" bound from Scotland to London recently: "The car was full, and, as the ladies' compartment was occupied, the next berths to it were partitioned off with curtains from the rest of the car for a married couple, who had taken their places late. About an hour after every one had retired, and when everything was quiet a low voice was heard from behind the curtains: "Sophie, Sophie, give me a kiss and say you forgive me." Then a little louder: "Sophie, I can't sleep unless you say you forgive me; give me a kiss and say you forgive me." Still no response. At last the voice of the evidently penitent husband (he was quite regardless of the tittering and smothered laughter from the neighboring berths) pleaded again: "Sophie, Sophie, just one kiss, one, and say you forgive me." Unable to stand this sort of thing any longer, a choleric old Indian officer popped his head out of his berth and shouted: "Sophie, for Heaven's sake, give him a kiss and let us get some sleep."—N. Y. Herald.

HOME AND FARM.

—An agricultural journal advises the planting of plum trees in the hen yard.

—Eggs packed in well-dried ashes, and so as not touch each other, have been kept perfectly sweet for twelve months.

—Supply your barns and stables with brushes and wire curry-combs that will not scratch the tender skin of animals, and see that they are used.

—The stem of the pumpkin, when grated fine and steeped, strained, and the decoction well sweetened, is a very valuable remedy for flatulent or cramp colic.—Troy Times.

—Puffs: Sift one quart of flour with one teaspoonful of soda and two teaspoonfuls of cream tartar, add one teaful of salt and one pint of water. Shape into small cakes and bake in a greased pan.—The Household.

—A writer in the Prairie Farmer proposes to have a bed of clean, sharp sand, twelve to twenty feet square, inclosed and roofed over, for his horses to roll in. The bed should be raised to prevent water from running into the inclosure.

—An experienced apiarist says: If honey is kept where it freezes during winter, the capping in the spring will be found full of minute cracks, and as soon as the weather is warm honey will ooze from the cells. Some recommend keeping it in a dry, cool place.

—Do not buy opiates for sleeplessness. Be out in the sun as much as possible without a sunshade, and we venture to say that you will slumber soundly at night. Sunlight is very invigorating, and those who are healthy never complain of loss of sleep. If you want to be like a plant grown in the shade remain in doors.—N. Y. Herald.

—A recent cough will almost always yield to the following treatment within two or three days: Mix in a bottle four ounces of glycerine, two ounces of alcohol, two ounces of water, two grains of morphine. Shake well. Dose for an adult, one or two teaspoonfuls every two or three hours. Half this quantity to children from ten to fifteen years.—It is not safe to give it to infants or children under ten years of age.—Chicago Journal.

—A writer in the Tribune and Farmer states that he has cured several cases of founder with alum. He put one tablespoonful, finely pulverized, as far back in the animal's mouth as possible, as soon as making the discovery that the horse was stiffened. Not only does he claim that he has cured several cases, but strongly affirms that he has never known the remedy to fail, if given immediately after the trouble has developed itself.

MAINTAINING FERTILITY.

The Importance of Husbanding Supplies of Fertilizing Material.

It is of the utmost importance that we farmers make all the stable manure we can; but even if half the farm be kept in permanent pasture, and the rest in corn, oats, wheat and three years clever and timothy, we can not get more than enough for one of the two crops, corn or wheat. Which crop shall get it? If only one, then the other will suffer, and, besides, the catch of grass after the wheat may be poor. Suppose we give the manure to the corn, plowing it in shallow, or, better, dragging it into the hills, we may get seventy bushels where we would only get ten without the manure. Such has been the experience on our Western Reserve clay soil.

But now what shall we do for the wheat? Here the commercial manures may help us out. Chemistry teaches that ordinarily the soil and the air supply enough of all the needed food of plants, except three constituents—nitrogen compounds, phosphate and potash. Phosphates made from bones, with other animal refuse added, may contain these substances in fairly suitable proportions; but farmers are learning that these manures can be too easily adulterated; and in their experience they are getting better success with raw ground bone than with superphosphate from bone or South Carolina rock phosphate.

We care more, however, for results than for the chemistry of the matter, but even in using the results we may make mistakes. With bone adulterated with one-sixth South Carolina rock and one-eighth plaster, the whole ground very fine, we may get as good a crop of wheat as with coarse raw bone, but we may fail to see that the bone would help succeeding crops more. On our moist, compact clay soils bone-meal gives a good crop of wheat without any other fertilizer; one field here that never had any manure, and would not have yielded six bushels of corn to the acre, gave, I think, twenty-seven bushels of wheat with a dressing of 200 pounds of coarse bone-meal alone.

On open, subsoiled land bone is not so beneficial for either wheat or corn; but 200 pounds of superphosphate in the hill will sometimes double the latter crop, while in other cases it will only cause a more rapid growth in the early part of the season without any improvement in the yield of ears; with us this year no difference was to be seen where a row of corn was left without phosphate between rows fed at the rate of 200 pounds to the acre. [But this row might have stolen all it needed from its too near neighboring rows.—Ed.] However useful phosphates or bone-meals may be to us, we should not buy them without knowing what per cent. of plant food they contain. As we cannot always learn that, the safest course would seem to be to apply stable manure to corn, and to wheat coarse ground bone which can be afforded pure.—J. B. Smith, in N. Y. Tribune.

WATER.

One of the Laws Upon Which Agricultural Practice is Founded.

Water is the universal solvent. Nothing in existence can resist its soluble action. And oxygen is the great reducing agent by which matter may be rendered easily soluble in water. Water and oxygen are everywhere; the atmosphere is never so dry but it contains watery vapor or water in solution, and in every 100 parts of it there are nearly 21 parts of oxygen. The effect of water and oxygen may be familiarly illustrated by the example of a piece of iron that is exposed to the air under ordinary circumstances. As the air is moist, the water and oxygen together cause the iron to rust, the rust being an oxide or a combination of the oxygen with the iron. In time the iron will have been completely rusted away or changed into oxide of iron, which may be dissolved in water and carried away; so that the whole substance of the iron may be removed. Had the air been perfectly dry the iron would have been unaffected, for nearly all chemical action, and especially that of oxidation, takes place only in the presence of moisture. It is therefore necessary, before any change or improvement can take place in the soil that it should be opened by culture to the influences of the atmosphere and of moisture; for it is one of the laws upon which agricultural practice is founded that the mechanical condition of the soil is an important element of its fertility.—N. Y. Times.

Discovery in Æronautics.

A German engineer, named Fisher, has made an important discovery in æronautics, by which he is enabled to condense or expand the gas in a balloon. The agent he employs is compressed carbonic acid, with the help of which he can ascend or descend at pleasure. This perpendicular movement puts it in the power of the æronaut to go up or down until he finds a current of air moving in the horizontal direction he wishes. Military critics attribute great importance to this discovery, because in time of war a balloon will be able to reach the enemy's territory and ascend again without requiring a fresh supply of gas.—Boston Herald.

DESTRUCTIVE FLAMES.

A Hotel and Opera-house Destroyed by Fire.

Three Lives Lost—The "Beggar Student" Opera Company Lose All their Effects.

RACINE, WIS., December 28.—About one o'clock this morning an explosion startled the sixty guests of the Blake Hotel, and the cry of "Fire" was raised. The guests hurried out of the burning building amid great confusion and excitement. Nearly all were in their night clothes. By the time the fire department arrived the beautiful hotel and Opera-house, next door, were burning fiercely, and no attempt was made to save them, but the attention of the firemen was directed towards saving adjoining property. It was thought that all the inmates of the hotel escaped, but upon investigation it was found that Mr. and Mrs. Russell P. Glover, of the "Beggar Student" Opera Company, and the housekeeper, Mrs. S. A. Patrick, were consumed in the flames. The members of the Opera Company lost their personal effects, including nearly all their clothes, of the total value of about $6,000. Mrs. K. R. Doud, wife of Ex-Mayor Doud, who occupied apartments in the hotel, lost $5,000 worth of jewels, pictures, books, etc., among the latter being a magnificent collection of Dante's works. Mrs. Doud escaped in her night clothes. Among the other losers by the fire are Vilas, druggist; Wood Brothers, hardware; Leaa Johnson, cafe; Montgomery & Long, barbers; Rausch, variety store, and Duffy, saloon. The total loss is about $150,000; insurance about $80,000. The Opera-house, which was an exceedingly handsome structure, six stories high, and measuring ninety by one hundred feet, was built in 1881 by a stock company, at a cost of $102,000. It was fitted throughout in fine style, and was said to be one of the handsomest places of amusement in the West. The members of the opera company have been tendered a benefit by the managers of the Opera-house. The origin of the fire is unknown.

General Grant's Troubles.

NEW YORK, December 27.—The execution issued upon the judgment obtained by Wm. H. Vanderbilt against General U. S. Grant covers houses in Washington and Philadelphia, farms near St. Louis and Chicago and all the relics, swords, medals and gifts received by General Grant from the several European rulers and distinguished persons during his trip around the world. It also covers the testimonial of thanks noted by Congress. Mrs. Grant has consented to waive her interest in the real estate in order to fully satisfy Mr. Vanderbilt's claim. The farm near Chicago is valued at $25,000, and the one near St. Louis at $65,000. The foregoing is the general nature of General Grant's admission to General Sherman, on the occasion of the latter's visit to General Grant a day or two ago, and which General Sherman has told to several friends of the Ex-President. An effort has been made to prevent what is understood to be a sacrifice of General Grant's most important possessions. The fact was elicited that Mr. Vanderbilt had consented to release his claim on the General for $100,000, and Cyrus W. Field had undertaken to raise a part of it. General Sherman has gone to Philadelphia and Washington to secure the balance of the amount.

Naval Officers' Mileage Claims.

WASHINGTON, December 26.—Congress will be called upon to appropriate $500,000 to pay the mileage claims of naval officers already allowed by the Second Comptroller and Fourth Auditor of the Treasury under the Court of Claims decision allowing officers mileage for travel in Europe when on Government business, instead of actual traveling expenses formerly allowed. The claims have accumulated with unexpected rapidity. Some are on journeys performed more than forty years ago by officers since retired, and the amounts vary from $100 to the claim of Rear Admiral Howell, which amounts to $4,200. About four hundred of these claims have already been allowed, and a number are passed upon every week.

Naval Yards to Suspend Work.

WASHINGTON, December 26.—Owing to the failure of Congress to pass a naval appropriation bill, Secretary Chandler is preparing an order for the closing of all the navy-yards and the suspension of all work on the evening of December 31, under arrangements that will provide for a reopening and resumption of work as soon after the reassembling of Congress, on January 5, as provision is made for the maintenance of the navy. As has been the case in similar instances in the past, there will be a general suspension of workmen, with a view to their re-employment as soon possible, and those whose services are absolutely indispensable will be allowed to continue and rely upon Congress to reimburse them.

Thieving Tramps.

BEDFORD, IND., December 28.—Two tramps entered the house of William Owens, about three miles north of town, this morning, and tied his daughter, the only person in the house, and then, with a revolver pressed against her temple, made her tell where the money was, which amounted to $85. This they took and skipped. Mr. Owens returned to the house, found his daughter tied and heard her story. He got the neighbors and started in pursuit, and succeeded in capturing them about fifteen miles north of here. The prisoners were brought here, and gave their names as John Thomas and John Owens. They were searched, and the money, two revolvers, a pair of knucks and a razor found on them. They were placed in jail.

John Baldwin Dead.

CLEVELAND, O., December 28.—John Baldwin, founder of the Baldwin University at Berea, O., died to-day, aged ninety-five years. When ninety years of age Baldwin went to Louisiana, purchased a plantation, established a college for colored people and built up the town of Baldwin, where he died.

Wholesale Massacres.

SUAKIN, December 28.—Hoddendowas killed the Chief of the Bemamer tribe and many of his followers, who were trying to relieve Kassala. Hoddendowas captured the Roweyah salt mines, killing many merchants and inhabitants. The survivors left Roweyah in boats, and are expected here to-morrow.

Decreased Revenue Collections.

WASHINGTON, December 28.—The Internal Revenue collections for the first five months of the fiscal year were $47,322,190, a decrease of $3,995,736 from the previous fiscal year.

Still Another.

VIENNA, December 28.—Josef Zenari, Manager of the Discount Bank of Carniolo, at Labach, defaulter for 70,000 florins, killed himself in the bank to-day, when about to be arrested.

SPAIN TREMBLES.

A Number of Persons Killed and Much Property Damaged.

MADRID, December 26.—Two slight shocks of earthquake were experienced in this locality yesterday. The shocks were felt at Gibraltar, and severely in the southern provinces. They caused great alarm among the people of Granada. At Malaga two persons were killed by falling walls. Many towns are reported to have suffered from the earthquake. Several houses, including the telegraph station at Velez, Province of Malaga, were badly injured. The terrified inhabitants encamped in the outskirts of the town during the night. Many persons were injured at Loja, Motrie and Alhama. The convent at Seville was partly destroyed. An official was killed at Veles, and several persons killed elsewhere. At Madrid one person was killed, and several injured. The village of Albanuzies was nearly destroyed. The cities of Seville and Grenada were not much damaged.

MADRID, December 28.—Fresh shocks, more violent than the first, have occurred at Torrox and Alhama. The panic at those places is revived.

MADRID, December 28.—Official reports show 206 persons killed in the provinces of Malaga and Gradada by the recent earthquake. The population of Granada are still encamped in the squares, the richer class lodging in carriages along the streets. The facade of the cathedral was seriously damaged. Many houses were destroyed in Jimena, and a whole family killed in the village of Cajar by a falling chimney. Over half the inhabitants of Albunuetas were killed. Alhama is mostly in ruins. The Province of Malaga suffered equally as much damage as did Granada. Commerce is paralyzed. Two hundred houses at Alfarnetojo were damaged. The panic is subsiding. The shock was not felt in the northwest provinces. The Government has granted $1,000 from the National calamity fund for relief of sufferers of the Province of Granada. Later advices state three hundred lives were lost at Alhama and 750 houses and a church destroyed. Thirty persons were killed at Periana; the town hall and many houses were damaged at Torrox, and the inhabitants fled panic-stricken. It is now estimated that six hundred persons were killed in the province of Malaga, including the killed at Alhama.

Oil Tank Explosion.

ELMIRA, N. Y., December 26.—A large oil tank belonging to the United Pipe Lines located at West Junction, five miles west of this city, exploded this morning. The force of the explosion was so great that many buildings in this city were perceptibly shaken. Several buildings in the vicinity of the tank were wrecked. The tank contained 30,000 barrels of oil at the time of the explosion. The oil immediately took fire and every thing within reach of the flames was quickly consumed. The Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Depot, a thousand feet away, was badly damaged by the force of the explosion, as well as the Erie Depot, six hundred feet away. A house 250 feet from the track was completely wrecked. Windows and doors were blown in and every rafter broken; two ladies who were in the house, escaped without injury. On investigation it was found that no one was seriously injured. Several cars which were waiting to be loaded with oil were burned. The Northern Central Railroad track was covered with burning oil, which consumed the ties and warped the rails out of shape. The second tank, near the scene of the explosion, was melted by the intense heat and the oil it contained also burned.

Wilmot-Travare Difficulty.

FARGO, DAK., December 26.—A Wilmot dispatch in reference to the County-seat trouble says: "Colonel Free, of the Governor's staff, visited Wilmot and Trevere (not Treverse), to-day. His report is understood to be in favor of Wilmot. Writs are out for the arrest of members of the Canvassing Board. Cummings, of Trevare, claiming to be Sheriff, was chased three miles, and escaped across the river. Interviews with parties in Fargo, from Roberts County, are as conflicting as the first report received from the scene of trouble. An examination is now in progress before a U. S. Commissioner in this city.

Six Lives Lost at Sea.

HALIFAX, December 26.—The Government steamer Lansdowne, from Sable Island, brings intelligence of another disaster on one of the outstretching sand bars, involving the loss of six lives. The French brig A. S. H., from St. Pierre, Miq., bound to Boston with a cargo of fish, struck on the north side, two miles from the main station, Friday afternoon. Four men were washed away and lost, and two others were drowned in attempting to reach the shore during the night. The sole survivor reached here by the Lansdowne.

Attempt to Blow Up a Mill Office.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS., December 28.—An attempt was made to blow up the office of the Plunket Woolen Company at Hinsdale to-day. A sack containing an explosive was put under the building. The force of the explosion spent itself mainly laterally. The building was slightly damaged. It is said some employes have a grudge against the superintendent, Suaderhoff, who was shot recently. There is much excitement.

Dashed His Brains Out.

MOOREFIELD, W. VA., December 28.—Lewis Branson, a wealthy farmer living just beyond the village limits, met a horrible death yesterday. He attempted to climb around a high bluff which overlooks the South Branch of the Potomac and missed his footing, falling over seventy feet and dashing his brains out on the rocks below.

Present Treasury Assets.

WASHINGTON, December 26.—The Treasury excess of assets over demand liabilities to-day exceeded $137,000,000, but Secretary McCulloch has no intention of making a bond call at present, as the interest on the four-per-cents and on the Pacific Railroad bonds, payable in January, will take over $9,000,000. The carrying over of $8,000,000 in pension warrants, from November last to December, is likely to prevent a very marked decrease in the public debt for the present month.

Modification of Spanish Treaty.

MADRID, December 26.—The Government, it is said, will authorize Minister Valera, at Washington, to give assent to a modification of the Spanish-American treaty if such action will insure the adoption of the treaty by the American Senate. It would suffice for Spain if only sugars to Class 13 are admitted free into the United States.

Woman's Body Found in the Woods.

MOUNT CARMEL, PA., December 26.—The body of Mrs. John Carroll, of Green Ridge, was found to-day in the woods, about a mile from her house, bearing marks of violence. She was missed from her home last night, and it is believed was assaulted by unknown parties, and left in the woods, where she froze to death.

Horrible Deed of an Insane Mother.

ST. LOUIS, December 28.—Mrs. Williams, living near Dahlgren, Hamilton County, Ill., while in a fit of mental despondency, on Friday last, threw one of her children, a little girl, into a well, and attaching another still younger to her dress, jumped in herself, and all three were drowned.

Illness of General Sheridan.

WASHINGTON, December 26.—Lieutenant General Sheridan is confined to his house by illness, which, though serious, is said not to be dangerous. He is suffering from derangement of the stomach, and his physician has ordered him to remain home and rest.

A HUMAN TERROR.

A Wild Woman of the Mountain Wakes the Echoes With Her Unearthly Yells.

Muscular Built and With the Strength of an Amazon, Found in a Deserted Hut.

WOMELSDORF, PA., December 29.—This village is situated near the foot of the south mountain of the Alleghenies. For the past several months the citizens have been disturbed by the most unearthly yells from the hills. It was generally supposed that they emanated from some strange animal which had taken refuge in the rocks. Mr. Gressmer, of the Bethany Orphan Home, a reform institution at the foot of the mountain, several times heard the screams of the beast. Franklin Katterman, Jacob Mathewe and Theo. Startzee, all old hunters, followed the trail for several hours, but were finally obliged to give it up, as they were led far up into the mountain fastnesses. Stones and huge rocks were rolled down the hill on their paths, and they were obliged to dodge these missiles every now and then. Theo. Startzee saw a living thing, half human half beast. He stood still, the blood chilling in his veins, and not daring to move. He had his gun with him, but dared not shoot. He next started on a run, and, to use his own words, "flew down the hill," and did not stop until he got home, not taking time to see whether the beast was following him or not. A party of employes at the Robesonia Furnace shot at the beast, but missed it. It is reliably stated that the managers of the furnace offered $200 for the animal alive, and $100 for its dead body. For some weeks every person has given the mountain a wide berth. Several farmers also lost sheep and chickens. To-day the entire mystery was cleared up. A party of Womelsdorf hunters scoured the entire mountains. They found human foot-steps in the snow, which they traced to a rude hut, a deserted charcoal-burner's cabin. Here they found a young woman, probably twenty-five years of age, who had been living in this way for some time past. She was thinly dressed, her surroundings were uncouth, and she showed a disinclination to be disturbed. She has a wild and haggard look, and who she is no one knows. She will probably be removed to the poor-house. She threw stones down the mountain and yelled to scare the people away. She is of muscular build, and many think she has been following this kind of life for years, judging by her general appearance. She has shown the strength of an Amazon, and the people have decided to let her alone until the authorities take her in charge.

The Soudan.

CAIRO, December 29.—A messenger has arrived at Dongola who left Khartoum two weeks ago. He states that many of the rebels have come into Khartoum and submitted to General Gordon. The General was in good health. The report of the massacre of a Benismer tribe in their effort to capture Kassala is confirmed. The rebels have burned Roweya, ninety miles north of Suakim. The situation in the Southern Soudan is considered to be critical.

Fatal Land Slide.

MADRID, December 29.—A fatal land slip occurred to-day in a mountain near Periana. It destroyed many houses which stood in its path and buried forty-eight persons, eighteen of whom were rescued alive. It is now reported 900 persons were buried beneath the ruins of a building of Albunuelas. Three churches at Antiquera are left in a tottering condition. The inhabitants are encamped in fields.

A Terrible Suicide.

BOSTON, December 29.—Yesterday afternoon the wife of Sampson Morse, of Charlestown, upon entering the room of their house, found that her husband had knelt down by the bath-tub, placed his head over the side of it, and almost cut it off with a razor, the head only hanging to the neck by a small piece of flesh which was not severed.

Training Thieves.

PITTSBURGH, PA., December 29.—Mrs. Amelie Gibson was arrested to-day on the charge of habitually enticing children from their homes and training them to become thieves.

Great Petroleum Springs.

LONDON, December 29.—The Times' dispatch from Odessa says it is estimated that the Baker Springs will yield 250,000,000 gallons of petroleum yearly.

XLVIII. CONGRESS.

Second Session.

WASHINGTON, December 23.—SENATE.—Mr. Jonas presented a memorial of the joint commercial associations of New Orleans, protesting against the ratification of the Spanish treaty. Mr. Vest submitted a concurrent resolution providing that Congressional speeches shall be printed as delivered, with the exception of verbal amendments, and when speeches are withheld for revision for more than one week the speech shall be printed as delivered. Referred. Mr. Hale called up the naval appropriation bill as reported yesterday by him from the Committee on Appropriation, and it passed. Mr. Morgan, from the Committee on Public Lands, reported favorably a substitute for the bill to forfeit lands granted the New Orleans, Baton Rouge and Vicksburg Railroad Company. Mr. Van Wyck moved to make a special order for January 9 next the bill heretofore reported from the Judiciary Committee declaring subject to State taxation lands granted "to aid in the construction of railroad and telegraph lines from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean," and to which lands the companies were to become entitled upon the payment of the cost of surveying. Agreed to. Executive session. Adjourned.

HOUSE.—Not in session.

WASHINGTON, December 24.—SENATE.—After disposing with the morning business, the Senate went into executive session. When the doors re-opened the Chair announced his signature to the concurrent resolution providing for the holiday recess. Adjourned until January 5.

HOUSE.—About fifty members were present when Speaker Carlyle called the House to order. Mr. Randall called up the adjournment resolution, and moved concurrence in the Senate amendment, which provides that a recess shall begin to-day and last until January 5, '85. Agreed to. The Speaker announced the following Committee on Assignments: Elections, Mr. Smith, of Iowa; Military Affairs, Conuelly; Public Lands, Campbell, of Ohio; Territories, Hill; Education and Labor, O'Ferrall; Revision of Laws, Garrison; Expenditures of Treasury Department, Wallace; Printing, Bratton; Pensions, Bounty and Back Pay, Wallace; Alcoholic Liquor Traffic, English. Adjourned until January 5.

Louisville Leaf Tobacco Market.

Dark and heavy styles have been in moderate supply and rather quiet in tone, but there is no quotable decline, except in lugs. Shippers should take notice that between December 23 and January 5 there will be no sales. It is suggested by warehouse-men that shippers by starting their tobacco to market about a week before coming to attend its sale may sometimes save themselves unnecessary delay and expense in waiting. Large supplies of blue and yellow Pryor seed are here, subject to order, in the hands of men prepared to guarantee every ounce. It is earnestly recommended that farmers steer clear of the seed of one sucker tobacco in preparing their plant-beds for 1884. A dealer just returned from North Carolina reports a sharp rise in the finer types peculiar to the "old North State." We quote full-weight packages sound tobacco of 1884 crop as follows:

ANGORA CATS.

Several of the Rare Animals to Be Found in San Francisco.

In the hair store under the Baldwin hotel there can be seen at almost any time two large snow-white cats, especially noticeable on account of their long silken hair. During the day they are usually found drowsing in two fancy work-baskets placed on the counter, and apparently undisturbed by the constant chatter about them. After dark they become very active and frisky. The general expression of their faces is much kindlier than that of the ordinary feline, and they are the object of much attention and petting from customers. Inquiry as to their breed elicited the information that they were imported from Angora, a city of Turkey in Asia, well known on account of the long silken hair of the famous Angora goat, which is one of its chief products. The cats are prized chiefly for ornamental purposes, although they evidently have a commercial value, as catskins are found enumerated among the exports. They are very scarce and expensive, and comparatively few have found their way to this country. The first two seen by the reporter weigh about fifteen pounds each, but their bushy growth of hair gives them the appearance of being much larger in size than ordinary cats. In the day-time their eyes are of a pure amber color covering the entire ball of the eye, the pupil being contracted to the minutest black speck in the center. At night the pupil dilates until there is only an occasional rim of yellow to be seen. The ears, nose and toes have a pinkish hue. The most conspicuous and attractive feature is the silken hair, which is about an inch or two long. It is especially thick and prominent about the tail and neck, the former exceptionally long and bushy, while the latter might be readily imagined to be encircled with a series of Elizabethan ruffles of finest lace overlapping each other. They were brought from abroad by a wealthy lady living on O'Farrell street, who appears to have a remarkable fancy and affection for these animals.

A visit to the residence was rewarded by the view of quite a family of them. There are four full grown and three kittens in the house, while at her country seat at Menlo Park she has five or six more. The animals show the same general characteristics, but vary in the color of the hair and eyes. Most of them are white, but others are spotted, and one is entirely black. One of them has the clearest of Saxon blue eyes, while another has one amber and one blue eye. This one is deaf, and it has been discovered that where this peculiar yellowish blue eye occurs, the Angora cats suffer from this affliction. The lady has had many kittens imported, but they are exceedingly difficult to raise, and require as much care and attention as is usually devoted to human babies. They demand not only certain kinds of food, but are very regular in their habits, and only eat at proper meal times. Their food consists mostly of mush and milk, very little meat and that entirely devoid of fat. They eat grass and are particularly fond of catnip and most kinds of vegetables, showing a strong preference for them instead of meat. They are exceedingly gentle in their dispositions, and exhibit a devotion and faithfulness only equaled by that of a dog. Nothing but aggravating and continued annoyance discloses any vicious temperament. The only violent temper that has come under observation was the case of a tom-cat, that had accompanied the lady on a long voyage to China and on her return home showed symptoms of jealousy because of the lady's attention to other old household pets.

In the drug store under the Grand Hotel another of these cats was found. The proprietor has repeatedly refused $150 for it. It is a great favorite and a good mouser. Although it has entire freedom, it never goes beyond the store and never prowls out-doors at night, after the manner of ordinary dissipated felines. A dealer in dogs and cats on Kearney street imported four kittens a few years ago, but they all died before disposed of, probably from the lack of proper attention. They were valued at fifty dollars each.

In order to get the opinion of some one who might be considered expert in judging the value of such animals a visit was made to Woodward's Gardens. F. A. Roop and F. Gruber, in charge of the menagerie and natural history departments, upon being asked if they knew of any Angora cats in this country, stated that none had ever been brought to this coast. They were much surprised when informed by the reporter where they could be found. Beyond some general information, which they kindly furnished, they knew nothing from personal observation. The cats are also found in South Siberia, and bear the same characteristics as those from the Levant. They are of a very delicate constitution, and are not prolific.—San Francisco Chronicle.

MONKEYS.

The Demand For Individuals of the Genus Simia For Pets—Their Value.

"Monkeys are in greater demand as pets than most people would suppose possible," said Mr. Alfred Wilkins of 1235 Broadway. "Ladies favor them greatly, chiefly on account of their amusing antics and gestures. Those two in the window keep a crowd in front of the store all day. Look at them now." A monkey, who was eating nothing, put out his hand in a friendly manner to his cage companion, who was holding a nut in his palm. The animal so approached responded to the overture in the readiest manner, but first, as a precautionary measure, transferred the nut to his mouth. This was not what the monkey who made the advance wanted, and he sulkily withdrew his extended hand, while his selfish companion looked knowingly at the crowd outside and resumed his meal.

"There are about four kinds of monkeys that are salable as pets," continued the dealer, "and all are small. The ring-tail is so called, not because of the rings around its tail, but because it swings to the branches of trees, and helps itself to climb with that appendage. All other monkeys climb with their hands only. The pig-tail monkey is about the same size as the ring-tail, and it is easy to see how he gets his name. His tail is stubby and short, like that of a pig. He is not considered a handsome monkey, but he is very popular. The Java monkey is somewhat like the ring-tail. He has a long tail, too, but it seems to be more for ornament than use. The ring-tail comes from Africa, the pig-tail from the Isthmus of Panama, and the Java, of course, from the island whose name he bears. All of these monkeys are worth from $20 to $30 each, according to condition and size, the smallest ranking first. There is a larger demand for them than any other kind. The little Marmazette, a native of Brazil, is the most diminutive of known monkeys. In fact, he is too small to be very healthy, and in our harsh climate he easily falls into consumption and dies. A fair-sized one is smaller than a newly-born kitten, only a few inches in length, excluding the little tail, which is the longest part of him. They have little wizened faces, and hardly look like monkeys at all. Ladies invariably fancy them at first, but a closer examination shows how delicate they are, as they lie huddled up together and shiver at every draught. They are by no means as high-priced as the other popular kinds of monkeys, and can be readily purchased for $10 each. Placed in company with a larger money they seem to thrive better. The bigger one takes great care of the smaller one, shielding him, as far as practicable, from the cold, and ceaselessly exerting himself to keep him clean. Sometimes, indeed, he kills him with kindness.

"There are a great many people who have a chronic prejudice against monkeys. It is hard to say why, for monkeys are amusing, affectionate and very intelligent.—N. Y. Sun.

A GOOD DINNER FOR ALL.

The Universal Spirit of Good-Will That Prevails on Christmas Day.

It would have been a wild prediction of the optimist three centuries ago that the time would ever come when on one day in the year everybody would have a good dinner. And yet it is almost realized. The gospel of humanity has almost reached that point. It is perhaps a wasteful and excessive mode of showing our humanity, but there is this good about it, that the feasibility of accomplishing it on one day will suggest the possibility of making at least decent dinners more common to people generally, and that when a man has once tasted the pleasure of a prodigal meal, he may be induced to some personal exertion of industry and thrift to procure himself the pleasure again. We know by statistics that there is food enough to satisfy everbody if properly distributed, and the lesson that it can be distributed one day is a most important one. The danger, of course, is that it is in human nature to depend upon charity when once charity is accepted, and so to lose the one priceless thing to any man, which is independence. But the beauty of Christmas is in its recognition of common humanity and common dependence on something beyond humanity, and the charity of it is not a condescension that can puff anybody up or hurt any man's pride, but a diffused good feeling, and a drawing together in a common fete of all sorts and conditions of men. Here in the United States it is literally of all sorts and colors, a commingling of people under one privilege absolutely unparalleled. And to enjoy the Christmas of humanity we are not required to eat the same sort of dinner, any more than we are required to have the same sort of creed. The plantation negro with 'possum fat and 'coon (brown cracklin', wid graby—go 'way dar, chile!) is just as much alive to the odor of the anniversary as the English denizen with his traditionary roast beef and plum-pudding. We have learned by the hard discipline of a new country that we can make a very thankful meal for the day out of wild turkey and canvas-back ducks, flanked by a green goose, with appropriate accompaniments. People can get used to anything if they only have the right spirit. Indeed, it has been said that it is not so much what we eat on Christmas Day as what we give away that raises our spirits; but this is to be understood within limits, for it cannot be denied that there is such a thing as universal hunger on Christmas Day that will not be allayed any more in the case of a rich man than of a poor man by the remembrance of a good deed warmed over. But the best sauce to a good dinner is the thought that nobody else within reach is hungry. And better even than the dinner of the day is the universal spirit of good-will that broadens year by year, and deepens, we are sure.—Charles Dudley Warner, in Harper's Magazine.

NATURE'S ZOO.

The Wonderland of the World, and the Grandest Out-Door Museum of Natural Curiosities.

The country of the Upper Nile was par excellence, the wonderland of the Roman world, as it is still the grandest out-door museum of natural curiosities. Zoologically there is no more densely populated country. All the wild beasts and birds, made homeless by the devastation of Northern Africa, seem to have taken refuge in the Nubian highlands. In the terrace-land of the Nubian and Abyssinian Alps there roam herds of elephants, buffaloes, wild sheep, and fourteen different species of antelopes. Further below the hippopotamus and white rhinoceros haunt the river swamps. Professor Blanford enumerates 290 species of water birds.

With these harmless settlers less desirable guests have crowded in, the spotted hyena, the jackal, the black and yellow lion, four species of smaller cats, wild dogs, and above all, the cynocephalus, the wily and mischievous baboon. Three varieties of these Darwinian pets inhabit the rocks of Southern Nubia; the little babuin, the cynocephalus proper, and the celada or mantle baboon, a fierce and powerful fellow, whose shaggy mane protects his body like a cloak, and enables him to brave the climate of the upper highlands. Professors Kuppel, Hotten and Major W. C. Harris agree on the fact that a troop of these brutes, in ravaging a cornfield, will not only hold their ground against all comers, but on the slightest provocation take the offensive in a way not likely to be forgotten by the unarmed natives.

Dogs have no chance whatever against a full-grown baboon. The old males do not wait to be tackled, but charge them at once with an energy and skill of co-operation that would do credit to a troop of well-drilled soldiers. The hyrax, a queer pachyderm, allied to the European badger, cohabits the rocks with a hibernating marmot, and the coast jungles swarm with wild hogs that multiply undisturbed, for the Abyssinian natives share the pork prejudice of their Mohammedan neighbors.—Prof. Oswald.

FLORIDA DISEASES.

Those That are Prevalent in the Peninsula, Where They Rage, and How They are Sometimes Cured.

This is the next important point for consideration, and I think the verdict must be "healthy all over during the winter months and unhealthy in the summer except directly on the coast." The diseases to be guarded against in the summer are yellow fever, which, when it comes, often makes a clean sweep. It is not, strictly speaking, a disease peculiar to the country, but is usually brought here from Havana, or some West India port, and close quarantine is observed against it. There has only been one case of this in Florida during the past summer so far as I know, that of a United States naval officer at Key West. Then we have "dengue" or "broken bone fever:" this is malarial in its origin and inflicts upon the sufferer an experience similar to a severe beating on all parts of the body with a heavy stick. It is very prevalent, but seldom fatal, usually yielding readily to proper treatment.

Remittent bilious fever, chills and fever, congestive fevers and all kinds of liver complaints are common and often cause great mortality. These are aggravated by the coarse manner of living adopted by the majority of the people, which I will again refer to under another heading. Then the lack in so many places of good water is a drawback to health. Some persons build tanks or sink cisterns to catch the rain water for drinking purposes as the limestone of the country which impregnates so much of the well-water is of a soft, rotten species, far different from the hard stone of the North, and it becomes in many cases a producing cause of illness. Dysentery or "flux" is prevalent at seasons, and carries off a good number of settlers.

Among minor diseases we have neuralgia, an occasional case of rheumatism, and sore eyes, the latter caused by the glare of the sun upon the sand. Some people as a preventive have to wear green or blue glass spectacles the greater part of the summer.

Most of the above maladies are chiefly to be dreaded during the hot weather, say from the early part of June until the beginning of November, then the sun draws the malaria and poisonous vapors from the swamps and ponds of the interior and every breeze is laden with them.

Calomel and quinine become the chief medicines of the people, and hundreds are salivated by injudicious dosing with the former. Some may almost be said to feed on calomel when attacked by sickness of any kind. Those living on the coast are, owing to the excess of salt air, comparatively free from some of the ills which attack dwellers in the interior, but now and again they catch malaria even there, though it is not so severe on the system and is more readily overcome.

As to ordinary colds, which are the cause of some dangerous diseases in the North, we have them, but they are very light. As a rule you can go out in rain, get your clothing wet through several times during the day, allow it to dry on you in the sun and seldom experience any harm from the operation, so far as catching cold goes. You can even sleep in the open air without much danger and perhaps feel all the better for it.

Among diseases that afflict residents in the North the following are comparatively unknown in Florida. Any cases that may exist have not, it is safe to say, been contracted in this climate: Consumption and all lung diseases, asthma, heavy colds, diphtheria, severe sore throat, scarlet fever and catarrh. For the last named the climate will nearly always work a cure without the aid of any medicine whatever.—Cor. Detroit Post.

MINERAL WATERS.

How and in What Quantities They Were Used in the Eighteenth Century.

Up to the beginning of the eighteenth century it was the rule at Karlsbad to subject the patient to a course of violent purgatives. Then the patient drank mineral waters for seven days, bathing for the next seven without drinking the water. The water-drinking was a most serious matter. Dr. Hoffmann, writing in 1705, says that no more than fifteen to eighteen glasses should be drunk the first day, but that later on the number should be increased to thirty, and, in certain cases, to forty glasses. Dr. Tilling, writing in 1756, records that he himself drank from fifty to sixty glasses in the course of two hours. Dr. Sangrado never prescribed warm water on a more extensive scale, and the puzzle is how the patients managed to swallow and retain these large quantities of warm mineral waters. I have read that the natives of the Queen Charlotte Islands try to cure themselves of ailments by drinking a bucket or two of sea water; but then they never expect to retain so much water long in their stomachs, whereas the patients at Karlsbad did not drink large doses of water to make themselves sick. The explanation is that they drank so many glasses of water in a warm room, and that much of it passed off in perspiration, just as in the case of water drunk in a Turkish bath. Indeed, the patients were expressly ordered to remain quiet so as to perspire the more freely. Dr. David Becher, one of the leading physicians of his day, set himself in 1777 to oppose the old custom, insisting that the preferable method of taking the waters was at the springs. He was laughed at and denounced as a reckless innovator by the admirers of the ancient ways, yet his views and advice prevailed and were followed in the end. It may be noted in passing that not only human beings were enjoined to use the waters for their health's sake, but that the virtues of these waters were supposed to be as advantageous to the lower animals: the "Muhlbrunn," which is now a favorite one with water-drinkers, was long used exclusively as a bath for sick horses, dogs and cattle. While this practice has long been abandoned here, it has been revived in the far West of North America. Major Shepherd states in his Prairie 'Experiences' that "some men put their sheep through the natural hot mineral waters which abound in the West. Each farmer will swear by his own particular spring. It cures the scab in sheep, removes corns and rheumatism in men, and is efficacious universally."—Nineteenth Century.

—A man entered a store the other day and began to warble "Sweet Violets." "What the dickens are you making that racket here for," cried the proprietor, picking up a club and advancing threateningly toward the singer. "Why, I see in your window some goods labelled 'Going for a Song,' and 'Sweet Violets' is the only song I know." He was permitted to depart uninjured.—Norristown Herald.

THE Crittenden Press says already the indications point to a big tobacco crop next year.

DACOTA wants to be admitted into the Union, and that she is entitled to a place is clearly demonstrated by the determined and destructive spirit of her mobs. She should be admitted at once.

AN Indiana physician has discovered that were bicycle riding universally practiced, that it would depopulate the globe. It is a fine thing to have scientific men able to foretel such terrible results in time to save the human family from becoming extinct.

THERE were two dark looking cars passing here last week filled with about 100 South Carolina darkies bound for Little Rock, Arkansas. Quite a roundabout way to go via Cincinnati. They were of all ages, many of them being the cutest looking little coons we ever saw. We hope they got to their Southern home before the cold weather struck them. —Paris Kentuckian.

NEW YORK and Indiana having the President and Vice-President for the next four years, they ought to be willing for the Cabinet pudding to be dished out among their sister States. But Mr. Cleveland appears to be equal to the emergency, though, and will, no doubt, organize a Cabinet acceptable to both him and the Democratic party, and he will have no difficulty in finding good men for the various positions.

THE editor of the Louisville C.-J. will finally learn that Kentucky does not belong to him socially and politically. The idea of his wanting the citizens of that town to snub Hon. S. J. Randall, or anyother distinguished citizen and officer of this government, shows how selfish and pigheaded those posing as great men are capable of being. Mr. Watterson should not be allowed to attempt to curb Kentucky's hospitality toward strangers.

THE largest locomotive in the world is now in use on the Southern Pacific Railroad, on the Tebachipa grade. It is called "El Gubernator," has fourteen wheels, weighs in running order 106 tons, and is supposed to have power enough to haul any train that may come along over the heavy grades. It was built at Sacramento, has many improvements over other engines, and is expected to do better service than any of that class heretofore constructed.

An officer of the New York Sanitary Bureau made a circuit among the candy factories of that city, with the result of condemning large quantities of fancy-colored sweets, to be dumpted into the river. Of sixty factories visited, he found that all the colored candies in nineteen were poisonous. Among the delectable materials used by these precious scoundrels who were willing to turn a few pennies by ruining the health of battalions of children, were chrome green, chrome yellow, Prussian blue, rose aniline containing arsenic, and bisulphate of mercury.

THE New Orleans Picayune, speaking of the American policy and the Nicaraguan treaty, says: "The country is ripe for an entirely new departure, one worthy of our great nation, and one that will stamp itself upon the whole history of North America. We must adopt the policy of acquisition and territorial aggrandizement to the southward. It need not be accomplished by armed invasion or inaugurated in blood. The Nicaraguan treaty is the opening wedge. Let us drive that home, and by investing $100,000,000 in a ship canal there secure the country. American enterprise will soon annex the whole of Central America from that the base line."

From Salt Lake City to San Francisco.

To the Editors of the Recorder:

It was a beautiful afternoon, late in the month of August, when we bade adieu to the Mormon metropolis and took a last, lingering look at the stately Wasatch mountains in the east, whose caps of snow were tinged a lovely crimson by the descending sun.

A short ride of 20 miles out from the city, brought us to the Great Salt Lake, a fishless, inland sea whose origin and present condition continue to baffle scientific investigation. The waters of this lake contain salt, calcium, magnesium, potassium and other ingredients in smaller quantities. For several miles distant from the lake the earth's surface is covered with the crystallized salt sof these substaces, forming white incrustations and rendering the soil wholy unfit for cultivation; thus driving the Mormon peasants farther back in the valley toward the foot-hills of the Wasatch.

We were soon in Ogden, another Mormon town, situated on the northeastern shores of the Great Lake. Here is the western terminus of the Denver and Rio Grande R. R., and upon our arrival, we find in waiting for us, the magnificent train of the Central Pacific road. After some time spent in firmly locating ourself for the journey of 883 miles across the sandy plains of Nevada, the mountains and valleys of California, to San Fancisco, the train moved slowly out toward the broad expanse of desert waste that lay before us. As the train increased its speed and glided on in graceful curves along the northern shores of the lake, the horizontal rays of the setting sun shone across a sea of glass, and painted the landscape in lovlier hue than the artist's pencil or brush ever painted on canvas.

A few moments more and the sun had disappeared from view, leaving a scene such as that described by the poet in the following lines:

> "The sultry summer day is done,
> The western hills have hid the sun;
> But mountain peak and village spire
> Retain reflection of his fire."

Night soon spread her sable mantle over the scene, and, feeling the need of rest, we prepared for a night of quiet sleep. But, to the contrary, "'twas a troubled, dreamy sleep," with frequent intervals of wakefulness occasioned by the inharmonious sounds made by two "family organs" in another portion of the car. A word of thanks to Mrs. Winslow for having invented Soothing Syrup, but a volume of censure for the mother who would go on a journey of a thousand miles without a bottle of the same in her valise!

During the night, between "scenes," we gazed out upon the weird landscape, and more especially sandscapes, dimly lit up by the waning moon.

A few more hours and the darkness has fled before the morning light and we have struck the Great American Desert, and on every hand our eyes fall upon a scene of widespread, utter desolation. Sand, soda, salt, sulphur, sage-brush, surplus sunshine and suffocation, describe the scene and circumstances by which you are here surrounded. The hot steam issuing from fissures in the earth; the sulphurous odor occasioned thereby, the almost unendurable heat reflected from the parched sands, the entire absence of water to moisten the thirsty earth or cool the oppressive atmosphere—all combine to impress one with the idea that one corner of Hell has become dislodged and cropped out on the earth's surface.

Salt and alkalis are so promiscuously and profusely distributed over this region, that at first sight they present the appearance of a light fall of snow.

This wilderness of sand, in its natural state, exhibits a monotonous scene; not even broken by the appearance of a tree, or antiquated dyspeptic grasshopper. Benjamin F. Taylor says: "If the Devil must have something in the way of estate, give him this bleached batch of desert dough for his own consumption."

It should not be forgotten, however, in this description, that railroads, the forerunners of civilization, have caused small towns to spring up here and there, and also that perseverence and irrigation have, in a few places, made the desert to blossom as the rose. These artificial oases are, like Angel's visits, few and far between.

Humboldt is the most inviting spot in the desert, and always greeted with a welcoming smile and words of thankfulness from the weary, dusty traveler as he alights from the train and realizes that he himself is not the only piece of verdency in all this barren, sandy sea.

Our journey across the desert was made less monotonous than it might otherwise have been, by having in our coach a number of young persons from Elks and other places in eastern Nevada, going to school at Reno the extreme western part of the State. The scene of their parting from friends and relatives, if one were to judge from the tears shed, was a rather affecting sight, but to one in a situation to observe the subsequent actions of the young people it had little or no significance, for scarcely had we left behind the parents and friends, pitying the dear little ones because their departure from home made them so unhappy, than these little dears made the car ring with their gladsome glee and merry songs. 'Tis only too true that > "The tear down childhood's cheek that flows,

> Is like the dewdrop on the rose; [by
> When next the summer breeze comes
> And waves the bush the flower is dry."

During the day also, at various stations along the way, a few Indians had congregated, whose sole occupation was apparently to do—absolutely nothing. They were as filthy as dirt and red blankets could make them, and indolent as owls that roost on the equator during the dog days. At one point we saw a few of them more energetic than the others, huddled together playing cards. We can honestly join the western people in saying "the only good Indian is a dead one."

The sun has once more run his daily course and the shades of another night are welcomed by all. Our young friends left us at Reno, and silence once more reigned supreme within. The Sierra Nevada mountains loom up in the distance, the loud puffing of the engines tells us that the ascent has begun.

The plateau we have been crossing all day is at an average elevation of 4500 feet. Leaving this at dark we climb up the eastern slope of the Sierra Nevadas, through a continuous snow shed, more than 40 miles in length, to Summit Point, by midnight. These snow sheds resemble covered wooden bridges, minus the floor, and are necessary, on the eastern slope of this range, to insure the passage of trains during the winter season.

At midnight, the beginning of a new day, we start with reckless speed on the down grade for San Francisco and the Pacific ocean—7017 feet down, 192 miles out.

Surrounded at midnight by mountains of snow, and assailed by the cold winds of winter, we are ushered by morn into valleys teeming with flowers and fruits of every description. We are in the valley of the Sacramento. What a rest to our weary eyes! What a relief to our restless, anxious minds from the dull dreary scenes of yesterday!

Spread out before us in the valley are vast fields where, but recently stood thousands of acres of golden grain—

> "That stoop again when whirlwin's rave
> And spring again in eddying wave,
> As each wild gust sweeps by."

On the hillsides are great vineyards with their burdens of fruit growing purple in the amorous kisses of the autumn sun: orchards of peas, apple, plum and peach trees are bending to the earth with their loads of luscious fruits, as if bowing through courtesy to the admiring traveler who has come thousands of miles to see them; neat New England-like farm houses are passed in rapid succession; clear, clear, sparkling streams of water, at whose brinks the farm animals quench their thirst, smile upon us as we hurry on: all these, together with the cloudless sky, and the fresh, pure air that braces us up, from the former day's stupor, remind us of the fact that we are in California.

Sacramento, with its broad, clean streets, its magnificent state building, 320 feet front, its attractive homes and cheerful surroundings, is passed.

At Benicia, 33 miles from San Francisco, the train is run aboard a vessel and ferried across the river, or rather bay; for it is a point where the waters of the Sacramento mingle with those of the San Francisco bay. Arriving on the opposite shore, a short run brings us to Oakland pier, just across the bay from San Francisco.

We alight from the train and go aboard one of the ferry boats. You are now besieged by hotel runners and hackmen as never before; if a school of sea lions were howling in your ears, it would be no more annoying.

A few minutes more and we discern through the fog, the church spires and hills of the Golden City. We are all here—a Mongolian and his restless little wife from the celestial land, both of whom had occupied the same sleeper with us (but a different berth) on our journey across; the M. D. from Connecticut; a ministerial gentleman from Illinois; a female drummer from New York; two gentlemen of fashion from France; a young man from the Sandwich Islands returning home, and others. Yes, we are at last in San Francisco, the city of many tongues, one spirit and a hundred hills. J. C. CLORE.

IT seems that the reaction which follows "flush" times is upon this part of the country to a certain extent, and will be severe on a large portion of our population. We refer to that class who have been stimulated to incur a heavy indebtedness as well as to those who anticipated realizing considerable more than a living from their crops, but are now fully aware that a shortage in the proceeds is inevitable. The latter class is bound to be sorely pressed by the decline in the markets, and especially will it be the experience of those who, by the high prices brought by tobacco the past few years, have been induced to turn their attention nearly exclusively to its cultivation. Last year's sad experience was confined to the local dealers, but this year the depression extends to the firesides of the producers. The unnatural prices tobacco has been commanding was, for a brief period, beneficial, but, supposing that they would continue to prevail, many persons have overreached themselves, and allowed prosperity to place them in an attitude to be easily financially paralyzed upon the slightest decline in prices of products. It is not safe to incur obligations expecting to meet them with the proceeds of a single crop a year hence, and it is especially hazardous when each year threatens an over praduction of that particular article.

THE remains of Joel T. Hart, the Kentucky sculptor who died in Florence, have, no doubt, arrived in this country. He died in 1877, and last winter the legislature made an appropriation for the transportation of the body and its reinterment in the State Cemetery at Frankfort, and Charles E. Kincaid, Governor Knott's private Secretary was appointed commissioner to visit Florence for the remains. He arrived there last September, but, on account of the cholera, was not allowed to have the body exhumed before November, when it was taken up, placed in a metallic case and hermetically sealed. Mr. Hart was born a poor boy in Clark county, where he labored as a farm hand, finally learning the stonemason's trade, and built stone fences and chimneys. He finally became a tombstone sculpture in Lexington, which soon developed his skill as a sculptor. Among his works of art are the statues of Henry Clay that are at New Orleans, Richmond and Louisville, the busts of Millard Fillmore, John J. Crittenden, Alexander Campbell and Andrew Jackson. His master piece is a life-sized statue of a female figure called "Woman Triumphant," on which he spent eighteen years. Mr. Hart was sixty-seven years old, having lived thirty-five years in Florence.

THE Crittenden county Superintendent of schools, says that in that county "there are actually schools being taught in houses which are not suitable to be used as shelter for lower animals." We are glad to observe that that class of school-houses in Boone have disappeared very rapidly in the past few years, and it will not be long before the county will have a good out-fit of these necessary buildings. The interest in education is increasing in this county, there being almost a complete revolution in the last decade, with very flattering prospects for quite as great an improvement during the next ten years.

THERE is a great stir among General Grant's friends over the execution taken out against him by William H. Vanderbilt for $160,000, being principal and interest of $150,000 loaned by Vanderbilt last May to help the General out of the Grant & Ward troubles. An effort is being made to induce Grant's wealthy friends to subscribe money enough to satisfy the claim. Vanderbilt says he will accept $100,000 as in full of the debt. Money seems to get General Grant into more trouble than anybody else. It outgenerals him at every turn.

ONE of the most cruel tortures of modern times was that inflicted on Elijah Marling, at Wheeling, W. Va., a few nights ago, by three masked burglars. After knocking him down with an axhandle and taking from his pockets $182 50 they burned his body with a red-hot poker in forty-three different places to make him confess where the balance of his, $50,000, was. He told them that it was in bank, but they wouldn't believe him. He was nearly dead when found.

WITH to day closes leap year, and looking in any direction we behold numerous individuals, who should have improved the opportunity, but, alas, they are doomed to suffer the pangs and pains of single cussedness for the next four years. Don't you know that procrastination is a great thief?

Fashionable young men are reviving the English collar with the points in front pressed back flatly; but the turned-down collars worn neglige, during the summer, are entirely abandoned at this season.

EDUCATIONAL.

[Communications for this column must be addressed to Prof. T. H. Stephenson, Burlington, Kentucky.]

Twelve Kentucky students attend the College of New Jersey.

In the 23 eastern counties there was expended, last year, from the State School Fund, $97,122 61, an average of $3,787 94 to the county.

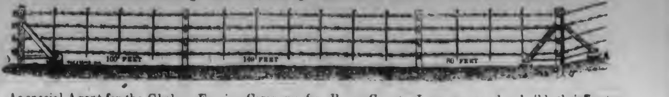
The Superintendent of Schools in Crittenden county, receives a higher salary than any of the other county officers.

The Louisville Commercial thinks that County Superintendents should make, and publish in the local papers, reports of their work, which is a good idea.

A correspondent of the Greenville Echo, who has been a few miles beyond the Cincinnati Southern, in one of the eastern counties, writes that he found a common school in which all the children "studied aloud." Such was the general custom in the State at an early day, it being thought that the boy who made the most noise in conning his reading or spelling lesson was the best student. This same school was kept in a log house with wide holes in the walls to admit the light, while a huge fire in an open fire-place kept the pupils from freezing to death.

Forty years ago the Rev. Benjamin Smith, by authority of the State, made a report on the condition of education in Kentucky, which shows that before the days of common schools little was done in the eastern counties by private means to teach the youth. It is useless to say that any people that really desire to have their youth taught to read and to write cannot find means to have them taught. There were never any people with less of this world's goods than the colony on Eddy Creek in Livingston county, in 1802, described in the autobiography of Mrs. Susiana Johnson. Yet these people soon found a classical scholar who was not too proud to teach a dozen children in a deserted corncrib, and they paid him a living salary, some of his pupils becoming prominent in after life through his influence. Mr. Smith's report shows that in the four counties of Floyd, Clay, Knox and Pike, with 6,867 children between five and fifteen years of age, only 71 had been in any school during the year. There had been no school in either Floyd or Clay. Investigation would probably show that much of the school fund sent to Eastern Kentucky is wasted.

THE following quaint and curious endorsement was found on the back of a Cleveland and Hendricks ticket voted at Barnville, South Carolena:



"Grover Cleveland, stand up. A jury of your countrymen have found you guilty of designing and conspiring with diver Democrats to become President of the U. S. to the great barm and personal injury of over 100,000 local office-holders of the Republic; and more, you have caused anger, hatred, ill-will, curses and maledictions to spring up among the hitherto united Republican family in this country. Your advocates have defended you with zeal and ability. Indeed such zeal and ability have never before been known in the history of Presidential campaigns. The jury, however, has recommended you to mercy, and I make your sentence as lenient as the law allows. It is: That you, Grover Cleveland, be confined at hard labor within the walls of the White House in the City of Washington, D. C., for the period of four long years, from the fourth of March next ensuing. And may the Lord have mercy on your soul. Mr. Sheriff, bring up Tom Hendricks."

Florence Nightingale.

Florence Nightingale was born at Florence, Italy, in the month of May, 1820. Her father was William E. Shore, a banker, who inherited the estates of of Peter Nightingale, and, as the will provided, changed his name to that of the person whose property fell to him. Florence was the younger daughter. She enjoyed all the advantages, which were numerous, of persons in affluent circumstances, and early in life attained remarkable proficiency in several branches of education. Very soon her philanthropic instincts led her to study, systematically, the best ways and means to ameliorate the condition of the race, physically and morally. In the search for information, she took up her abode in 1851 in the institution of Protestant Sisters of Mercy, established at Kaiserwerth on the Rhine. Soon her activity showed itself, and we find her aiding personally and pecuniarily the Governesses, Sanatorium, which was restored and given a thorough reorganization. This work had scarcely been accomplished when Miss Nightingale had her attention directed to the inefficiency and mismanagement of the British military hospitals in the Crimea. One of the plans suggested for the reform was the formation of a select band of lady superintendents and of nurses to direct and minister in the hospital wards. Miss Nightingale, at the request of the late Lord Herbert, then Secretary of War, undertook the organization and conduct of that body, and soon, where confusion had reigned, there was order, and, by affording care and consolation, she alleviated the sufferings of all, saved the lives of many, and received the benedictions of a nation. A testimonial fund of £50,000, subscribed by the public in recognition of her noble services, was, at her special request, devoted to the formation and maintenance of an institution for the training and employment of nurses. Miss Nightingale has greatly assisted the cause by her writings. Her name is a household word in Great Britian, and, indeed, all over the Christian world it is the synonym of earnest, successful work in behalf of the sick and suffering.

A happy New Year to you.

Some ice has been gathered.

The river was full of ice last week.

A happy and prosperous New Year to all.

The water courses all got full last Sunday.

The Rising Sun Local calls it "Skinny Waboo."

Christmas in Burlington passed off very quietly.

No doubt the old leaf is full, so turn a new one now.

The honey bees were on the wing the first of the week.

The jail has been without an occupant for some time.

Burlington was represented at the Union ball last Friday night.

Johnnie Bachelor has about recovered from his dislocated shoulder.

This is the last day of Leap Year. Young lady, has it been a success?

Westhay & Hall shipped five dozen dressed turkeys one day last week.

The fine sleighing came to an abrupt close, and some of those indulging were mud bound.

John C. Mitchell having bought Mrs. Annie E. Crisler's farm will move there in a short time.

Next Monday the Court of Claims meets for the final adjustment of the County's affair.

The County Clerk has issued 82 marriage licenses this year, being an average of one each week.

While in town next Monday, don't forget to come in and subscribe for the RECORDER. Now, don't.

The blacksmiths had a rush of work, the freezeup catching all the horses unprepared for such weather.

The cool weather and the holidays incited a boom in matrimony, and several weddings have resulted.

The open winter we were having came to a halt in time to introduce the holidays clad in a mantle of white.

The severe cold weather caused a suspension of the work on the government building at the rear of the jail.

Only ten days now till the assessor will commence his annual inventory of the taxable property in this county.

F. P. Walton received some tobacco last week. Frank seems to be touching the weed very lightly this season.

Quite a gay party of youngsters assembled at H. P. Stephen's Monday evening, where mirth reigned supreme.

Riddell & Stephens, attorneys, are now comfortably ensconced in their new office over the old Sherrill store-room.

The rise in the temperature was very sudden, and camo very near making Vennor's prophecy work up to the very notch.

Read Mont Baisly's advertisement in this issue, and then make it a point to give him a call when wanting anything in his line.

We want to add many new names to our subscription list during 1885, and ask our friends to speak a good word for our paper whenever they can.

Reuben Jarrell has sold his farm on Woolper Creek to Albert Acra and wife. We understand that Mr. Jarrell contemplates moving to Bellevue.

Judge Riddell is writing a book on churning, for which Dr. Grant will begin canvassing early in the spring. The book will be beautifully illustrated.

Next Saturday night Joe Reed repeats his entertainment at this place, with an entire change of programme, the selections being principally humorous.

The schools adjourned on the 24th to give the scholars an opportunity to enjoy the holidays, and judging from appearances, they made good use of the time.

It may be that those who worked so faithfully last week putting up ice will the only persons who will have ice with which to temper their drinking water next summer.

Don't forget that if your claims for sheep killed by dogs are not properly proven and filed before the 10th of January, you can get nothing allowed for sheep thus destroyed.

W. M. Conner says that 18,000 lambs were sold out of the Boone county crop this year, at an average of $3 25 per head, which will exceed the price to be realized for the crop of 1885.

Z. T. Bondurant has traded his mill on Gunpowder for a 230 acre farm in Asanms county, Ohio. The new owner of the mill expects to put it in good order, and do a big business.

The fox hunters had some fine sport. On Saturday Johnnie Huey liberated one he had caught some days before, and the last he heard of the hounds in pursuit they were about Union.

It is now generally believed that Mr. Henry Smith, of Plattsburg, suicided by drowning in the Ohio river, near the mouth of Woolper creek, as all the circumstances point that way.

Viola Lodge, No. 278 I. O. O. F., at their meeting Saturday night, elected the following officers: Dr. J. M. Grant, N. G.; O. F. Conner, V. G., Thos. Cowen, Treas., and F. P. Walton, Secty.

The injury to Simeon Terrill's eye was not only painful but very serious, it being doubtful if the vision can be restored. In his misfortune, Mr. Terrill has the sympathy of many friends.

Rev. W. H. Felix, who has presided over one church in Covington for 15 years, has surrendered his pastorship to take charge of a church in Georgetown, this State.

The colored population are extracting considerable amusement from the holidays. They dance all night and sleep all day. They are the happiest people in the land.

The Woolper Bridge Case is hanging fire in the Superior Court, but while it is lying there the county is not building the bridge, consequently the appellees are resting quietly.

The entertainment given for the benefit of the Bullittsville Christian church was largely attended and pronounced a perfect success. By request Joe Reed recited two pieces.

Our Rising Sun contemporaries are mistaken about Mrs. Albert Corbin, of Bellevue, being a devisee of Reuben B. Springer, the deceased Cincinnati millionaire. It was another Mrs. Corbin of this county.

Somebody sent the Milton Free Press a Christmas turkey, and it adjourned one week that the editor could turn his attention to the turkey. Golly, won't brother Sarlls be "kinder" fat for the next three months?

We are glad to hear that Miss Katie Platt is making such rapid progress in her studies at Hanover college. Katie has the industry and ability to take the leadin almost any class to which she may be assigned.

David Uts was awarded the set of harness and O. P. Conner, the saddle and bridle by our harness-maker, A. M. Acra, for being the first and second largest purchasers, respectively, of his goods since July 1, 1884.

NOTICE—The public is hereby notified that I will commence grinding corn at my mill on the Bellevue pike on the second Friday in January, and will grind everyother Friday thereafter.
MERRIT LEMON.

A few years since we met John S. Matson in Florence. He has purchased largely of this year's crop of tobacco and is buying all he can get, his purchases being principally in Campbell county, and at figures averaging under $3.

The Young folks enjoyed a candy jerking at F. Riddell's Saturday night. Dr. Furnish, Atty. Tolin and Dr Bange manipulated the candy very scientifically, and of course the ladies sat quietly by and enjoyed the efforts of these gentlemen.

A portion of the money stolen from Conner & Utz's safe in Union, was money donated by the citizens of the town and vicinity to buy a cow for a Mr. Thompson, a poor and needy resident of that place, and whose cow had recently died.

At the annual election held last Saturday, Burlington Lodge No. 294 F. & A. M., elected the following officers for the ensuing year: W. L. Riddell, Master; W. T. German S. W.; Edgar Cropper, J. W.; Dudley Rouse, Treas.; W. E. Piper, Secty.; T. W. Finch, Tyler.

Dr. E. W. Duncan read, before the literary society last Friday evening, a lengthy and well prepared essay on the Germ Theory of Disease. Ed is a good student, and we are glad to learn that he is making rapid progress in his preparation for his chosen profession.

The following college students are home spending the holidays: David Blythe, Hanover, Ind.; Lee Gaines and Courtney Walton and brother, Georgetown; Robert Grant and E. W. Duncan, Ohio Medical College and Charlie Winston, Hughes' High school, Cincinnati.

The literary society was not favored with an overwhelming audience last Friday evening, notwithstanding it was announced that its guns of the largest caliber would be run out for the conflict, the bone of contension being compulsory education. Compulsion won the battle.

Ben Robberts, who, several years since escaped from jail at this place, and who was subsequently captured by Black Clarkson and returned to jail, and afterwards sent to the pen, for horsestealing, was tried for horsestealing at the last term of Grant Circuit Court, and sent over the road for eight years.

Last Monday, Konrad Moll, of Kenton county, met his divorced wife in Burlington, and in consideration of his paying her $100, she surrendered to him the care and custody of their daughter, who returned home with her father, an honest, industrious and prosperous German who will do a good part by her.

"Have you got any more tender steak like that I bought the other day?" asked a man of one of our butchers. "Oh, yes, plenty. You found it to be good meat, eh?" Yes, suits my purpose. I am very much annoyed by dogs at my house. I have cheked one to death and have my eye on another one. Let me have a half pound, please."

The Christmas tree given for the benefit of the colored school Christmas eve was a very creditable affair, and the scholars, in their recitations and declamations, displayed careful training. Several white persons were present and enjoyed the evening. The crowd was very orderly, and everything passed off in good style.

The entertainment given in the Baptist church in Florence last week is pronounced a great oredit to those who took part. The exercises were near perfection, and especially was the singing by Mr. Warren Meeks and Miss Mattie Riggs, and the acting and singing by the little son and daughter of Mr. Will Meeks could not have been excelled.

The entertainment given here on the 18th, 19th and 20th inst., was well attended considering the severe weather. Joe Reed fully sustained his reputation as an actor, while Dr. O. F. Bange made a decided hit in the several characters he took, and the audience was highly entertained each evening. Mr. Reed will give an entertainment at Union at an early date.

A "pink dinner" is one of the novelties of recent date. The table is decorated with pink roses, and the corsage bouquets are of the same color. The china is pink and the menue printed on pink paper. The ladies wear pink, which, by the way, is now the fashionable color for ladies' evening dress, and the gentlemen wear pink neckties and pink bows in their button-holes. Lamps with pink shades are placed around the central floral piece.

J. F. Blythe, equipped with a shot-gun and pistol, went hunting one day last week, intending to shoot the rabbits found setting, with the pistol, and to use the gun when they ran. Finding one in its nest, he leveled the pistol, a self-cocking weapon, when the rabbit discovered him and "lit." Jerry hastily leveled the gun and fired at it, still having the pistol in his hand. Both weapons were discharged, the pistol ball taking effect in the fleshy part of the left hand, making an ugly wound, but, fortunately, missing the bones and leaders.

Taking a jug of hot water to bed with you these cold nights may be a good way to keep warm, but always be careful and fix the cork in so it may not come out easy. Two young ladies of this city tried this plan for keeping warm night before last. One of them went to bed a little later than the other and in some manner she caused the cork to come out of the jug, and, as a result, the water refused to remain in the jug, and the two ladies were subjected to a bath, which was not at all comfortable. We should think a better and less dangerous scheme would be to heat a brick or two and wrap them in an old piece of carpet. No jug business in ours.—Madison Herald.

On the 24th inst., by Rev. J. A. Kirtley, at the home of the bride's parents near Plattsburg, Elijah Graut, son of Wm. H. Grant, and Miss Lena Smith, daughter of John Smith.

DIED.

On the 17th inst., at his residence on Willoughby, of apoplexy, Tilford Sullivan, in his 77th year.

The remains were placed in the Petersburg vault on the 21st, the funeral being in charge of J. W. Kirkpatrick, of this place.

On Saturday evening the 27th at 5:30 o'clock, at his residence in Burlington, Archibald Thompson, aged 91 years and 6 months.

Mr. Thompson was born in Albany, New York, and in his boyhood gathered huckleberries, with his playmates, on the ground where the State House in that city now stands. He was a cabinet-maker and in his younger days was a fine workman, and in many houses in this county are yet to be found work done by him. He spent the early part of his life in the East and South, and witnessed the launching of the first steamboat that plied the Hudson river, which was in 1807. In 1827 he married, his wife who lived until last March, when she died aged near 90. In 1830 he located in Cincinnati where he lived three years and moved to Burlington and remained a citizen of that place till death claimed him. Last summer he predicted that he would die during Christmas, and after a few days illness he peaceably and quietly passed away without a struggle. His religous faith was grand and natural, and he expressed it fully in his last illness. Mr. Thompson was a man without an enemy in the world, and his long life can be regarded by his friends and kindred as one well worth pattering after, all his intercourse with his fellow man being just and upright. Miss Mary, his only child has the sympathy of many friends.

The party at Mr. J. E. Duncan's last Monday night was one of the most enjoyable of the holidays. An elegant supper was enjoyed by the guest, and host and hostes did all they could to add to the pleasure of the occasion.

NEIGHBORHOOD NEWS.

Hebron.

Eggnog got away with some of the boys.

Robert Tanner has been very ill for some time.

Richard Gordon mourns the death of a fine horse.

Thieves raided Elijah Tanner's corn crib the other night.

Henry Williams, a little boy, while wrestling got his arm dislocated.

A large concourse of his friends enjoyed Mike Clore's large Christmas turkey.

John Crigler thinks some one made his residence a clandestine visit the other night.

A large number of young folks enjoyed themselves at John Hick's party the other night.

The weather Monday made some of the farmers feel like getting out their plows for work.

The tree and ladder in the church on Christmas day were beautifully decorated with presents. Joel Clore and Eddy Clayton each delivered an oration which was well received by the very large audience.

So far the young people of the community have had quite a merry Christmas—still we are very quiet.

Mrs. Martha Lassing has been very ill at the residence of her son, L. W. Lassing, but is now improving.

The "K. K. K" a club composed of young ladies, will give a party next Monday evening, which they hope to make very pleasant.

We deeply sympathize with the senior editor and wife, in the loss of their dear little daughter. "Of such is the kingdom of Heaven."

The "Acme Social" gave a ball at the town hall on the evening of the 26th which would have been a perfect success had it not been for disturbance raised by some young men from the vicinity of Florence, who were drunk, and acted accordingly. Officers were present, however, and soon quelled what might have grown into a serious difficulty. And still you men vote against "no license."

Three tramps, one of them a bruin, struck the town late Monday afternoon and took lodging tor the night at the Boone House. Early next morning they struck out for the rural districts to entertain the natives, and inflate their purses.

Hard Upon Halifax.

A traveler from the States photographs the capital of Nova Scotia in the following uncomplimentary style: There are a few long, crooked streets, on either side of which are rows of dingy brick and stone buildings, strangers to paint, now as in the past, and will forever be. The men, as a rule, wear red, bunchy side whiskers, Billycock hats and pepper and salt suits of Scotch or English goods, and in every case their trousers are too short and a big Newfoundland follows them as they go bobbing about from place to place. The women are all afflicted with large feet and wear no bustle or tawdry ornamentation whatever. If a man owes another man a dollar the creditor can seize the debtor at any time and cast him into durance vile, there to moulder among gray vaults until the dollar is paid. Thick fogs hang about the town, and its legends abound with shipwrecks and other maritime romances. Everybody here in their vernacular drops the h, giving you and for hand and 'ill for hill, etc., a barbarous and strange custom. They are very loyal to the Queen, but whether the Queen is a woman or a man many of them can scarcely tell. Very few of them have ever seen England, but they all emulate English manners. The washerwoman charges ten cents a pair for socks, and sends them home to you wet and muddy and blue as indigo. The resources of Halifax are lumber, fish and naval catarrh. The people talk through their noses, all the way up from Jenkins, the fish-monger, to the major-general of the citadel McDonald, and that antique specimen of humau brio-a-brac, his wife."—Exchange.

A Pet Bear.

John R. Hood owns a bear. He had it chained in the yard near the house. It broke the chain and entered the house, nobody being about the premises but Mrs. W. P. Smith. The bear walked into the pantry, emptied two sugar bowls, sampled the catsup and pickles, took the cheese-box down from the shelf and regaled himself with the contents, took the chimneys off the lamps, placed them in a row and knocked them down like ten-pins. Brain then had a picnic of the pies and cake in the cupboard, showing great partiality to sweet things. He emptied the salt in the corner of the room, and then amused himself by pitching the china and delf through the window, and ended his tour and a half quart by emptying a pail of water on the floor and taking a bath. He remained in the house till the boys returned from work. Considerable fun ensued before he was captured, one of the boys getting hit in the eye with an egg thrown by his bear chip.—Guelph Herald.

Cause of Catarrh.

Dr. Cutter, of New York, believes that catarrh and throat diseases are due to weakness, caused by malnutrition from faulty respiration or stomachic food, and that the ulcers, inflammation, etc., will disappear of themselves when the system is strong enough to regain its normal powers of action. He gives an instance, the case of a lady, who had throat disease, who had been living on starch and sugar, and had, therefore, not "force enough from her food to run the concern, so to speak." The moment the nerve centers were well fed by an abundant supply of nutritious food, the moisture returned to the unions membrane. Dr. Cutler thinks that much of the now pronounced incurable catarrh might be cured by improved nutrition.

Ripe and Sweet.

It will not take many years to bring one to the period of life when men, at least the majority of writing and talking men, do nothing but praise. Men, like peaches and pears, grow sweet a little while before they begin to decay. It is a fact that most writers, except sour and unsuccessful ones, get tired of finding fault at about a time when they are beginning to grow old. At 30 we are all trying to cut our names in big letters upon the walls of this tenement of life; twenty years later we have carved it, or dont up our jack-knives. Then we are ready to help others and are less to blame any, because nobody's elbows are in our way.

Some of the girls of the period are parting their hair on one side. They do this because they do not wish to look like the soft young men who part their hair in the middle.

THE NEW YEAR.

The world is full of mystery,
Which no one understands;
What is before our eyes we see,
The work of unseen hands,
But whence, and when and why they wrought,
Escapes the grasp of human thought.

There was a time when we were not,
And there will be again,
When we must cease and be forgot,
With all our joy and pain,
Gone like the wind, or like the snow
That fell a thousand years ago.

We live as if we should not die,
Blindly, but wisely, too,
For if we knew Death always nigh,
What would we say or do,
But fold our hands and close our eyes,
And care no more who lives or dies?

If death to each man in his turn
Is coming soon or late,
Be ours the soldier's unconcern
And his courageous fate;
Better to perish in the strife
Than to preserve the coward's life.

Before my heart's fire pondering long,
As 'twere a bivouac,
I heard last night the solemn song,
Which I have summoned back.
It seems my somber mood to cheer,
And is my greeting to the Year.

New Year, if you were bringing Youth,
As you are bringing Age,
I would not have it back: in sooth,
I have no strength to wage
Lost battles over. Let them be.
Bury your head, O Memory!

You can bring nothing will surprise,
And nothing but dismay.
No tears again in these old eyes,
No darkness in my day.
You might bring light and smiles instead
If you could give me back my dead.

I have beheld your kiss, New Year,
Full fifty times, and none
That was so happy and so dear,
I wept when it was done.
Why should we weep when years depart
And leave their ashes in the heart?

Good-bye, since you are gone, Old Year,
And my past life, good-bye,
I shed no tear upon your bier,
For it is well to die.
New Year, your worst will be my best;
What can an old man want but rest?

—R. H. Stoddard.

MISS DOROTHY'S DAY.

An Entertaining Story For the New Year.

"I reckon baby'll have to be mighty well bundled up, to go that far on muleback, and come home in the dead o' night, Susanna," said one mother to another, as they sat with each a child on her lap before a blazing fire, that crackled and sputtered and threw its light into the farthest corner of the room. The speaker continued without giving her neighbor an opportunity to reply: "You remember the shawl Miss Dorothy gave my Amandy last year because she had learned to read so nicely? Well, I'm going to wrap my baby in it to keep it from takin' cold. I only wish you had something as warm."

The tone was intended to be kindly and the offer a friendly one, but there was an underlying something in the voice, or words, or both, that caused the other to glance quickly up from the child's face, and reply with a certain dignity:

"You are very kind, Samanthy Jones, but I have plenty of clothes to wrap my baby in—thanks to Miss Dorothy's teaching."

"Well, you needn't be huffy about it. I'm sure I meant no harm, and going back to what we were talking about—I must say, I don't see how we ever managed to live before she came among us. I'm allers afeared she'll go as she came, all of a sudden, and no one knows where. There's something mighty mysterious about her, anyway, with her dainty ways, her quiet voice and her snow-white cap. I'd give a good deal to know what that cap covers."

"[illegible] Samanthy! I'm afraid to speak in that free way about her. I've told Simon over and over, the day would come when we should have no Miss Dorothy, riding around with her little mules and cart, teaching us how to bring up our children, and helping us nurse our sick folks. I believe it would break my heart to go back to the old ways of living again, though that's really impossible after all these years' teaching."

"I feel just the same as you do, Susanna, only I never had quite your chance at book larnin', and can't tell my thoughts quite as pert as you do; yet, much as I set store by her, it allers puzzles me to know where she gets all her money. It stands to reason she must use a sight o' it. What with medicine, and books, and presents—and all her fences and building, it must cost her nigh about as much as all the county. If you stop to think o' it, she never learns one o' our ways, but we've learned a sight o' hern. Good evenin', Simon."

"Good evening, neighbor. We never hear 'howdy' any more, do we? Of course you're ready for to-morrow. Give me the child, Susanna," and taking the half sleeping child from the woman's arms, he retired to a corner where the shadow fell, and was soon intent on getting the baby asleep. In the meantime, two or three others came in, mostly near neighbors, and seated themselves by the fire-place to talk over the coming event, whatever it was.

"There's been great doings at her house this week," spoke up Mrs. Fundy, in a shrill voice, conscious that she was uttering something of more than usual importance, "I sent John over a minute this morning to ask for a pattern I wanted, and he said they were all fixed to lits, and a hammering like mad, and outside the door were big boxes that hadn't been opened. We're going to have a big treat to-morrow, or I miss my guess. I'm glad it's full moon, so coming home we'll have plenty o' light. Where'll she put us all? But pshaw! what do I say that for, when I've seen her stow us away every year? She's a wonderful woman, she is."

"We were just saying the same thing when you came," said the one who had been called Samanthe Jones, "and I was wondering where all the money came from for her to spend. You may depend on't there's something back of her coming here that she wouldn't have us know for worlds, and though I think as much of Miss Dorothy as any one, I know that where there's a mystery, there's sure to be something wrong."

"Then it's a pity there is not more wrong going on in the world, if it makes such women as she is, I say;" the voice came from the corner in the shadow and was a man's, "and it what she says about God is true, I don't see why He don't make more folks like her, and not such a no-account lot of women as there are. Just think how we lived here before she came. Hog and hominy, year in and year out, and mighty glad if we got the hog then. Now we have chickens, and eggs, and white bread and potatoes, and sorghum, and our places are all fixed up, our windows have glass in them, and not a one of us that hasn't a horse or mule to go about on. She knows everything worth knowing, and can doctor our cows and pigs as well as our children, and I don't see whose business it is where she gets her money as long as she is nothing but a blessing. All I've got to say is, why on earth ain't there more like her? Perhaps where she came from they're all like her."

"And p'raps there's men there to match 'em. I reckon one's made to suit the t'other," replied Mrs. Jones, in a voice far from amiable.

"Tut, tut! No need of getting into a temper over what [illegible], though I never like to hear folks hint at something wrong about the woman that's done more for us than all the [illegible] that ever lived. What did we use to do Christmas, Fourth O' July, Thanksgiving and New Year's before she came here? You know as well as I do. We just sat around barefooted and ragged, with pipes in our mouths. How did our cabins look then? Not a pane of glass or window curtain, let alone having gardens, and vines, and fancy notions. What did we do then? Blessed, if we didn't walk everywhere. Yet, I've heard more than one that has been helped by her say there was something out of the way with her, cause why? She just lives to do good to everybody, and to-morrow there'll be people going to her house, and eating her good things, who will throw out the same mean hints. Such folks ain't fit to live, let alone being treated well."

"I'm powerful glad, it ain't me you're hitting, Simeon Gravitt, for I do despise a slandering tongue. I guess I'll be goin' now, so as to be ready for an early start in the morning. Come along right early and we'll all go together."

"Ha! ha! ha! I thought she'd start. It takes me to clear out hornets an' rattlesnakes and old women with strings in tongues."

"And you oughter to be ashamed of yourself, for doesn't she tell us we must treat people well in our own houses. Howsomever, I was kinder glad to hear you speak out. We must get things good and ready for morning, as Mrs. Fundy said. I feel as if we should never have another day at Miss Dorothy's."

"That's some more of your nonsense, Susanna. You're always feeling what is going to happen. If I thought it would come true this time, I'd never smile to-morrow once."

"I'm sure I hope not, just as much as you do; but what is going to happen, 'll happen, whether or no, I reckon." After a few more words, the visitors rose to leave, and in twenty minutes fires were covered, and all was quiet in the log house of Simon Gravitt. Perhaps they dreamed of the coming day, perhaps they did not dream at all, but while they sleep we will tell something of the woman and the day, that caused all this excitement.

Dorothea Langley had been delicately nurtured, had been accustomed to every comfort and even elegance of life, yet at the age of thirty-five we find her living among the mountains in one of our border States, apparently as much at home among the simple-hearted country folk, as she had formerly been with the cultured and refined. She wore a small cap of white muslin, that merely hinted at her golden-brown hair, and tied under her chin with snowy strings, like her grandmother's in the old-fashioned portrait at home. This cap would have been a most unbecoming adornment to ninety-nine women out of every hundred, but Miss Dorothy was the one out of the hundred to whom it was an ornament. It gave an added sweetness to the curve of the chin, and softened the brightness of her hazel eyes by its soft edges. Yes, her cap was becoming to her, and though she found this out after having worn it a year or so, it had no effect whatever upon her. She wore it for reasons of her own, entirely apart from the question of beauty or looks.

To have lived thirty-five years, possessed of more than usual attractions, was sufficient in and out of itself to set idle tongues wagging; but to leave society and the great world of fashion, put a Quaker-like cap upon her head, and settle among the wilds of distant mountains, leaving no clue to her whereabouts, keeping up no connection with the old life; surely this was more than a nine day's wonder, and even among the class to whom she had come as an angel from heaven, it was a mystery constantly forcing itself upon their notice.

It was the last day of the year 1881, and the morrow, or, "Miss Dorothy's Day," was in the thought of old and young for many miles. She had been among them seven years. She had come when azaleas and rhododendrons were in full bloom, and the mountain-sides showed neither bowlder or barrenness because of the verdure and bloom that concealed them. She had bought twenty-five acres of wild woodland, had put men with strong muscles at work to clear it, with an eye to final beauty; and here she had seen her log house built. If she was to be anything to these people she must meet them where they were, not on her own level, so the house was of logs like their own, with all the added beauty that taste and refinement could give. She knew enough of human nature to be assured of a welcome not altogether hearty, and her first step must be to win their confidence. It was slow progress she made, but sure. The log house did much for her, for it spoke constantly to the passers, saying, "Here dwells a woman without nonsense and airs," but with the logs all similarity ended.

Everything within and around it was as aesthetic as if belonging to a poet's home, and all its beauty was planned with a single intent, viz: that they should see, admire and imitate. That this had not been in vain, we can glean from Simon Gravitt's words; that Miss Dorothea herself was not satisfied was just as true. The worker never sees the full effect of his work, and Miss Dorothy at times gave way to a feeling of discouragement that would have astonished the people who saw farther than she, and felt more deeply than she dreamed.

Perhaps the greatest good she had done them had been just where she would have placed it least of all. This was in teaching them to set apart certain days of the year for holidays, whereon they must dress in their best and meet together for social enjoyment.

She began with Christmas, by inviting them to meet in the school-house, where she had prepared a Christmas tree and some trifling gift for each. Next year she added the Fourth of July; then Thanksgiving, and followed it the same year by a cordial invitation to her own home for New Year's Day, where she entertained them from morning till night, gave them a bountiful repast, and sent them home as happy as mortals could be. From that time the beginning of every year found them gathered together at her house, and, far and near, the day had come to be known as "Miss Dorothy's Day."

The mountains where all this life went on, were a range running from northeast to southwest, through one of our Southern States, that through the war formed a border land between North and South. They were bold, and high at their sides, and hid beneath their surface mines of iron and coal, sufficient for countless generations of wasteful humans. On their tops, broad table-lands stretched for miles, as level as the rolling prairies of the West, and rich with lumber for the needs of the future. Capitalists passing over those mountains made a note of all these possibilities, where some day they might invest surplus capital; but to the dwellers of the region, no thought of marketable values ever came. To them it was a place where nature joined hands with human nature to help it to thrive without effort, and this was the reason that no homes, worthy the name, could be found there, when Dorothy Langley first came among them. Occasionally a straggling visitor, desirous of discovering some new region, would stop at the foot of the mountain, hire a ricketty wagon and a driver to take him to the wonderful table-lands of which he had heard rumors. He was glad to return in a short time, and would describe it as "semi-barbarous, inhabited by shiftless ne'er-do-weels."

After Miss Dorothy's house was built, gradually the neighborhood about her changed its aspects. Over the log houses, vines were trained—roses and honeysuckles and trumpet-creepers and passion-flowers in glorious profusion. At the windows curtains were seen, and within rag-carpets, and shelves ornamented with mosses, met the eye.

There was old grandmother who still smoked her pipe in the chimney-corner, but even she never ventured on the front porch with it, save in the shadows of the twilight; yet the time had been, and not long since, that young women as well as old, had smoked regularly and constantly. They had not given up the habit because of anything Miss Dorothy had said, but under her influence the evil had been relegated to the dark corner, and thrift had taken the place of untidiness.

She was seven years younger than than now, just twenty-eight years old—with a form made up of pretty curves and plumpness, and cheeks that still had the pink of apple-blossoms on them. Since that time she had grown a shade paler, but her face had changed but little otherwise. The work of building and beautifying had gone steadily on, until at the end of seven years there seemed but little else to be done. Trees, natives on the mountain, had been set out in clumps through her ground, with an eye to the effect to be produced by spring flowers and autumn colorings. A school-house nestled among the deep-green cedars, and had for a background the scarlet sourwoods. Poultry houses and yards were equally aesthetic, and vineyards and orchards lay beyond. All this sounds tame, but the reality was charming, and Arcadia would have been a most appropriate name for Miss Dorothy's home. She called it, however, by the less attractive one of Nemesis. Why—none knew. They did not even know the meaning of the name.

When the arrangement's for the morrow's festivities were at length finished on this last day of the year 1881, and the blazing fire of logs attracted her to rest and meditate, Miss Dorothy, partly from fatigue, partly from the reaction of intense nervous strain, seated herself in front of the fire, and, burying her face in her hands, gave way to a spell of the blues. She would have been more than human could she have lived unmoved through the season that carried her back, more than any other, to friends and loved ones, and Miss Dorothy was thoroughly human.

Pose, her faithful dog, lying at her feet, grew uneasy at her attitude, and licked her hand beseechingly.

"Yes, Pose, I know all you would say to me, old fellow, and your counsel is good," she said at length, patting his black head. "You would tell me how much truer my dumb friends are than those of whom I think; and you are right. My mules, my calves and you, are all the society I wish, and I am really content. If you can't talk the world's language, you at least do not chatter meaningless nonsense, and say what you do not mean; and your eyes tell me of your love a thousand times a day, and, best of all, you prove it by your actions. I would not give you for all the friends of fashion I ever knew. Now for some music."

Pose jumped to his feet at the words, for she had talked to him so much that he understood every word, and began jumping about with evident delight that he had broken her mood. When she again seated herself, guitar in hand, he stationed himself at her side, with all his dog's senses alert to the strain she would first produce. He had learned to know her moods by the tunes she chose. Pose was as much a character as his mistress. He had followed her home from Board-Hollow one day when a mere puppy, and had forever after refused to leave her. She had paid for him since, and named him Purpose, because the old man who owned him said he always acted with a purpose, and Purpose had gradually been changed into Pose. He could do everything but talk and read. He could count correctly, and bring home cattle or sheep without missing one. In his own way he could sing and dance, and understood the English language perfectly. He was the only dog on the mountains of his kind, and the people said, "Like mistress, like dog—he is just suited to her." He never left his mistress, except when her interests demanded it, but only in the evening could they fully enjoy each other's society.

His mistress began to sing "Robin Adair." Had it been "I Can Not Sing the Old Songs," Pose would have been wretched, but "Robin Adair" meant content and cheer, and he was a happy dog.

"You are a polite fellow, Pose. Few humans could listen to the same old songs year after year with such apparent delight. What should I do without you, dear?"—here she pulled his long silky ears out over her hand—"but the time must come that we must part, and then who'll take the missing place? The fact is, we're growing old, my dog. You do not see my gray hairs, but I counted five to-day, and soon my head will need no cap to change my appearance, while you are growing staid and quiet, and life will soon be over for us both. Only yesterday the cow rang her bell twice before you heard her, and your naps are growing longer and more frequent; but we'll stand by each other till the last, and then—what then? Shall I find you over there, and have you always? Who knows?"

Here Pose began wagging his tail vigorously with heavy thumps upon the floor, to show his hearty response to her sentiment, while she continued:

"Now we'll have the last dance of old '81 together, just to show we are not so very old. Who knows what '82 will bring us?"

She took him by the hand, his two paws in her two hands, and, humming a little air, they moved round and round the room together, throwing shadows on the wall opposite the fire-place.

Out in the cold, frosty air, just as the moon was rising, a black figure moved cautiously to the window of her sitting-room, hid itself behind a bush, and, after a moment, raised itself on tip-toe and looked in. It was just when mistress and dog were at the height of their frolic. The figure did not move, and a voice muttered something about "abomination of a cap," and "forgetting"—then moved slowly off toward the cedars. An hour later, when Miss Dorothy's fire had burned low, and she was sleeping the sleep of the just, the same figure reappeared in the moonlight, and could have been seen prowling around the place so silently that Pose did not awaken. Was it strange that in her dreams that night old familiar faces became blended with burglars, and when she awoke and remembered her whereabouts, she should smile and sigh and go to sleep again?

. . . .

Old men and women, little children and babies, young men and maidens, all met together at Miss Dorothy's that memorable morning of the New Year, 1882. Horses, mules, and even donkeys and oxen, had been employed to carry the people to their destination. Mrs. Fundy and two or three neighbors had formed themselves, as first comers, into a committee of reception, and as each new arrival rode up, they went out to the "upper-block," as the horse-block was called, and in cordial accents greeted the guest with the old-time phrases: "Howdy! Light an' hitch." Before noon the house was full to overflowing, the yard was alive with many men and children, and the odors of savory dishes were wafted far out upon the air, as a hint of the feast preparing.

Such a dinner as it was! However Dinah and her mistress managed to cook so much was the mystery; and, though it was necessary to set the tables in both large rooms, it took three different sets before all were helped. At the first were the married people, then came the younger ones, and last of all, the children. Miss Dorothy would have liked to have reversed matters, but she saw the eager faces of the hungry men and women, and had not the heart to disappoint them; so she sent out apples and cookies to the children, and told Dinah to hurry the dinner. There had never been so many before to celebrate her day, and she was glad to see among her guests some who had never before accepted her invitation. They were a people of bitter and lasting prejudices, and at first a few families had taken offense at what they called "her airs," and had been for a long time unapproachable. During the past year the ice had been broken by serious illnesses where she had nursed patiently and lovingly, furnishing, in many instances, food and medicine.

While the parents ate their dinner, the children played blind-man's buff in the barn. At four o'clock the wild turkeys and chicken pies, the vegetables, sauces and puddings had been demolished, and visiting began in earnest. In and out among this uneducated throng moved their hostess, Miss Langley, quiet but cheery; loving, saying but little. She had a word for all, some bit of inquiry after an ailment or piece of work, or suggestion that would help in some new endeavor. They never tired of watching her, this quiet, peaceful but powerful woman, of whom they knew so little, and on this day, more than ever before, there seemed a fascination about her that charmed them. The evening revealed the cause of all the pounding and hammering, for Miss Dorothy treated them to a trip to New York with the aid of a magic lantern. She showed them the miseries of lower life there, its want and poverty and crime. She described the difference between life in a tenement house and on the heights of the mountains; in one place all the earth one could hope to own was their last resting-place, while on the other vast acres could be held by the poorest. Then she told them of high life in the city—its hollowness and hard-heartedness, and contrasted this with their own life. All this made them feel proud and glad to be living simple, honest lives apart from these rushing, seething centers of civilization, and when they broke up and started on their different roads homeward, the full moon never shone down on a happier group of mortals; yet not one, except their hostess, had ever seen a railroad, or traveled farther than a mule could carry them.

"It is all over, Pose, and I am glad," sighed out Miss Dorothea, as she closed the door after the last guest. "I'll rest a while, Dinah, while you straighten up."

She drew her own easy-chair before the dark fire place, and proceeded to rake the embers together and coax them into a blaze. A knock startled her. At this hour it must mean sudden and severe sickness. She arose and opened the door to find a stranger standing there. He was unlike those who lived near her, and his dress bespoke city-life.

"Miss Langley, I believe?"

His tones were musical, and startled Miss Dorothy by a suggestion of a voice she had once known. She replied, however, quietly—

"That is the name I am known by"—

"But not your real name?"

She was offended at this, and would have closed door, had he not stepped inside the threshold, glancing at the fire that was now blazing.

"You seem warm and comfortable; could I rest a few moments? I'll not detain you long, for it is getting late."

"It is already late, and I am very weary, but you can sit a moment. Dinah, bring forward a chair."

Dinah did as she was bid, but lingered near her mistress. She knew from her voice that she was annoyed at this unusual call.

The stranger was tall, and what could be seen of his face was handsome, but a heavy growth of hair covered all but his bronzed cheek-bones and brilliant eyes. His forehead was covered by heavy curls. He seated himself with the air of one quite at home, and looked around the room.

"It is very like you," he said.

She started. Who was this that dared trouble her in her retreat? She only said:

"What do you know of me, sir?"

"More than any one in the world, Dolly?"

The tones were tender now, or she had fainted.

"Can it be you bring me tidings of the lost? Your voice is strangely like his."

Again he said "Dolly," but this time it was uttered in tones so unspeakably loving, that she could only cover her face with her hands and murmur:

"How dared you to open a tomb so long time closed, Arthur Preston? I have buried you and all the past in a deep grave, and am happy in my new life."

"Because I love you, Dolly. Because I have searched the world over for you. Because I can not live without you. Why did you ever flee into this wilderness and give me no token?"

"Why did you break your vow to me and marry a woman at the Pacific?"

"Why! Because I never did. There has been some great mistake, Dolly. There was a man in the mines whose name was Preston; it was he that married. I had a long, terrible fever; when I came to myself, I received no letters from you. I said to myself: 'She is true as steel,' and went farther into the mountains. At the end of six months I went again to the coast. In all that time I had heard nothing from you. I could not leave then, for I wanted money to make you happy. I struck luck, and became a rich man. Then I came back, to find you had fled into some unknown region—none knew whither. The only trace I could find was through your banker, and I followed the clew that led me here. Last night I watched you frolic with your dog. 'She does not care, she has forgotten me,' I said, and I cursed the cap that covered your pretty brown hair. To-day I saw you the center of all the country people in the county, but I saw, too, that your face was sad. I knew then that you, too, were wretched, and I could not wait till morning to tell you I was near."

She had been more than woman to have listened to his pleadings unmoved; and when at length they separated, it was to give her a night of unrest, with wide-open eyes, pondering the question of duty or happiness. He settled it for her next morning.

"You are mine, Dolly—mine alone. After all these years of waiting, to whom else do you belong; but this mountain life that you have learned to love, I shall live also and every year I promise you we shall come back to Nemesis to celebrate the beginning of the years as 'Miss Dorothy's Day.'"

When she had gone, and a wall of lamentation went up from the mountain over their loss, Simon Gravitt said to his wife:

"Never tell me what's going to happen again, Susanna, for you don't know."

"Howsomever, I was right after all, for the times will never be the same again, and we shall never have another genuine 'Miss Dorothy's Day. More's the pity.—Mrs. Margaret B. Peake, in Chicago Interior.

EMBROIDERED BONNETS.

Something New in Headgear, Which Is Said to Be the Feature of the Season.

The embroidered bonnet is a great feature of the season, particularly embroidery upon cloth. The novelty, in fact, is a cloth or felt crown, the latter usually plain, the former embroidered with flies, stars, dots, clover leaves, tiny butterflies, or other small and distinctive figures, which can be executed in silks of varied shadings or iridescent beads. The front is usually composed of woolen lace massed toward the front, plain at the sides, and embroidered with beads or gold thread to harmonize with the general tone. Birds, wings, spotted breasts and velvet bows form the trimming, with the addition of the almost universal pin, enlarged or at least elongated.

A dressy bonnet, for wear with combinations of ecru and brown, consists of seal-brown velvet with full crown, embroidered with bugs in brown and shaded amber. These beads form a solid edge of nearly an inch in depth to the brim, and the colors in them are repeated in the group of lovely feathers which curl over the front. There is a good deal of distinction as well as difference in the shape of the leading hats and bonnets this season. The high, full crowns have high narrow brims, which not only ascend to a point, but are sometimes split, and form two points, the lace, feathers or flowers being brought down between and made to fill or partly fill the space which forms a sort of nest. The capotes stoutly hold their own, and are preferred by ladies of quiet tastes who declare they will not be mounted like jackdaws. But even the capotes are dotted and embroidered, or the velvet forms a double series of which meet and form a hollow plait in the center, while as much trimming as possible is massed on the front. Bonnets, the simplest in form, are often the most striking in color, and red velvet, red plush and red leather (perforated, embroidered and made over satin) are among those seen in the importing houses. The red is not the coarse or flaming shade, but a soft color even when it is full, and usually it approaches garnet or the more fashionable plum shades. Gold is always associated with these bonnets in the form of gold tinsel ribbon, beads, or fine, flat braid, doubled at the edge. They are worn as carriage bonnets, with red or brocaded wraps into which red enters, and not for receptions, though they are often seen at theatres.

Hats are uniformly high-crowned and narrow brimmed. The trimming, flat bands of velvet or canvass ribbon, with birds and wings upon the front, mounted so as to accentuate the height of the crown. Furred hats and bonnets are not excluded by any means from the season's resources. In cold climates they are a necessity, and always take the form of a poke, which can be tied comfortably down under the chin, and is so exactly what is needed that no substitute can be found.—Demorest's Magazine.

WEATHER PROGNOSTICS.

Some of the Signs Upon Which Careful Observers May Rely.

Few intelligent persons can have any sympathy with the so-called prophets who oracularly announce phenomena, giving dates, occasionally making lucky hits, but as often firing their random shots altogether wide of the mark. That there is, however, something in weather philosophy, intelligent persons will be quite ready to concede, and they will be in accord with the views of the writer when he recommends the observation of natural phenomena, which has been long practiced. He says:

If one could read the signs, each day foretells the next; to-day is the progenitor of to-morrow. When the atmosphere is telescopic and distant objects stand out unusually clear and distinct, a storm is near. We are on the crest of the wave, and the depression follows quick. It sometimes happens that clouds are not so indicative of a storm as their total absence. In this state of the atmosphere the stars are unusually numerous and bright at night, which is also a bad omen. It appears that the transparency of the air is prodigiously increased when a certain quantity of water is uniformly diffused through it. Mountaineers predict a change of weather when, the air being calm, the Alps covered with perpetual snow, seem on a sudden to be nearer the observer, and their outlines are marked with great distinctness on the azure sky. This same condition of the atmosphere renders distant sounds more audible.

There is one redness of the east in the morning that means storm; another that indicates wind. The first is broad, deep and angry; the clouds look like an immense bed of burning coals; the second is soft and more vapory. At the point where the sun is going to rise, and a few minutes in advance of his coming there rises straight upward a rosy column, like a shaft of dyed vapor, blending with and yet partly separated from the clouds, and the base of which presently comes to glow like the sun himself. The day that follows is pretty sure to be windy.

It is uncertain to what extent birds and animals can foretell the weather. When swallows are seen hawking very high, it is a good indication, because the insects upon which they feed venture up there only in the most auspicious weather.

People live in the country all their lives without making one accurate observation about nature. The good observer of nature holds his eye long and firmly to the point, and finally gets the facts, not only because he has the patience, but because his eye is sharp and his inference swift. The are many assertions, the result of hasty and incomplete observation, such as, for instance, that the way the milky way points at night indicates the direction of the wind the next day; also that every new moon indicates either a dry or a wet month. There are many other stories about the moon too numerous to mention. Again, when a farmer kills his hogs in the fall, if the pork be very hard and solid he predicts a severe winter; if soft, the opposite, overlooking the fact that the kind of food and the temperature of the fall make the pork hard or soft. Numerous other instances could be cited to prove that the would-be shrewd farmer does not interpret nature in the right way, and that his conclusions, being hasty and incomplete, are wrong; and until he studies nature understandingly, using a little common sense, so long will he be more or less under the ban or superstition and ignorance.—Southern Planter.

HOME AND FARM.

—If a brood-sow gets too much feed by accident or lack of care, she may be speedily relieved by giving her a quart of charcoal. It will tone up the stomach of a hog quicker than anything else.—Troy Times.

—Breakfast Puffs: Graham puffs for breakfast are richer and a great deal nicer than the plain gem; take one pint of sweet milk, one pint of graham flour, half a teaspoonful of salt, and one egg; beat the egg, and then add the milk, and then the flour gradually, beat it very briskly for four or five minutes, then pour into buttered gem pans; bake in a hot oven.—Boston Globe.

—There are on every farm some ponds in which valuable fertilizing sediment is found as they become dry. This sediment is very stimulating to grass if spread over the surface thinly early in the season, so that the rain will dissolve its valuable properties and carry them to the grass roots. On plowed land, unless applied in the fall, this sediment does not give as good results. —Albany Journal.

—A Canadian farmer advises the planting of maple-sugar orchards on hillsides. He considers it a matter of considerable profit. He would not plant maple saplings dug from the forest, but would raise seedlings. After the fall rains small maple seedlings may be found in any maple grove, and they may be pulled up by the fingers. Hundreds can be collected in an hour where they are abundant.

—To decide whether eggs are fertile or not hold them between the thumb and forefinger with one end toward the thumb and finger in a horizontal position, with a strong light in front of you. The unfertilized egg will have a clear appearance, both upper and lower sides being the same. The fertilized egg will have a clear appearance at the lower side, while the upper side will exhibit a dark or cloudy appearance.—Prairie Farmer.

—Cocoanut Cake: Two eggs, one cup of white sugar, half a cup of sweet milk, quarter of a cup of butter, one and a half cups of flour, one and a half teaspoonfuls of baking powder. Bake in a moderate oven in pans one inch deep. To prepare the desiccated cocoanut, beat the whites of two eggs to a stiff froth; add one cup of pulverized sugar and the cocoanut, after soaking it in boiling milk. Spread the mixture between the layers of cake and over the top.—The Household.

—Apple Sago Pudding: Pare and core a half dozen sour, juicy apples, and arrange them in a buttered pudding dish; fill up the hollow of each apple with sugar, and put a bit of butter on top. Cover the dish closely and set in oven to bake till the apples are thoroughly done. Meanwhile boil in a double kettle a scant cup of sago with two cups of water and a little salt. When done—which may be seen by the transparent, jelly-like look of the sago and by the taste—beat in a lump of butter and sugar to taste, and flavoring if desired. Pour the sago over the cooked apples in the pudding dish and set back in the oven to brown on the top. —Exchange.

GOOD FOOD FOR HENS.

Corn, Skim-Milk and Plenty of Good Ventilation Will Make Healthy Fowls.

We have frequent warnings against the perils of feeding hens too much Indian corn, from people who affect poultry wisdom, and write for the agricultural papers. Where one hen suffers from excess of corn, we venture to say, ten suffer from too little. Too little feed is the besetting sin of the rural districts. We live there and happen to know; people grumble because they get only six or seven dozen eggs a year, change breeds often, make crosses, and thus their yards swarm with all sorts of barnyard mongrels, as a poor substitute for full rations. Nothing but feed in the hopper will make hens grind out the eggs. If corn was dangerous, or narrow quarters, for thirty light Bramah hens, we should have found it out this summer. Early in May, after the garden stuff began to come up, we shut up the hens in an old building about fifteen feet square, without floor, and with sides and roof of unscrupulous ventilation. It is a legacy of past generations, and had worn itself out as a carriage house many years ago. It is a standing witness that ventilation is good for fowls. The rations have been corn, given three times a day, kept in a box, generally about six quarts a day, a little more added when the box was found empty, broken clam shells kept in another box constantly on hand—a part of the skim-milk and buttermilk from one cow, a pail of water from the pump every morning, and a run of an hour before sunset upon the lawn, where there was an abundant supply of grass. Two applications of kerosene, from the lamp filler, to the perches, have kept the fowls from free lice, and the health of the flock has been remarkably good. The egg production has been abundant, and if there has been any danger in a constant supply of corn, the hens have not found it out. The eggs have been well fertilized, and the chickens strong and healthy. The theory of feeding has been that we get the most profit from fowls when we give them all they can eat, and a sufficient variety of animal and vegetable food. Milk has been the supply of the former, and corn of the latter. We have come to the conclusion that there is a call for reform in poultry keeping. Too much liberty and low feed is bad for hens.—American Agriculturist.

"Scrod."

"Scrod" is a small, fresh codfish, as served by the choice cooks of Boston. The fish is thoroughly cleaned, trimmed close, split through the back, and salted sufficient to season. If for breakfast, it lies over night, when it is ready for broiling. The outside of the fish, the skin, that is—can be browned and even burned, quickly, but the flesh side, so to speak, unless rolled in meal or flour, can not be browned without overcooking and spoiling the fish. Browning the "scrod" should never be attempted. Mackerel, blue fish, shad, salmon and other fish—of a different make-up as regards nitrogen, probably, will brown reasonably quick over the coals, but the meat of a young cod is very susceptible to heat and changes from raw as nearly or quite as quick as the white of an egg. It tastes like that, also, when nicely and not too much done. Delicacy in flavor and color are the Boston ideas in serving "scrod." No matter how soon from the hook the cod is dressed, salted and eaten, but people who have once tasted "scrod" at the best places in Boston are glad to have the clean and seasoned fish packed in ice in cool weather and forwarded long distances into the country to them—rather than go without it. —Troy (N. Y.) Times.

—The Wintun Indians of the Sacramento Valley, according to Major Powell, believe in three worlds, and that each has its peculiar class of inhabitants. The sky is smoke, while to the majority of the Indians it is ice, and a few think it quartz crystal. Mountains were made by the burrowing of the mole god. Light and darkness are maiden goddesses. Rocks and other inanimate things were once living, and some rocks now live and speak, this being the Wintun explanation of echoes. Whirlwinds are little spirits seeking water to drink. Diseases are caused by mythical animals.

IT WAS ABOUT TIME.

Engaging Manner in Which a Young Lady Made a Treaty.

The fire in the grate burned cheerily and there was an air of comfort about the room which enwrapt young Mr. Algernon Fitzjoy and made him loath to brave the winter storm which was raging outside. The little French clock on the mantel-piece was ticking away merrily, and its hands had just passed the witching hour.

"Miss Adelaide," said he, throwing his most winsome expression into his countenance, "isn't it about time—about time—"

"Yes, Algernon, I don't know but it is. Ma will be very cross, I'm afraid."

"Oh, it isn't that. Isn't it about time that there was a reciprocity, a sort of—"

"A treaty of reciprocity, you mean? Oh, well. Good night."

There was a sharp sort of noise in the room as if the fire had burst out in a new crackling glee, and the "convention" was ratified.—Hartford Post.

How He Conciliated Her.

A conductor on the Boston and Providence Road tells the story on a young lady of this town who entered the noon train for Boston the other day. She seated herself opposite a gentleman, who, from the first, with one eye at least, seemed to be staring fixedly at her. She became indignant at length, and inquired: "Why do you look at me so, sir?" He said he was not aware of having done so; she insisted. "I beg your pardon, madam, but it's this eye, is it not?" lifting his finger to his left optic. "Yes, sir; it's that eye." "Well, madam, that eye won't do you any harm; it's a glass eye, madam, only a glass eye. I hope you will excuse it. But, upon my soul, I'm not surprised that even a glass eye should feel interested in so pretty a woman." The explanation and compliment combined to put the lady into a good humor.—Mansfield News.

Flour From Peanuts.

The cultivation of the peanut has been so much extended during the past few years that the question of how best to dispose of the crops is now commanding considerable attention. It is reported that the last season's crop in Virginia this year will amount to more than two millions of bushels, and that of Tennessee to a quarter of a million of bushels, while several other States produce more than a hundred thousand bushels each. That ground or pounded peanuts can be utilized for making a rather coarse but rich pastry has long been known in the South, and many a family has utilized the peanut in this way in times past; but recently an improvement upon the old process of manufacture has been introduced in Virginia, and well-made peanut flour is becoming popular. It is said that this flour can be made into very palatable biscuits, which are at the same time nutritious.—N. Y. Sun.

The Brain a Scrap-Book.

What is the brain but a scrap-book? If, when we are asleep some one could peep in there, what would he find? Lines from favorite poets, stray bits of tunes and snatches from songs, melodies from operas, sentences from books, strange meaningless dates, recollections of childhood, vague and gradually growing faint, moments of perfect happiness, hours of despair and misery. The first kiss of childhood lovers, the first parting of bosom friends, the word of praise or the word of blame of a fond mother, pictures of men and women, hopes and dreams that came to nothing, unrequited kindness, gratitude for favors, quarrels and reconciliations, old jokes, and through them all the thread of one deep and enduring passion for some one man or woman that may have been a misery or a delight.—San Francisco Chronicle.

—The other day was printed the calculation of the London Echo in regard to the number of grains of corn that would be on a chessboard if one grain were placed on the first square, two grains on the second, four on the third, and so on. The Echo said that the corn on the squares would fill 1,884,875 barns each holding 1,000,000 bushels, allowing 100,000 grains to each bushel. A clever Brooklyn correspondent who has figured it out says that the English paper is away off, and gives the following as the true figures: There would be 184,467,440,737,095 bushels of corn on the squares, which under the conditions named would fill 184,467,440 barns.—Brooklyn Eagle.

—Ex-Mayor Abbott, of Manchester, N. H., is perfecting a machine which bids fair to revolutionize cotton spinning. He is eighty-six years old and worked on this machine twenty years. The contrivance is still crude, but is working well, turning out No. 28 thread. It does away with all speeders and a class of laborers difficult to get and commanding high wages. A mill of 80,000 spindles will save $50,000 on the plant.—Boston Herald.

—Quinine pills (one grain each) to the number of nearly five hundred can, it is stated, be made out of an ounce of that drug, which has been selling recently at eighty-eight cents per ounce.—Chicago Journal.

The Orthodox Oyster Supper.

Mrs. Pewholder was holding a conference with Miss Simple relative to having a supper at their church, for the usual purposes and objects made and provided for such occasions.

"You think a supper will be better than anything else?" asked Miss S.

"Oh, yes," replied the elder lady.

"What kind of a supper would you suggest?"

"An oyster supper, of course."

"But, my dear Mrs. Pewholder, you can't have an oyster supper."

"Why not, pray?"

"Because there isn't an oyster to be found in the whole town."

"We will have it, all the same."

"But how can you have an oyster supper without oysters?"

"Miss Simple," replied Mrs. P. with severity, "this is no time for explanation; you have evidently not been a member of the church very long, and I should say you never had any experience at all on a church supper committee."—Merchant Traveler.

"I do not like thee, Dr. Fell,
The reason why, I can not tell."

It has often been wondered at, the bad odor this oft-quoted doctor was in. 'Twas probably because he, being one of the old-school doctors, made up pills as large as bullets, which nothing but an ostrich could bolt without nausea. Hence the dislike. Dr. R. V. Pierce's "Pleasant Purgative Pellets" are sugar-coated and no larger than bird-shot, and are quick to do their work. For all derangements of the liver, bowels and stomach they are specific.

FRENCH Grape Brandy, distilled Extract of Water Pepper or Smart-Weed, Jamaica Ginger and Camphor Water, as combined in Dr. Pierce's Compound Extract of Smart-Weed, is the best possible remedy for colic, cholera morbus, diarrhœa, dysentery or bloody-flux; also, to break up colds, fevers, and inflammatory attacks. 50 cts. Keep it on hand. Good for man or beast.

CATARRH

HAY-FEVER

What is Catarrh? It is a disease of the mucus membrane, generally originating in the nasal passages and maintaining its stronghold in the head. From this point it sends forth a poisonous virus along the membranous linings and through the digestive organs, corrupting the blood and producing other troublesome and dangerous symptoms.

Cream Balm is a remedy based upon a correct diagnosis of this disease and can be depended upon. 50 cts. at druggists; 60 cts. by mail registered. Sample bottle by mail 10 cts. ELY BROS., Druggists, Owego, N. Y.

CONSUMPTION.

I have a positive remedy for the above disease; by its use thousands of cases of the worst kind and of long standing have been cured. Indeed, so strong is my faith in its efficacy, that I will send TWO BOTTLES FREE, together with a VALUABLE TREATISE on this disease to any sufferer. Give express and P. O. address.

100,000 ROYAL PRESENTS!! AND A Long Loan at 4 Per Cent.

THE publisher of the ILLINOIS AGRICULTURIST desires to secure 100,000 more subscribers. For 50 cents we will mail you our paper 6 months on trial, and immediately send you a numbered Receipt, which will entitle the holder to one of the following presents. Its circulation is now 55,000. Only 45,000 more needed before the Distribution takes place, March 15, 1885. All these presents will be given to these new 100,000 subscribers.

PARTIAL LIST OF PRESENTS TO BE GIVEN AWAY: 10 Cash presents of $1,000 each; 10 U. S. Bonds, $500 each; 10 U. S. Greenbacks, $100 each; 100 U. S. Greenbacks, $10 each; 1,000 cash Presents of $1 each; 1 Grand Square Piano; 1 Grand Cabinet Organ; 100 Ladies' Gold Watches, $25 each; 100 Silver Hunting-Case Watches, $20 each; 100 Stem-Winding Nickel-Case Watches, $5 each; 50 Ladies' Chatelaine Watches, $10 each; 50 Boys' Silver Watches, $15 each; 200 Waterbury Watches, $3.50 each; 50 Ladies' Gold Neck Chains, $15 each; 50 Gents' Gold Chains, $25 each; 25 Ladies' Gold Bracelets, $15 each; 10 Silver Dinner Services, $100 each; 10 Silver Tea Sets, $60 each; 10 Sets Parlor Furniture, $100 each; 500 Solid Gold Rings, $2 each; 500 Sets Solid Silver Teaspoons, $6 to set; 5 Bicycles, $90 each; 1 matched pair Trotting Horses, $1,000; 500 pairs Ladies' Roller Skates; 500 pairs Boys' Roller Skates; and hundreds of other useful and valuable presents, which we can not enumerate here. All the above presents will be awarded in a fair and impartial manner. Presents will be sent to any part of the United States or Canada. Every person sending us 50 cents for a 6 months' trial subscription to our paper is also privileged to apply for a loan, to be made out of advertising profits, the amount borrowed being permitted to remain unpaid as long as the borrower remains a subscriber and keeps the interest paid.

With 100,000 circulation (which will probably be doubled) our profits will approximate as follows: RECEIPTS:—100,000 yearly subscribers, $100,000; 1,000 inches advertising, $1 per line, $14 per inch, 12 issues, $168,000; total, $268,000. EXPENSES:—For paper and press work, 100,000 copies, 12 issues, $30,000; editorial work, office, repairs, etc., $20,000; 100,000 Presents, $40,000; total, $110,000; leaving a net profit of $158,000. For this enormous profit for sale of advertising space the ILLINOIS AGRICULTURIST depends on its 100,000 subscribers, for advertisers pay for space in proportion to circulation. With but 25,000 circulation the profits would be but a tenth of the amount. Therefore as subscribers are doing us a favor when they send us their names, we desire to return favor for favor. Any subscriber who desires to borrow from $100 to $500 at 4 per cent., the principal to stand if desired, as long as the borrower remains a subscriber, should so state when he sends us 50 cents for a 6 months' trial subscription to our paper.

CONDITIONS: Loans made pro rata, not less than $100 nor more than $500. First year's interest at 4 per cent. to be deducted from amount loaned. Your individual note is all the security asked, provided you will send the names of several of your neighbors to whom we can refer—not as to the amount of property you are worth but as to your good character. Every subscriber must positively agree to show the paper and present to his friends and neighbors. When a loan is made, the adjoining form of note will be sent with the money to the subscriber's nearest bank or express office, and no note need be signed until the money is paid over. Send the names of several references, and immediate inquiry will be made. If no loan is desired, no references need be sent.

One year after date, for value received, I promise to pay to the order of the publisher of Illinois Agriculturist the sum of ...... dollars, with interest at 4 per cent. per annum after maturity. It is understood and agreed that no part of the principal of this note will be demanded or become payable (except at my pleasure), as long as I remain a paid-up subscriber to the above named paper.

900 GOLD WATCHES FREE! WHO WILL SEND THE QUICKEST!

In making up the above list of presents, we decided to reserve $9,000 to be divided equally among the first 900 subscribers received. If you send 50 cents you will be entitled to one receipt good for one present, and if your letter is among the first 900 received you will also be entitled to a beautiful gold watch. The watch is one third larger than the picture. We will send a printed list of the awards, free, and all presents will be forwarded to holders of receipts as they may direct. A list of watch winners will be published in our paper. The 50 cents you send us is the regular price for 6 months, therefore you pay nothing for the present. Subscribe at once. Don't wait a day. We will send you the paper one year and 3 numbered receipts good for 3 presents, if you send us $1. Get five friends to join you, and send $2.50, and we will send the paper 6 months and 1 numbered receipt for each of your subscribers and 1 extra for your trouble. No postponement. Send 20 subscribers with $5 and we will send you 12 subscriptions and 19 receipts. This offer is good only until March 15, 1885. We have 55,000 subscribers already, and only require 45,000 more to have the desired number. Our old patrons and subscribers, whom we number by thousands, should go to work at once and help us increase our list by this grand and generous offer.

ONLY 50 CENTS Secures our paper 6 months on trial and one receipt good for one present. As to our reliability, we refer to any Bank or Mercantile Agency. Remember these are presents to our subscribers, given to them absolutely free. This is a chance of a lifetime. the true pathway to your future fortune. Every subscriber gets a prize. A fortune may be yours if you will but stretch forth your hand to receive it. It costs only 50 cents to try—is it possible you will let it pass?
